This measure includes significant pension reforms aimed at modernizing retirement security. The law is scheduled to sunset after December 31, 2010. People throughout the First District of Oklahoma and all across America are restricted in planning for their retirement because of an arcane Senate rule that makes the entire tax relief package, including the retirement savings provisions, expire in just 10 years. Retirement plans are based on rules that need to be consistent over a career, not just 10 years. I do not base my future retirement plans on the next 9 years, so I do not expect to legislate and encourage that standard for my constituents and all Americans. The law, as passed last year, gives employees the additional resources to appropriately plan for their retirement. The act contains many significant provisions that will be extremely beneficial to employees.

First of all, we allowed workers to invest more money into their 401(k) and pension plans, as well as IRAs, from $2,000 to $5,000. Secondly, the House modernized pension laws to meet the challenges of an increasingly mobile workforce that is likely to have several jobs during their career. The resolution also allows workers to become vested in their pension plans faster.

In addition, the measure allows workers age 50 and older to make catch-up contributions, a provision that will significantly help women who are more likely to spend more time away from the workforce.

Finally, the bill modernizes pension laws and provides regulatory relief to encourage more small businesses to offer retirement plans.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to adopt this measure.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 3295, HELP AMERICA VOTE ACT OF 2001

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to the bill H.R. 3295 be instructed to take such actions as may be appropriate to ensure that a conference report is filed on the bill prior to October 1, 2002.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Pursuant to clause 7 of rule XXII, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON).

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This motion instructs the conferees on H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act, to complete their work and file a conference report prior to October 1, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, less than a week ago I joined a number of Members at this podium and recounted how allegations of voter intimidation, inaccurate voter registration lists, arbitrary ballot counting standards, and antiquated machinery deprived so many citizens of their right to vote and have their vote counted during the 2000 election.

Recent primary elections in Florida and elsewhere have only confirmed that the problems of 2000 will not go away until we pass and enact meaningful election reform legislation reform standards, and we must also provide State and local authorities with resources to improve their election systems from top to bottom.

It is really very simple, and so I ask how many times do we have to come to this podium and plead for reform.

I am here to tell my colleagues that we will come before them I guess as many times as it takes. This is a number one priority for the Congressional Black Caucus because we believe so strongly in democracy, and this is the crux of democracy. There is no democracy when we shut out the first amendment right and not allow people to cast their votes that are eligible and have those votes counted.

So we cannot be silenced until this body answers the call for election reform. We in Congress have within our power, indeed almost within our very grasp, legislation that will take giant strides to remedy the disenfranchisement of the last election. It has not been an easy fight to get where we are today, but we are just inches away from the comprehensive legislation that will secure the constitutional right to vote for millions of Americans. We must pass this bill, and we must send it to the President for his signature before another day passes.

I am proud to say that in the fight for election reform we have had many foot soldiers. I want to thank the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), who has been battling every day since the 2000 elections to extend these important protections to all of our Nation's voters. His leadership is getting us to where we are today on this legislation. It has been limitless, and I thank him for everything he has done.

In that same spirit, I must also thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) for his hard work in helping us bridge the differences between the two bills. Indeed, I believe that all members of the conference committee deserve our gratitude for their work on this challenging task.

We also have had the terrific support from our colleagues from the other Chamber, and I would like to especially commend the efforts of Senator CHRISTOPHER DODD, who has worked alongside the caucus and the civil rights communities to make certain that the issues we care about most deeply are being addressed in the final bill.

Finally, I must thank my colleagues in the Congressional Black Caucus and, in particular, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) for working tirelessly. We have invested so much energy and so much passion in seeing the goal of making every vote count realized, and now I salute all of the people who have remained steadfast.

As many of my colleagues know, the CBC has been holding hearings and forums and speaking out continuously for the past 21 months on this issue. I believe when it comes to election reform, yet again, we have served as the conscience of the Congress.

Soon after the Supreme Court announced its decision on Bush v. Gore, the caucus resolved to develop legislation that addressed these spectacular failures in the 2000 election. We resolved to make that legislation our number one priority.

We fought hard to get the Help America Vote Act introduced and passed by the House of Representatives, and we worked with the Senate to make sure that the protections they passed were even stronger than those contained in our bill.

Mr. Speaker, these bills are not far apart and we cannot reconcile them. This is why I stand here before my colleagues today to encourage conferees to complete their work and send us a bill that can be signed into law.

We also know that the legislation before the conferees is not perfect. I do not think I have ever seen a perfect bill, but it is a tremendous first step toward meaningful reform. The legislation will help protect and secure an electoral system in which all Americans are able to register as voters, remain on the rolls once registered, and vote free from harassment.

Mr. Speaker, our democracy begins and ends with the fundamental right to vote. Congress must act immediately to ensure that every American has the right to vote and to have their votes counted.

Time is running out for the 107th Congress. We have come so close to the compromise, and the price for not passing election reform is far too high. It is imperative that the conference committee finish their hard work and come to an agreement before October 1 because we cannot afford to let this opportunity slip away.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind Members that it is not in order to cast reflections on the Senate; that it is not in order to refer to a Senator except as provided in clause 1 of rule XVII.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I stand tonight applauding the efforts of our colleague, the gentlewoman from Texas; and I stand to support this motion to instruct. As we like to say around here, work, work, and we mean it this time on this. It is a good thing to do.

The Help America Vote Act could not be here if it were not for my colleague from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) and all the other Members on both sides of the aisle that supported this measure. It is a crucial measure. It is important to every citizen in the United States, and the conference committee has to continue to communicate, communicate with the advocacy groups, local election officials, everybody who has this bill near and dear to their heart.

I commend the gentlewoman from Texas, all of those who have worked so hard for this bill. We cannot lose this bill. We have to continue to work. I know we are running out of time, but I am sure that many minds can come together and can produce a product that we are going to be proud of long after we are not serving in this body.

The Help America Vote Act is good for the Nation. I fully support the gentlewoman's motion to instruct.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me the time.

I want to congratulate her and thank her for the extraordinary job that she has done over the last 18 months on this particular issue. She has been tireless in her efforts to promote the assurance that every American not only has the right to vote but that every American will have their vote counted correctly.

I also want to mention two of my very good friends and colleagues on the floor, the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) and the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), two members from Florida who firsthand experienced and their constituents experienced the difficulties of voting in November of 2000.

I also want to recognize the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY), our chairman, who has done such an outstanding job getting us to this point. Without his measured and effective leadership, we would not be where we are.

I want to go back to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) because as chairwoman of the Congressional Black Caucus and vice chair of the Democratic Caucus Special Committee on Election Reform she has tirelessly advocated that the 107th Congress keep its eye on the prize and pass meaningful, comprehensive election reform.

Mr. Speaker, in only 42 days this Nation will hold its first Federal election since November 2000. Nobody can predict with certainty how smoothly those elections will go. Certainly we experienced a primary in Florida that did not go well. After almost 2 years, studying what went wrong in November 2000, I am convinced that confidence in this Nation's election system will not be restored until this Congress enacts meaningful national standards and offers State and local authorities the resources to improve their election infrastructure.

I am pleased to report, as the chairman has said, that Congress is on the threshold of doing just that, thanks in large measure to my colleague and good friend from Ohio (Mr. NEY), whom I have already mentioned. We are closer than ever to enacting the most comprehensive package of voting reforms since the Voting Rights Act of 1965, reforms that will require States to offer provisional ballots to all voters; reforms that will require States to maintain state-wide computerized registration lists to ensure the most accurate, up-to-date rolls and minimize the number of voters who are incorrectly removed from the rolls; reform that will reward States for retiring obsolete voting machines, especially the notorious punch card machines and their dangling chads; reforms that will require voting systems to be accessible to all individuals with disabilities, including nonvisual accessibility for the blind; reforms that will allow voters to review and correct their ballots before they are ultimately cast. We call that second-chance voting. Every voter ought to be assured that their vote is correctly cast and will be accurately counted.

Reform that does not weaken, let me reiterate this, reforms that do not weaken any existing voting rights laws and includes meaningful enforcement; reform that ensures military and civilian voters who live and work overseas are able to vote and have their vote counted.

Mr. Speaker, this motion is intended to ensure that we on the conference committee complete our work prior to October 1, 2002. Given the extraordinary progress the conference committee has made in the past 14 days, there is no legitimate reason we cannot meet that deadline. I know the chairman shares my view on that. Indeed, given the larger context in which we operate, I would submit that this Congress has a moral responsibility and obligation to enact election reform before we adjourn the 107th Congress.

Mr. Speaker, over the last year, this country has committed vast resources to ridding the world of those who would employ the tools of terror to destroy systems of government that derive their legitimacy from the ballot box. In just the past few weeks, we in Congress have been challenged to contemplate the use of overwhelming military might to bring to heel one of the great despots of the past 50 years, a figure whose utter contempt for democracy and the people he rules is the only reason he has held power for so long.

As we consider such profound measures to extend democracy where it does not now exist and strengthen it where it is fragile, we have an urgent, moral responsibility to do the same at home. I urge adoption of this motion. I congratulate the chairman for his support of this motion and last week's motion to urge us to complete our work. This motion is timely. Passage is late, but it is never too late to do the right thing.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN).

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today, September 24, I stand before this body in our Nation's Capitol, nearly 2 years after the Supreme Court selected the President of the United States. To this day nothing has been done, while the American people wait and wait. No new laws have been signed. No agreements have been reached to correct the 2000 election problems.

In fact, the Bush administration clearly shows that election reform is not a part of their agenda. Immediately after the 2000 election, the only legislative item that was brought up has been tax cuts, tax cuts, tax cuts. It does matter who is in charge. I heard one of the committee chairmen on television discussing Congress giving war powers to the President, and he said over and over again, over and over again, the President is the only person that is elected by all of the people.

Time out. Did I miss something? Over 500,000 Americans voted for Al Gore. Al Gore, not George W. Bush. The Supreme Court decided on a 5-4 decision that George W. Bush would be the President, and to date nothing has been done to correct it.

Let me tell Members about Florida. With 16 million people, Florida spent just $32 million for election reform efforts. Just to the north of us, Georgia, with 8 million, spent $54 million. In an effort to distract the American public from issues like election reform, health care and prescription drug coverage, which was promised to our seniors, in the middle of a mid-term election we are distracted by a war. I think the American people need to weigh in; and if we want to take the questions about the election out, then we need to pass a bill and move forward with election reform.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time, the chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the motion to instruct the election reform conferees to produce a conference report and produce it as soon as possible. Election reform is long overdue. We continually come to this podium and stress the importance of election reform, but no one seems to be listening. That is, those people who are in the leadership are not listening. If they were, election reform would have come to the floor many, many months ago.

How many more voting catastrophes like the week before last in Florida will be required for this Congress to get the message that our people need real election reform, and they need it now? I am just wondering how many more catastrophes must happen.

I do not have enough time to detail all of the many problems that are wrong with elections in this country, not only in south Florida, but manifested much more strongly in south Florida. I have read the same newspaper and magazine accounts that other Members have read, suggesting that election reform conferees have not yet been able to work out their differences. I do not see why there should be so many differences in a right that the Constitution gives each of us. It is perplexing to me, and it appears that election reform may be dead for this particular session just because of this kind of treatment.

This outcome is absolutely unacceptable. It is unacceptable to the people of the United States of America that we as a Congress cannot pass an election reform bill. We can send it to the President for his signature before this session ends. That is extremely important, Mr. Speaker. The voting of the last 2 weeks revealed the many problems that plagued the 2000 Presidential election. Why does it take so long to get the idea? So we are back again. It is a nightmare.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, let me add my appreciation to the conferees on the House side, and particularly the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) for the diligent work that they have offered. Let me also acknowledge and give appreciation to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON), the Chair of the Congressional Black Caucus, and someone who has captured the essence of the vitality of this legislation by pushing and encouraging its passage.

I rise to support this motion to instruct, particularly on the basis of the hard work of the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) and the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), as well as the Democratic Task Force which I had an opportunity to participate in. I say that because we have seen around the country in every place that we have gone hearings that have indicated the great need for election reform.

The work that was done in the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I am a member, headed by the legislative initiative of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member, captured the ailments, the illness of the election system and tried to put together a legislative initiative that was encompassing, that was embracing, that answered the questions about the many horror stories we heard in November 2000: individuals turned away; intimidation at the polls; people who registered to vote and yet were turned away. It is imperative before we go into the Federal elections that we come together in a consensus and pass election reform.

I do feel that the House conferees have been working together in moving toward final passage, and I believe the other body has the same amount of focus. It is now time to set a time frame for us and not let this legislation die in this session. I do not believe anyone desires it to do so. I believe the American people want to see election reform.

Mr. Speaker, after 9–11 when we have all recommitted ourselves to the values of this Nation, the values of democracy and freedom and equality and the right to speak one's mind, it would be a tribute to again reinforce our values by passing such a legislative initiative as election reform.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, who has the right to close?

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important motion to instruct. I appreciate the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) for her insight and her input into this process. All of the speakers that participated tonight have added greatly to the process. This is an important measure. America needs it, and I appreciate this motion to instruct because it will give us an additional push and say this is the sense of the House. I urge all of my colleagues on this side of the aisle to support the motion to instruct.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard some powerful words this evening from my colleagues on how important it is that Congress pass election reform legislation, and pass it quickly. Although it will not affect the November elections, they are approaching and there simply is no time to waste.

As we all know, the most fundamental issue facing all of us during this Congress is restoring the public's faith in democracy. To restore that faith in democracy, we must make sure that every vote cast is counted. We have said repeatedly that we have been attacked because of the jealousy of our freedom. We must make that freedom real, and the only way we can do that is to make sure that every vote cast is counted and is cast without intimidation.

The legislation we have passed will take important steps toward protecting the sacred right to vote. It is time that we take action. House and Senate conferees have come so close to a compromise on H.R. 3295 and now they must finish the job. I call upon members of the conference committee to reach agreement before October 1 and submit the legislation to us for final passage. I am in strong support of this motion to instruct.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate on the motion to instruct has expired.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to instruct.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each:

JUDICIAL CODE OF CONDUCT PRIVACY CLARIFICATION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the subject of my special order today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleague the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) in introducing the Judicial Code of Conduct Privacy Clarification Act. As the title suggests, this bill would clarify a provision in title V of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act that deals with privacy protections for consumers.

Gramm-Leach-Bliley was landmark legislation that for the first time permitted companies to engage in banking, insurance and securities transactions simultaneously. While considering these new freedoms for businesses to operate across lines, Congress also wanted to ensure that consumer privacy would not be placed at risk.

Title V sought to address this issue by giving regulators latitude to enforce privacy provisions among financial institutions. Unfortunately in interpreting the language of the law, some confusion has arisen over what specifically those financial institutions might be. In seeking to clarify the confusion, the Federal Trade Commission concluded that financial institutions include any business that, and I quote, significantly engages in financial activities. What is the definition of "significantly"? Well, it could be as little as once a year. And what is a financial activity? There are four: debt collecting, financial advisory activities, tax planning preparation and advising, and leasing real or personal property.

Okay, that is fair enough. But in writing its regulations in this way, the Federal Trade Commission appears to have unintentionally swept under its umbrella the one group of professionals that already is governed by the strictest possible confidentiality or privacy regulations. What group is this? Attorneys.

Attorneys already are bound by a duty of confidentiality enforceable under the laws of all 50 States that prevents misuse of client information and provides a higher degree of privacy than Gramm-Leach-Bliley. For example, lawyers in my home State of Illinois are prohibited from releasing confidential information. Our code reads, "Except in certain specified circumstances, a lawyer shall not, during or after termination of the professional relationship with the client, use or reveal a confidence or secret of the client known to the lawyer unless the client consents after disclosure."

And Illinois is no exception. All 50 States have equally restrictive language. In all 50 States, lawyers who violate these laws face disbarment and/or other penalties that are much more onerous than those for a violation of title V under Gramm-Leach-Bliley.

Do attorneys significantly engage in financial activities as defined by the FTC? Yes. Some attorneys do give tax planning advice. Others may handle debt collection cases. Still others may take up cases relating to the other two named financial activities, providing financial advice or leasing real or personal property. Yet in order to comply with the privacy provisions under Gramm-Leach-Bliley, these attorneys now run the risk of violating the client confidentiality restrictions placed on their profession.

Every attorney who engages in any of the four defined financial activities for a noncorporate client must mail to that client a privacy notice, every year for as long as he or she is in business. And what does that privacy notice convey? It informs clients that they may direct their attorney not to share their personal information with other entities, the so-called opt-out provision of Gramm-Leach-Bliley. Yet the attorney-client confidentiality relationship is by nature an opt-in protection. In short, for attorneys, the very act of disclosing a privacy policy can create a confidentiality violation.

It was not the intent of Congress to regulate attorney-client relations. Our intent was to regulate the growing use and sale of consumers' personal information for marketing, profiling and other commercial purposes by bona fide financial institutions. At the end of the day, our bill will make the intention of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act crystal clear. The scope of the law was not intended to include law firms and sole practicing lawyers.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of legislation that I am introducing with my colleague JUDY BIGGERT of Illinois, the Judicial Code of Conduct Privacy Clarification Act. This legislation resolves the continuing controversy as to whether attorneys at law, who are subject to strict codes of professional conduct, should be subject to the privacy section of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act. The Biggert-Maloney legislation recognizes that the practice of law and the business of financial services are wholly different and that Gramm-Leach-Bliley should be clarified to recognize this distinction.

Protecting personal privacy should be one of the highest priorities of Congress. Whether online, over the phone or in person, I believe that individuals should be allowed the maximum control over information they supply to financial services and other companies.

With passage of Gramm-Leach-Bliley in 1999, Congress took a small first step in ensuring that consumer privacy is protected as financial institutions continue to merge and as the economy grows increasingly digital. As a member of the then-Banking Committee, I was proud to play a role in requiring that financial services companies supply their customers with privacy policies and allow customers the right to opt-out of information sharing with third-parties. These were groundbreaking provisions that future Congresses should work to expand.

Unfortunately, since enactment, Gramm-Leach-Bliley has caused significant confusion for the legal community. On February 11, 2002, I joined 12 of my bipartisan colleagues on the Financial Services Committee in writing to the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) to ask that it grant attorneys an exemption to the Gramm-Leach-Bliley privacy provisions. As we wrote at the time, "Attorneys are already bound by a duty of confidentiality, enforceable under the laws of all 50 states, that prevents misuse of client information and provides a higher degree of privacy protection than Gramm-Leach-Bliley." After a thorough review, the FTC determined that it does not presently have the authority to grant the exemption we requested.

The privacy protections in Title V of Gramm-Leach-Bliley were a response to specific cases where consumers' private, personal financial information was mined without their consent in an effort to market them products. Where Title V is an appropriate response to such egregious cases, it is inappropriate to apply it to most lawyers whose clients already expect that all their disclosures are confidential, covered by State codes of ethics and attorney-client privilege.

For example, the Legal Aid Society of New York City had to translate its privacy notice into many different languages to serve its ethnically diverse clientele. It also had to devote an inordinate amount of time to dealing with confused clients who couldn't understand why they were getting privacy notices from their lawyers when everything they tell their lawyers is presumed to be confidential. I fear this could have a chilling effect on the willingness of these individuals to share critical information with their attorneys. The confusion these privacy notices are causing in New York is unnecessary given that there is express language forbidding the sharing of client information in the New York State Ethics Code for lawyers.

I join Representative BIGGERT in introducing this legislation today because it is my intention to target this limited area where the interpretation of Gramm-Leach-Bliley can be improved by a legislative fix. The FTC's standing interpretation of Title V of the Act is causing confusion that is determined to the attorney-client relationship. It is appropriate for Congress to intervene. I have met with numerous constituents from New York City on this issue and am convinced that attorneys should not fall under the existing language. I do understand that it is late in the congressional session and I invite interested parties to work with me to improve the legislation in the coming year.

I look forward to continuing to work to safeguard the privacy of my constituents in the coming Congress. I emphatically do not support any rollback of the progress that has been made on privacy. This legislation is limited and strictly targeted. As for the larger privacy issues—the American public deserves more privacy protections, not fewer.

IRAQ AND THE WAR ON TERRORISM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GRUCCI) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GRUCCI. Mr. Speaker, on September 20, 2001, before a joint session of Congress, President Bush declared, and I quote, our war on terror begins with al Qaeda but it does not end there. It will not end until every terrorist group of global reach has been found, stopped and defeated. This principle rallied the world to support the war on terrorism. Today, we must remind ourselves of this principle as America considers action against Iraq. We must remember that the actions of Saddam Hussein are nothing short of terrorism. Until he is removed from a position of power and influence, Americans will not be safe and the war on terrorism will not be won.

On September 16, 2002, Iraq delivered a letter to the United Nations allowing U.N. weapons inspectors unconditional access to Iraq. While the recent letter from Iraq may be received as good news by some, it is important to place this action in the appropriate historical perspective.

A quick reminder of 1998 when Saddam Hussein forced weapons inspectors out of Iraq is enough to understand that the latest move is nothing more than theatrics that will only give Iraq additional time to stockpile and hide weapons of mass destruction to avoid detection.

In May of 1991, Iraq accepted United Nations resolution 687, giving inspectors unconditional access to Iraq. In the years that followed, Iraq contradicted their unconditional pledge to support resolution 687 with the following actions:

October of 1991, Iraq refuses to accept United Nations resolution 715 calling for additional unconditional access for inspectors.

February of 1992, Iraq refuses to allow the destruction of certain facilities used in weapons programs.

April of 1992, Iraq calls for the end of surveillance flights and threatens the safety of pilots.

August of 1998, Iraq announces that they will refuse to agree to any United Nations resolutions until the oil embargo is lifted.

In fact, Iraq has violated 16 United Nations resolutions and sanctions. Sadly, I believe that future inspections will once again be met with blatant defiance and further problems.

Removing Saddam's weapons of mass destruction will only occur when we remove Saddam Hussein. Just in the last several days, Iraq stated that it will not accept any new United Nations resolutions. Furthermore, Iraqi officials have already started adding conditions to their allowance of unconditional access.

We must not allow ourselves to be led down that same path of noncooperation that Iraq has led the world down in the past. We do not need to look beyond Iraqi defectors, many from within Saddam's nuclear program, to learn that Saddam Hussein is dangerously close to obtaining nuclear weapons and has advanced considerably in his biological and chemical weapons programs. I do not believe that we should have to wait for another United States city to be devastated, a military base to be targeted or even to be attacked in order to respond to the threat of Saddam Hussein. Every minute we delay only brings this enormous threat closer to reality.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the President's actions to come to the Congress and seek the Congress's approval. As freedom-loving nations continue to eliminate international terrorism, this war will not end until every terrorist group of global reach has been found, stopped and defeated.

PAUL ESPINOSA RESOLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. DAVIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of my resolution recognizing the contributions of my constituent from San Diego, Paul Espinosa, to both the Latino and the arts community. A few years ago, a study conducted by a leading Latino nonprofit concluded that representation of Hispanics in mainstream network television decreased during the last 30 years. The few roles that were held by Latinos often depicted them as criminals, maids or gardeners. Paul Espinosa observed this disturbing trend 20 years ago and dedicated himself to making documentaries and films about Hispanic Americans. He applied his academic background in anthropology to media and developed textured depictions of Hispanics.

The results have made Paul Espinosa one of the country's most respected and recognized documentary filmmakers. His works, to name a few, include the Lemon Grove Incident, the Hunt for Pancho Villa, and the Earth did not swallow him, Uneasy Neighbors, and The Border. The characters and experiences in his films are as diverse as the Latino community itself. He chronicled the story of a controversial 19th century New Mexico priest, the defining summer in a young migrant boy's life, and the actions of parents in Lemon Grove, California fighting for their children's education. Through these films, Paul Espinosa shows that Latinos possess a complex and dignified history. These previously untold stories examine the social issues surrounding the protagonists and provide a history lesson for all their viewers.

Many consider Paul Espinosa's films catalysts for important cultural dialogue. These films are so highly regarded that they have become the basis for film festivals bearing his name in Texas and California. Academia has also recognized Paul Espinosa's films for their contributions to education. Various high schools and universities include some of his films in their curriculum. Paul Espinosa, who holds a B.A. from Brown University and a Ph.D. from Stanford University, was named a Regents Lecturer at the University of California San Diego in 2000 and is frequently asked to lecture at numerous universities on his films.

Besides his work as a filmmaker, Paul Espinosa is a media arts activist. He is strongly dedicated to enabling an upcoming generation of filmmakers. His involvement with the Media Arts Center of San Diego and the Association of Independent Video and Filmmakers speaks to his commitment to support aspiring media artists and increase the visibility of traditionally underrepresented groups.

One of the Media Art Center's most promising initiatives is the Teen Producer's Project. It teaches young people artistic and analytical skills by emphasizing effective communication through the use of digital video, interpersonal skills and creative writing.

Paul Espinosa has defined his career by making films that tell a meaningful story. His films have spurred discussion and challenged its viewers to reexamine their perceptions of Hispanic Americans.

I hope you, Mr. Speaker, and all of my colleagues will join me in honoring this community artist, his accomplishments in the media arts and his triumphs for the Latino community.

MAKING AMERICA INDEPENDENT OF MIDDLE EASTERN OIL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PUTNAM). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, there has been much debate on how the United States should proceed with Iraq. I rise to draw attention to an issue that is critical to this decision-making process.

As we debate how and whether to take military action in Iraq, I should hope that we could all agree to take economic action against Saddam Hussein. Now, it is clear that the United States is overly dependent on foreign oil. The United States presently imports 48 percent of the 19.7 million barrels of oil it consumes each day. Of that total, approximately half a million barrels come from Iraq.

Now is the opportunity to pursue a policy of making America independent of Middle Eastern oil. To do this, we have to aggressively pursue new technologies and development of renewable energy, biomass, geothermal, hydropower, solar and wind. A renewed effort toward policies that encourage reduced reliance on fossil fuels and more secure sources of dependable energy would mean the creation of jobs that would strengthen our economy and better serve our national interests.

Now is the precise moment for the United States to shed its dependency on any Iraqi oil and work toward a future when our domestic energy policy does not play a role in how we implement strategic initiatives.

Already we are told that Saddam Hussein does not use the proceeds from the sale of oil to feed his population or to provide medical needs for his people. We are told instead that the profits from these sales are going to his own personal needs, to his aggrandizement with palaces and other monuments that he builds to himself, and to embellishing his Republican Guard. Especially if that is the case, then we ought to be talking about not buying Iraqi oil so that he has the proceeds with which to act in that manner, and we ought to be talking about convincing our allies in the international community to do the same.

This will not be easy, but the fact of the matter is we have a capable State Department and a capable Secretary of State who ought to go about the hard work of working diplomatically to convince our international community that that is one way to enforce inspections and enforce disarmament, one tool to use to get the attention of Saddam Hussein, knowing there is a hammer at the other end that can be effective, and we ought to do it.

In the long range, we ought to make sure that we have an energy policy in place that allows us not only to back off of any use of Iraqi oil, but to eventually overcome any need to rely on Middle Eastern oil. It is a relatively small portion of the fossil fuel that we use in this country; and over a period of a reasonable number of years, a concerted and wise energy policy will allow us to strategically pull out of that area and resolve many of the crises we may have in the future dealing with Middle Eastern problems and situations, politically and otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a policy that would be wise. I think we have international resolutions for inspections and disarmament that need international enforcement. We ought to call upon the United Nations to do everything in its power to work within the international community to make sure that they in fact enforce those resolutions and have inspections and make sure that we have disarmament in Iraq.

But that is hard work, as I said before; and it is not as easy sometimes as taking an overpowering military force and attacking. But there is no imminency to any attack on the interests of the United States at this time, and we have an international body and we have an international means to act; and we have the time to do that and try that. We should exhaust all avenues before going to the extreme avenue of an unprovoked, in the sense of any action against the United States directly, action. We should make sure that we use our resources, work within the international community, understand that we can embargo oil to Iraq as an opening step, and get our allies to do the same as a way of enforcing provisions for inspections and disarmament. We ought to move in that direction.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can get some agreement on this, and I hope that we can work within the international community to do just that.

OPTIONS WITH REGARD TO IRAQ

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, the rush to war continues here in Washington, despite the possibility of the reinstatement of effective, unfettered inspections aimed at the destruction of weapons of mass destruction that Saddam Hussein may have hidden from past inspections or may have developed since that time.

Now, Prime Minister Tony Blair, as a surrogate for this administration, did provide a more concrete and detailed report than anything provided by the Bush administration to the United States Congress thus far on what is going on in Iraq. But the interesting thing is, in reading through the 50-some odd pages of this report and perusing the photographs, the actual conclusion is that inspections did work, U.N. sanctions did work, and are still working. The containment and deterrence doctrine has worked with Saddam Hussein.

In fact, the previous program before the inspectors left was extraordinarily successful, more so than would be admitted by this administration, that is very dismissive about the possibility of going back in with intrusive, unfettered inspections with a mandate to destroy any weapons of mass destruction that this miscreant may have managed to develop.

I will read a few quotes from Prime Minister Blair's report. He talks about their attempts to obtain nuclear weapons: "In August 1990, Iraq instigated a crash program to develop a single nuclear weapon within a year. By the time of the Gulf War, the crash program had made little progress."

They go on to say that "UNSCOM had totally dismantled the physical infrastructure of the Iraqi nuclear weapons program, including the dedicated facilities and equipment for uranium separation and enrichment, and for weapon development and production, and removed the remaining highly enriched uranium."

It is hard to reconcile that with the assertions that intrusive inspections under the auspices of the U.N. will have no impact on Saddam Hussein or his attempts to obtain weapons of mass destruction.

In early 2002, the British intelligence judged that while sanctions remained effective, Iraq will not be able to produce nuclear weapons. That is on page 27 of the justification given by the Prime Minister of Britain for a preemptive war against Iraq. He cannot build or obtain nuclear weapons, according to British intelligence, as long as the sanctions remain in effect, and that is without intrusive inspections backed by the full force of the United States and around the world.

There are many other passages. This is incredibly instructive reading. I would recommend it to my colleagues in Congress. It is certainly more detailed than anything provided to this Congress, either in classified briefings or outside of classified briefings, and certainly more detailed than anything provided to the American public, NATO or anybody else by the United States, and the British have done us a service.

But the case they make is the opposite of the conclusion of their Prime Minister. The case that is strongly made here is that a return to the regime of an intrusive, unfettered weapons inspection and destruction program would effectively preclude this dictator from ever obtaining weapons with which he could threaten other countries in that region, and most certainly the United States of America.

So this, to me, certainly demonstrates that the rush to war, the first preemptive war in the history of the United States, the first preemptive war since the horrible destruction of World War II and the U.N. and the agreements we have reached since then, breaking with all precedent, the United States, in some bizarre version of "Minority Report," the movie, will decide that we have people in the administration who can determine whether or not someone presents a real and present threat to the United States, even if they made no threats, even if there is no documentation of them having the capabilities on carrying out on the threats they have not made; and we, the United States of America, should be able, in violation of all international law and all precedents of our Nation, be able to preemptively attack and destroy that country for the purposes of regime change, because we do not like who is running that country.

Well, there are a lot of brutal dictators around the world running a lot of countries I do not like, including Saddam Hussein; and I would support democratic efforts and subversion efforts and any other way to get those people out of power. But a war that opens the door to worldwide conflicts, to Taiwan and China, India and Pakistan and any other host of countries, is an incredibly dangerous precedent, and this report from the Prime Minister to his Parliament documents that it is not necessary. We have an effective option before us.

ENERGY AND THE POTENTIAL FOR WAR IN THE MIDDLE EAST

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the House this evening, as we have had speakers here earlier, focusing on issues of energy and the potential for war in the Middle East.

I think it is appropriate that these two issues are in fact before us, because oil and the Middle East are linked in the minds of the public; and, in fact, I think any credible observer would agree that in fact they are linked in fact.

Tonight, as one reflects on the status of the potential growing cloud of war in the Middle East as we are dealing in this country with issues that relate as we speak now, there is a conference that has been meeting in terms of the energy policy. I think it is appropriate for us to step back and reflect on the status of what this Congress has done in the course of the last year to deal meaningfully with energy policy.

It is something that in and of itself is important for us to focus on, but it would seem that in the aftermath of the horrible attacks of September 11 of last year, the rising tensions in the Middle East, the pressures that took place as we moved into Afghanistan, what we have seen in terms of the potential problems with oil that is concentrated in terms of the 50 percent or more that comes to the United States from foreign sources, that there would be a sense of urgency about that discussion.

Americans want and deserve a national energy policy that ensures safe, affordable and clean energy. One must only be disappointed by the lack of leadership and urgency that we have seen with the administration, and, sad to say, here in Congress, to reduce our dependence on foreign oil, to say nothing about reducing the impact of the pollution that is associated with that dependence.

We have now been working on an energy bill for almost 2 years; and the plan that has come forward from the House does not even employ simple steps to reduce the demand for oil that years of study have demonstrated beyond question are necessary and in fact will work.

Sadly, this is in the midst of the economic challenges that we face as we have seen the promise of fiscal stability go out the window. In my State of Oregon we have consistently in the course of over the last year and a half had among the highest unemployment rates in the country.

It was less than a year and a half ago when we heard from the President that we could in fact embark upon a massive tax cut because we were going to have over $5 trillion in surplus; and, in fact, it was alleged that one of the real problems we were facing as a Nation was the possibility that we would be paying off the national debt so rapidly that we would not have safe investment instruments.

Well, we have dodged that bullet. We have not just a tight budget, but we have deficits now for as long as the eye can see. We are going to be borrowing between 100 billion and $200 billion of Social Security trust funds. One only hears faintly the echo of the lockbox that people were going to set aside these monies, and we are looking at a significant long-term structural deficit.

But in the context of that, we have the conferees looking at an energy bill that would give away billions of dollars in new subsidies and tax breaks for fossil fuel, for the automobile industry, for the nuclear industry while sadly shortchanging clean, sustainable energy sources.

Having a dependable supply of energy and using it wisely is critical for Americans to be able to have livable communities. However, in response to the terrorist attacks and the call for more stable and predictable energy supply, we should not increase our dependence on fossil fuels in the way that we have for a century. The question is not whether we should reduce our dependence on oil, but whether we have the will; not whether we will reduce dependence on fossil fuel, but how and when we are going to achieve it. What is our strategy?

With the United States holding some 3 percent of the world's oil reserves, yet consuming over 25 percent of the fossil fuels, we will never drill our way out of reliance on the unsustainable sources of oil. But aside for a moment that the vast majority of the oil that we rely upon is concentrated in a handful of countries in an area that has never been particularly stable, but has been growing increasingly unstable over time, much of the recoverable oil in the United States, the 2 or 3 percent, is environmentally and politically difficult to access.

Now, many of my friends on the other side of the aisle in the Republican Party and, of course, the White House believe that drilling for oil in the Arctic Wildlife refuge is an important part of the solution. Well, the fact is that even if we were to disregard the serious questions and problems associated with it, the reserves that we can recover in the Arctic are likely to provide only a few months energy supply for the United States, some have suggested 6 months or less, and it is not going to be available to us for the better part of a decade.

If we, in fact, are concerned about energy security, if we are concerned about potential terrorist threats, putting our reliance on the 800-mile Alaskan pipeline seems to be a rather slender thread to rely upon. Recall that it was just a year ago when we had a drunk with a hunting rifle shoot up the pipeline, spilling almost 300,000 gallons of oil before the problem could be solved, and that was in the early fall.

Consider what would have happened if this drunk had assaulted the pipeline later in the year, in the winter. Interrupting the flow of oil would have caused the entire pipeline to be subject to freezing up, and we would have an 800 mile long piece of Chapstick, hardly a safe and secure method of assuring oil supply to the lower 48 States. If a drunk with a hunting rifle can disrupt the flow, think what would happen along 800 miles if a few determined terrorists decided to inflict damage on it. Not something that we are going to rely upon.

The notion that this is, in fact, part of a comprehensive energy solution that is going to be an important part of solving our problem is, at best, disingenuous for the American public as it is damaging to the environment. The public has made clear its opposition to drilling in the Arctic Wildlife Refuge.

Now, where would the administration take us next? According to the petroleum industry, western Federal lands hold 95 percent of untapped United States oil and 40 percent of untapped natural gas. In the last year, 2001, the administration approved 3,800 permits for companies to drill for oil and gas, the most in one year since 1988. Reflecting for a moment that it has taken eons for the radiant energy from the sun to convert by natural process to fossil fuels, in the course of a few generations we will have used up nearly all of the Earth's entire supply of accessible petroleum.

The question is increasingly not just how much oil is left in the ground, but how long can we go on increasing the rate at which cheap oil is extracted. I think it is clear that there is a finite duration; it is just a matter of time when that curve is crossed and when the cheap oil is reduced, starts to go away that we change the economics of the petroleum industry. One hopes that we can convince our friends in the administration and our colleagues on the other side of the aisle to join the American public in realizing that we do have the technology to meet more of our energy needs through alternatives. Through energy conservation we have not, by any stretch of the imagination, exhausted the potential of energy savings through conservation, through increased full efficiency. Remember that a 3-mile per gallon increase in fuel efficiency for SUVs would offset the entire amount of oil that we expect to extract some day from the Arctic Wildlife Refuge, if we change our policy.

It is an opportunity for us to think about new creative ways to accelerate that progress. In one hour, there is more energy that the Earth receives from the sun, through the solar process, than is the entire year's output in fossil fuels. Energy and fuel efficiency is the quickest, cheapest, cleanest way to save not just energy. Most people will recover in a relatively short period of time over the course of the life of a vehicle the savings for any increase in the price of that vehicle. If they are going to have to have a more expensive SUV, if the people are not going to cut down on the power at all, they will end up in being able to recover those costs through savings that they will achieve in terms of reduced expenditure that they have. Passenger cars, for example, use more than 40 percent of the oil consumed in America. The average American driver spends 443 hours driving every single year. In fact, America's cars, light trucks, consume one-tenth of the annual global oil production.

Mr. Speaker, we have resources available to us to, in fact, make a difference in energy efficiency, and it is something that we want to focus on with this Congress, not allow this time to get away from us, use the opportunity of the energy conference bill and each opportunity that comes before us from now until we adjourn to be able to advance the cause of America's energy security.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that I have been joined by the gentlewoman from southern California (Ms. SÁNCHEZ), my colleague, with whom I have been pleased to work on a variety of issues that speak to the environment, to transportation. She has a wide variety of interests that range from the environment to national security. I am honored that she would join us this evening. I yield to the gentlewoman should she have some comments that she would wish to share.

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Oregon, and I thank him for coming down to the House floor tonight to speak about such an important issue. With everything going on right now, with our Nation assessing whether to go to war in the Middle East and the state of our economy being so shaky, we in Congress need to make sure that we are asking the right questions.

For instance, we are here tonight to talk about how are we going to achieve a realistic solution to U.S. foreign oil dependence?

Now, it is not like this is a new question. I remember back in 1973, 1974, I am a Californian. We use a lot of oil, we drive a lot of cars, we go a lot of places, we drive long distances. I remember standing in lines and waiting in 100-car lines the last time we had a problem with OPEC and prices going up, and we all swore that we would do something about this and that we should not be so dependent on cars that use so much gas. For a while we remembered that and we started to work on and import and get more gas mileage for our cars. But then what happened? The SUV situation, and now we find that we are back up to those gas guzzlers, once again.

So we have to say to ourselves, this is an opportune time when we can make some real policy decisions and put into play some very important solutions, possible solutions. People ask me all the time, well, what answer do you have, LORETTA, to importing oil from Iraq or from the Middle East or the OPEC countries? There are a lot of ways, and it does not just have to be that we have to go off to the Arctic circle and drill the last plain that we have that is not touched by humans. There are other ways to do this.

Let me give my colleagues an example. I am from southern California. We had an energy crisis about a couple of summers ago, about 18 months ago, blackouts in our production, our factories were being affected because we were not getting the electricity we needed; we had natural gas prices go high on us. Now, we now know that much of that was artificially created. But for the moment, while we were in the middle of all of that, we were asking ourselves, how are we going to solve this problem?

Well, the first thing is consumption. Why is it that we consume the way we do? And we offered incentives at the State level. As it is, I come from a large family. My dad always taught us to turn off the lights as we left the room and turn everything off, so I grew up that way, so our energy bill was low. But the Governor told us, if you conserve 20 percent more than what you normally use, you will get an incredible savings on your electricity bill. Let me tell my colleague, people rose to the occasion in California. We saw an incredible drop in the consumption of electricity. We learned that once again, things that we know, but we do not think about, that we should run our machines, our washers and dryers and dishwashers and stuff at night, rather than during the day when the regular business shift is using that power.

So that we do not have to create more power plants, nor nuclear power plants, divert more rivers, create more energy. We can actually use what we already have, as long as we use it efficiently.

California proved that we could do it. It was not a hardship. We were not killing ourselves to get that done. We understood that it was the right thing to do for the moment, and we could continue, and many people have. Many people have learned to live with less, if you will. We can do that in so many ways.

Why is it that every time that we set standards at the Federal level to require automobiles to get higher gas mileage, and we say it is going to be 7 years off, the companies need to work towards this, why is it that we reach the 7 years, and all of a sudden we need to change the law because nobody invested in that, nobody really did it? We could have done it. If they knew we were going to stick to our guns, they would do that; they would increase the efficiency of our automobiles.

Or we could just remember to put all our shopping trips in one haul. There are so many things that we could do; for instance, offering incentives. Do not punish people, but offer people, companies, incentives for new technologies, to invest more in new technologies for wind and solar and fuel cells. I will bet if we did that and we were real about it, if we put the money behind that, that we would find companies that would be willing to step up and use that and do it and find the solutions so that we would not be so dependent on foreign oil supplies, or even on the need to drill our own supplies that we know exist in some of the States that we have.

We have to build better vehicles. We have to light and heat our buildings more efficiently. I know that by doing that we could lower our dependence on fossil fuel oil, which is the real problem that exists here.

We have said for years that we are going to do it, but we have never stood behind that. We have never, as a Federal Government, as a policy of the people, said: be more efficient. Let us strengthen energy efficiency standards. Let us create incentives for a new generation of vehicles. Let us raise the fuel economy standards; and let us adopt a strong, renewable portfolio standard. If we do this, we will not be dependent on the Iraqs of the world.

I thank my colleague for bringing this to light. We need to discuss this more. We need to get the American people involved in deciding that they are part of the solution towards this dependence that we have on foreign countries because of the oil that they possess.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentlewoman's comments and her leadership.

I will always remember the visit we took last year with some of our colleagues to the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, where we were camping on a plain amidst the caribou; where we had a chance to really sense the vastness of that area, to get a feel for what was at stake as we looked at other areas that had been developed and were continuing to be developed for oil production.

It was clear that this was one of America's jewels, and I have appreciated the gentlewoman's commitment in terms of going up there to see it firsthand and the gentlewoman's continued advocacy for a more rational and thoughtful energy policy.

Hopefully, working together, we can advance these causes here in Congress that will make a difference for America's energy security.

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I just want to add, it is very important that we save that last frontier. I would like my nieces and nephews to be able to see a part of the North American continent that is the same as it was 100, 200, 600, 1,000 years ago. They deserve a chance to see a plain that is open, that is in its austere and pristine condition. That is a legacy that I think is important for us to protect, especially when we can do it through better efficiency and tightening down and understanding that we are part of our own problem.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentlewoman said it well, and I thank her for her participation.

AMERICAN FRONTIERS: A PUBLIC LANDS LEGACY

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, America has an important shared legacy in its parks, forests and other public lands. They bring us close to the natural world and its wildlife; contribute to physical and mental health; add to our understanding of history and culture; and provide important economic opportunities to many communities across the West. Unfortunately, not enough people understand the multiple facets of America's public lands. As Chairman of the National Parks Subcommittee, I am happy to see a major effort being mounted to address this issue. "American Frontiers: A Public Lands Journey" is a 3,000-mile expedition currently being undertaken by two teams of adventurers. They are crossing only public lands and waters in six states, by foot, horseback, mountain bike, canoe, SUV and boat. Their two month journey will culminate in Salt Lake City on September 28, 2002, National Public Lands Day. Along the trail, they are sharing dispatches and individual journals relating their experiences and impressions of the public lands by videophone and through an interactive Internet website located at www.americanfrontiers.net. These communication efforts are especially directed at America's youth. I applaud the efforts of Public Lands Interpretive Association, which has spearheaded this project, along with the many dedicated individuals, volunteers, and sponsors of this impressive journey. I look forward to hearing more about their experiences in America's national parks.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Ross Love, a friend, community leader, and accomplished businessperson who will be inducted into the Greater Cincinnati and Northern Kentucky Business Hall of Fame on September 26, 2002. Ross is being honored for his outstanding business career, which includes leadership roles at the Procter & Gamble Company, Blue Chip Broadcasting, and Blue Chip Enterprises.

Ross was born and raised in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and graduated from Syracuse University in 1968 with a Bachelor of Arts. Shortly after earning his degree, Ross began a very successful career with Procter & Gamble, where he worked for 28 years in marketing and advertising. After running a number of the company's key brands, he was appointed Vice President of Advertising and oversaw the marketing of Procter & Gamble's products for 10 years.

A BILL TO ENSURE THAT THE IRS ACCURATELY ACCOUNT FOR FICA TAXES PAID BY EMPLOYERS ON EMPLOYEE'S TIP INCOME

HON. WALLY HERGER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleague from Tennessee, Mr. TANNER, to introduce the Tip Tax Fairness Act, a bill to require the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) to accurately account for FICA taxes paid by employers on employee's tip income.

As we all know, many employees in the service sector of the business community earn a substantial portion of their income from tips. Recognizing this, Congress passed legislation years ago requiring employers and employees to pay FICA payroll taxes on tip income. This ensures that an employee's total earnings are reflected in their Social Security wage history, which determines the employee's Social Security benefits upon retirement.

In the IRS's effort to collect the FICA taxes they believe is owed on unreported tips, the agency has created an aggregate method for assessing employers which is inconsistent with congressional intent. Congress did not intend FICA taxes to be paid on an aggregate basis, because earnings subject to FICA taxes are intended to be credited to an employee's Social Security wage history.

Under current law, employees are required to report all of their tips to their employer. The employer is required to send this information to the IRS, along with the employer and employee share of the FICA taxes owed. If the IRS believes the amount of tip income reported is not accurate the agency will audit the employer, bill the employer using an aggregate estimate, and collect the employer's portion of the FICA taxes. However, the agency does not credit the employee's Social Security wage history. By not doing so, the agency is disregarding one of the reasons Congress required employers to pay FICA taxes on tips.

Furthermore, this lack of accounting on the part of the IRS, and the use of aggregate estimates, creates a dramatic shift in the burden of tax collection. Under this method, it is the employer who must determine if there was underrepomng of income, not the IRS, and the employer who must disprove an inaccurate assessment. Many service providers have expressed concerns that this shift in burden pits the employer against their own employees, effectively turning them into "tip police."

The bill Mr. TANNER and I are introducing today is a solution that we believe employees and employers can support. Simply stated, this legislation requires the IRS to ensure that assessments paid by employers, for FICA taxes owed on unreported tips, are credited to each affected employee's Social Security wage history. As such, this measure requires the IRS to use FICA taxes as Congress intended.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank all of our original cosponsors for supporting this worthy legislation.

HON. LORETTA SANCHEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of Cung Pham of Garden Grove, California.

Cung Pham served as the director of educational legislation and planning prior to the fall of the Republic of Vietnam 1975. After the country's collapse, he was detained in a concentration camp for seven years before escaping by boat in 1982 to spend time in a refugee camp in Thailand.

Mr. Pham eventually ended up in the Orange County community. Using his understanding of the refugee experience, Mr. Pham worked as the director of the refugee resettlement program at St. Anselm's Cross Cultural Center in Garden Grove. His great compassion and organizational skills helped make the program a model for the entire country, helping thousands of refugees become assimilated to American life. He helped them with paperwork, enrolled them in English classes, and trained them for job interviews.

Sadly, at the young age of 63, Mr. Pham lost his battle to cancer on September 14, 2002. He was known for his quiet and gentle ways and was greatly admired by those he helped and those with whom he worked.

RECOGNIZING THE JEWISH NATIONAL FUND

HON. JOSEPH M. HOEFFEL

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Jewish National Fund which is celebrating its 100th anniversary on October 6, 2002. The Jewish National Fund (JNF) was established with the express purpose of bringing Jews from around the world together and make the Zionist dream of a Jewish state a reality.

JNF was formed at the Fifth Zionist Congress in order to motivate people from around the world to collect spare change in tin "Blue Boxes," to be used to purchase the land that would one day become the state of Israel. These Blue Boxes became a symbol of Zionism and they were distributed in Jewish communities everywhere, creating a bond that was felt by the Jewish community as a whole. Through this unity, the Zionist movement built the nation of Israel that continues to flourish and thrive.

In the spring of 1903, JNF acquired its first parcel of land of 800 acres in Hadera, Israel. Immediately, JNF focused on greening the land through the planting of trees. To date, JNF has planted over 210 million trees on 250,000 acres across Israel. JNF has grown with the country's changing needs by building infrastructure for essential new communities which accommodate Israel's growing population. The JNF is responsible for building access roads, providing employment for waves of new immigrants, and improving the quality of life for Israelis across the country.

Today JNF continues to be a major force in the development of Israel through water resource development, education, research and development, community development and tourism and recreation. These successes across such a wide range of activities have benefited the lives of countless Israeli citizens. The reach of JNF extends beyond Israel's boarders providing a link between Jews around the world with the Jewish state.

I congratulate the Jewish National Fund on its 100 years of service to the Zionist movement and the state of Israel and wish them many more years of continued success.

NATIONAL RADIOLOGIC TECHNOLOGY WEEK

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the contribution of medical imaging and radiation professionals to the care of Americans as we celebrate National Radiologic Technology Week (NRTW) November 3–9, 2002.

Many people are unaware of who radiologic technologists are or what they do. This week to honor those dedicated health care professionals was started in 1979 by the American Society of Radiologic Technologists (ASRT). The purpose for the week is to educate the public about the important contributions of medical imaging and radiation therapy professionals in providing quality patient care and a safer health care environment.

Radiologic technologists are the medical personnel who perform diagnostic imaging examinations and administer radiation therapy treatments. They are educated in anatomy, patient positioning, examination techniques, equipment protocols, radiation safety, radiation protection and patient care.

NRTW takes place annually and is celebrated across the Country at hospitals, clinics, imaging centers, educational institutions, corporations and affiliate organizations and at public events held at schools, health fairs, fund-raisers and other community locations. NRTW also commemorates the founding of the ASRT in October 1920. ASRT is the oldest and largest national, not-for-profit member association representing medical imaging and radiation therapy professionals, with a membership exceeding 100,000. Since 1920, ASRT has helped foster the professional growth and educational needs of radiologic technologists throughout the world. The Society represents individual practitioners, educators, students and managers/administrators in radiologic technology, radiation therapy, nuclear medicine and sonography.

I would like to congratulate and thank our Country's medical imaging and radiation therapy professionals for a job well done. It is an honor to commemorate and celebrate National Radiologic Technology Week.

CELEBRATING THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF HYDE PARK COMMUNITY UNITED METHODIST CHURCH

HON. ROB PORTMAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Hyde Park Community United Methodist Church on the 75th anniversary of its consecration.

The origins of the Church can be traced to 1879 when the Mount Lookout Methodist Episcopal Church was organized by fifteen Methodists who were meeting in area homes. In 1880, a wooden church was erected at the site of the current church on the corner of Observatory Road and Grace Avenue on land donated by John Kilgour.

Meanwhile, in 1907, another small group of congregants left the Mount Lookout M.E. and formed the Hyde Park Methodist Episcopal Church. They constructed a building at 2753 Erie Avenue, which was completed in 1915. Both churches continued to grow. After the Mount Lookout M.E. Church was damaged by termites and a tornado and the Hyde Park M.E. Church building experienced structural difficulties, Bishop Henderson urged the two churches to merge, and in 1922 the two became the Mt. Lookout Hyde Park United Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1923, the pastor of the newly merged churches, Reverend Warren Dunham, articulated the vision of the community church, and encouraged the construction of a new building. The congregation moved quickly to construct a large and impressive Gothic structure that required substantial financial sacrifice by its members. The present building was dedicated on the site of the original Mount Lookout M.E. Church on September 25, 1927.

Since 1927, the Church has grown significantly, enlarging its buildings and adding to its membership. But its Invitation, dedicated on its founding, in 1927, remains unaltered, and as timeless today as then. It reads:

To all who mourn and need comfort
To all who are tired and need rest
To all who are friendless and want friendship
To all who are lonely and want companionship
To all who are homeless and want sheltering love
To all who pray, and all who do not, but ought
To all who sin and need a savior;
and to who-so-ever-will, this church opens wide its doors, and in the name of Jesus, our Lord, bids welcome!

The inclusive spirit of this Invitation is one reason Hyde Park Community United Methodist Church has been blessed by such growth and success over the years. The Church community is a shining example of the United Methodist Church's current nationwide inclusiveness campaign of "Open Hearts, Open Minds, Open Doors."

Over the years, the Church has had a proud tradition of not just serving the spiritual needs of the congregation, but also reaching out to help others. Consistent with the vision laid out in the 1920s, the Church has been active in the community. This includes the Hyde Park community, the Greater Cincinnati area and our greater national and world community through its ministries on Christian education, United Methodist Women, Spiritual Direction, affiliations with churches in other countries, and mission programs.

All of us in Greater Cincinnati congratulate the Church, its pastors, parishioners, and staff on the occasion of the Church's 75th anniversary. We also look forward to many more years of the Hyde Park Community United Methodist Church and its open Invitation and commitment to our community.

TRIBUTE TO MACK POWELL

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute to my friend Mack Powell. On August 8, the Sacramento real estate community lost one of its most beloved and dedicated leaders when Mack Powell passed away. As his family and friends gather to remember Mack's many outstanding achievements and contributions to his community, I ask all of my colleagues to join with me in saluting this truly remarkable citizen of Sacramento.

Born in Sardis Mississippi on September 20, 1920, Mack was orphaned at an early age and was raised in an orphanage. Mack would go on to serve his country by enlisting in the Army during World War II. After his stint in the Army, Mack moved to Texas in 1946. While in Texas, Mack was elected and served with great distinction as the Mayor of Pecos, Texas.

In hopes of securing a better future for himself, Mack moved to California in 1955. In time, Mack owned and operated a furniture store in Sacramento. It was also in Sacramento where Mack met his wife, Paula. Mack and Paula were happily married in 1967. In the following year, Mack made his initial entry into the real estate business. After obtaining his sales license and later his brokers license, Mack and Paul founded Suburban Properties, Inc.

By 1970, Mack had begun to get involved with the Sacramento Board of Realtors. During the course of his illustrious career, Mack would serve on over 100 committees between the national, state, and local Realtor associations. Locally, Mack served as the Sacramento Association of Realtors' President in 1986. On a statewide level, Mack was the California Association of Realtors Regional Vice President in 1986, and after much hard work, he was selected President of California Association of Realtors in 1991. It was also in 1991 that Mack was named the Realtor of the year for the Sacramento Association of Realtors and California Association of Realtors.

Mack also served as a Federal District Coordinator of the National Association of Realtors for my a Congressional district. It was simply a great joy and privilege to have had the opportunity to work with Mack over the years. Mack was a gentle man of unparalleled ethics who always had the best interests of the community and his industry in mind in all his endeavors. The citizens of Sacramento should be thankful that they could call Mack Powell one of their own.

Widely touted as one of Sacramento's most cherished and prominent citizens, Mack was the consummate community leader. While astute and active politically, he was both a civic leader and exemplary citizen who was trusted and respected across all political persuasions. His intellect, integrity, good cheer, energy, and compassion made him a natural gatherer of people. Mack always found time to help others, whatever their stations in life.

Mr. Speaker, as Mack Powell's family and friends pay tribute to his many wonderful achievements, I am honored to express my gratitude and respect for one of Sacramento's most outstanding citizens. His accomplishments are unparalleled, and it was truly a privilege for me to count him as one of my dearest friends. I ask all my colleagues to join me in acknowledging Mack's invaluable contributions to Sacramento.

IN HONOR OF LESLEY MOORE

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Lesley Moore for twenty years of service to the Hudson County community and to Catholic Community Services. Ms. Moore was awarded the 2002 Mary T. Norton Memorial Award on September 17, 2002, at the United Way Kick-Off, which was held at the Crowne Plaza in Secaucus, New Jersey.

Lesley Moore has selflessly dedicated herself to a life of social service focused on the needs of others, including at-risk children and their families, the homeless, and people living with HIV.

Ms. Moore's leadership has been exemplified in her work as Children and Family Services Division Director, as well as her supervision of the Children and Family Services of Catholic Community Services. She has successfully expanded the abilities of these organizations to assist those most in need, and continues to administer the following programs: home-based services; an adoption agency; juvenile justice programs; school-based counseling; youth development, and youth mentoring.

Lesley Moore's hard work ethic and spirit of kindness is also found in her participation in a number of professional groups, such as: Hudson County Case Assessment Review Team;

Hudson County Children's Interagency Coordinating Council, Hudson County Coalition on Domestic Violence; Hudson County Coalition of Non-Profits; Hudson County HIV/AIDS Planning Council; Hudson County Human Services Advisory Commission; and Hudson County Youth Services Commission.

This award is given in recognition of the deep commitment to human services exemplified by Congresswoman Mary T. Norton. It recognizes women who have made outstanding contributions to the success of programs, both in their community and throughout the nation.

Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Lesley Moore for her critical role in helping to improve the lives of families and children in Hudson County.

INTRODUCTION OF SENIORS ACCESS TO HEALTH CARE ACT OF 2002

HON. DAVE WELDON

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Seniors Access to Health Care Act of 2002 in order to guarantee that senior citizens continue to have access to health care providers under the Medicare program. This bill includes most of the provisions of a bill (H.R. 4954) that was approved earlier this year to restore payments to health care providers, ensuring that they continue to see seniors.

I am introducing this bill, today because the Senate has failed to approve legislation establishing a prescription drug plan for seniors and a restoration of payments to providers. I am fully committed to enacting a prescription drug plan for senior citizens, but given the failure of Democrat Majority Leader TOM DASCHLE to secure Senate passage of a prescription drug bill, I believe it would be doubly harmful to seniors if we allowed additional provider cuts to go into effect. It is for this reason that I believe it is important that we at least ensure that these additional cuts are averted. We should plug this hole while we continue to work together to address the need for a prescription drug plan for seniors.

Last year physicians saw a 5 percent reduction in their reimbursement rates from Medicare. This year, without the changes proposed in my legislation, they will see another 5.7 percent reduction. This cut comes at a time when providers are facing an unprecedented rise in medical malpractice premiums, and a dramatic increase in the costs of health insurance premiums for their own employees. A second year of reductions in Medicare reimbursements will lead more providers to drop out of the Medicare program or to leave medical practice altogether. It is important for seniors that we not allow this to happen.

The other significant change from the House-passed bill is the removal of the requirement for nationwide competitive bidding in durable medical equipment. I believe additional work needs to be done in this arena to fully understand its impacts on savings and quality of care.

IN RECOGNITION OF BART'S 30TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the San Francisco Bay Area Rapid Transit District, known as BART, as it celebrates its 30th anniversary this month. BART is the San Francisco Bay Area's premier mode of public transit and has carried nearly 2 billion passengers quickly and efficiently since it opened in 1972.

Established in 1957 by the California State Legislature to relieve the unbearable traffic congestion on Bay Area roads, the BART concept was popular with the public from the very beginning. BART service began on September 11, 1972, an event that signaled a renaissance in rail transit in the United States. It was the first new rail rapid transit system built in the U.S. in more than 60 years and the first fully automated transit system in the world. The American Public Works Association named BART one of the "Top Ten Public Works Projects of the 20th Century," an honor it shares with the Golden Gate Bridge, the Panama Canal, and the Hoover Dam.

The BART District includes the counties of Alameda, Contra Costa and San Francisco, with service to San Mateo County. On an average weekday, BART carries about 310,000 passengers. The system consists of 95 miles of double track and 39 stations. With nearly 3,500 employees throughout the system, a $420 million operating budget and $561 million capital budget, BART is an important part of the Bay Area's economy.

BART continues to grow and thrive. Four new stations and 8.7 additional miles of double track are set to open in early 2003 with service to the San Francisco International Airport and the Peninsula. BART will connect with Caltrain, a 77-mile commuter rail service, at the Millbrae station to create a 180-mile combined regional rail network. Continued regional transportation needs are spurring several BART extensions, now in the planning stages. These extensions would take BART to Warm Springs, to San Jose, to the Oakland International Airport, and possibly other heavily traveled corridors in the East Bay.

Mr. Speaker, BART has consistently provided safe, fast, and reliable transportation to Bay Area residents and visitors. BART has served the San Francisco Bay Area well for 30 years, and we look forward to an even more extensive and more efficient rail system 30 years from now. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing BART a Happy 30th Birthday.

ARTICLE BY PROFESSOR DAVID YAMADA

HON. JIM McDERMOTT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, as Congress grapples with how to best create a Department of Homeland Security that will meet our nation's security needs, I'd like to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD comments that Professor David Yamada made regarding this issue. Mr. Yamada is a co-founder of the Workers' Rights Committee of Americans for Democratic Action and a professor of law at Suffolk University Law School in Boston. I share many of Mr. Yamada's concerns.

(By Professor David Yamada)

In the hours and weeks that followed the September 11 attacks, thousands of unionized police officers and firefighters representing the diversity of America secured the damaged sites and sifted through the horrible destruction. Few events in American history have more strongly attested to the value of having dedicated public employees on the front lines of our civil defense network.

Nevertheless, the Bush Administration's proposed Homeland Security legislation threatens to make second class citizens of federal airport security workers who are hired to screen passengers and to inspect packages and baggage. If Congress approves the bill in its current form, newly hired airport screening personnel could be denied all basic labor protections. These include the rights to join a union, to negotiate over wages and working conditions, to be free from discrimination and harassment, and to be protected against retaliation for whistle blowing.

This very real possibility is rooted in a little-known loophole in the recently enacted Aviation and Transportation Security Act. The loophole allows the Department of Transportation, "notwithstanding any other provision of law," to "employ, appoint, discipline, terminate, and fix the compensation, terms, and conditions of employment" for all federal airport screening personnel. Read literally, this allows the DOT to fix summarily all terms of employment for airport security workers, without regard to any existing federal labor law protections.

The recently proposed Homeland Security bill would transfer the airport screening functions specified in the Aviation and Transportation Security Act to the new Department of Homeland Security. The bill further provides that the Secretary of Homeland Security will be granted all powers previously accorded to the federal agencies absorbed into the new Department. This means that the Secretary will inherit the same alarming carte blanche authority originally granted to the DOT to unconditionally mandate all terms of employment for airport security screeners.

This short, seemingly insignificant provision carries huge implications. First, it obviously means that thousands of new federal employees could be denied their basic labor rights at the whim of a single Cabinet member. In addition, it would send an unprecedented message that fundamental worker protections, by their very existence, are inconsistent with the goal of national security. Indeed, if airport baggage screeners can be required to give up these civil rights under the guise of national security, can police officers, firefighters, and even privately employed transportation workers be far behind?

Finally, stripping these employees of their labor protections would defeat the goal of hiring a skilled and motivated workforce for this important security function. Recall that one of the original concerns in light of September 11 was that, because airport screening workers were so poorly paid, the security companies had trouble attracting qualified personnel, and that many of these workers reported for duty exhausted from working other jobs to pay their bills. How many qualified, trustworthy individuals will apply for and remain in a job in which giving up virtually all basic legal protections is a condition of employment?

Hard-won legal protections for workers should not be sacrificed in the name of national security without valid, convincing reasons for doing so. In this case, the manner in which airport security workers have been put at risk of losing their rights smacks of an insidious attempt to "sneak one through" Congress, taking undue advantage of the public's understandable fears about the safety of air travel. Because the Aviation and Transportation Security Act already spells out in detail the necessary skill levels and security clearances for airport screeners, there is no principled reason also to require a wholesale removal of their labor safeguards.

Consideration of the Homeland Security bill now provides Congress with an opportunity to undo the hidden damage of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act. In the aftermath of September 11, President Bush stood in solidarity with police officers and firefighters at Ground Zero. Against a background of terrible tragedy, he symbolically affirmed the importance of rank-and-file public workers in American society. Hopefully the letter of the proposed Homeland Security law will be amended to reflect the spirit of that vital gesture.

RECOGNIZING THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF DR. JAMES WITHERS IN ADDRESSING THE HEALTH CARE NEEDS OF PITTSBURGH'S HOMELESS POPULATION

HON. MICHAEL F. DOYLE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge the work of Dr. James Withers, the Director of Operation Safety Net in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Dr. Withers recently received national recognition from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation's Community Health Leadership Program. The prestigious award includes a $120,000 grant to provide additional funding for his program.

Dr. Withers, a Forest Hills internist and member of Mercy Hospital's medical and teaching staffs, founded Operation Safety Net to address the health care needs of Pittsburgh's homeless population. The program partners volunteer medical professionals and medical students with former homeless people to provide medical care to the city's unsheltered homeless.

Dr. Withers launched Operation Safety Net in 1993, after spending almost a year visiting Pittsburgh's streets dressed as a homeless person to learn about their health care needs. He and a friend walked down countless dark streets, alleys, and abandoned buildings to find people in need of medical care. He even carried his medical supplies in a backpack to ease their concerns.

Now, the 16 Operation Safety Net teams of volunteers, students and former homeless, do much the same, searching out those in need of care. Dr. Withers, or "Doc Jim" as he is known on the street, still walks with the teams several nights a week.

The project now provides care for about 900 patients annually—the majority are substance abusers and many suffer from mental illness.

In addition to helping Pittsburgh's unsheltered homeless population, Operation Safety Net also offers a valuable experience for the medical students and residents who participate as volunteers—giving them a hands-on lesson in caring for disadvantaged patients.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to recognize Dr. James Withers for this national award and express my gratitude for his determination and leadership. His lesson reaches well beyond the medical students and residents who volunteer with Operation Safety Net. It carries a message for all of us.

Dr. Withers' nominator for the award put it best by saying, "Jim's advocacy, creativity, and leadership are tireless. He teaches all who are willing to listen, in Pittsburgh and beyond, that each of the homeless has a name and that each has a story."

CONGRATULATING THE CALIFORNIA ARMENIAN HOME

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the California Armenian Home on the occasion of celebrating 50 years of dedication and service to the needs of the elderly people in the Armenian community on September 21, 2002. The California Armenian Home was established to provide housing for the aging population who could no longer live on their own.

In 1952, the California Home for the Armenian Aged opened with accommodations for 35 persons in downtown Fresno, California. Since its inception, the Home has evolved into a community of 168 residents and is considered to have one of the highest standards of senior care. The highly skilled nursing staff provides excellent care for assisted living.

The California Armenian Home was dedicated in honor of the K. Arakelian Foundation and the Armenian-American Citizens' League. Prior to the Home's grand opening, sponsorship of only eleven rooms in the Home had been assured, leaving twenty-four rooms without sponsorship. Mrs. K. Arakelian, a widow of one of the Home's founders, was concerned and decided to coordinate a "Grand Opening Shower." More than 600 persons attended the shower and brought gifts such as blankets, sheets, pillows, and cash donations to help complete furnishing the Home.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to congratulate the California Armenian Home of Fresno on the occasion of their 50th year anniversary. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing the California Armenian Home many more years of continued success.

A GRAVE AND GATHERING DANGER

HON. STEPHEN HORN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, the House will soon take up the question of whether to authorize the President to use any necessary means, including military force, to require Iraq to abide by its agreements with the United Nations to destroy its stockpiles of chemical and biological weapons. There is of course no question that Saddam Hussein has repeatedly violated these agreements and that he continues to pursue the development of weapons of mass destruction. The only real question is whether Congress and the United Nations will enforce these international resolutions.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the President and I believe that it is important that we act promptly on this issue. The President made clear in his address to the General Assembly of the United Nations that there is a clear and compelling case for forcing Saddam Hussein to obey UN agreements or face real and immediate consequences. As we prepare to debate this issue, I urge my colleagues to review the President's remarks because I believe this speech not only could help avert a new Persian Gulf war but also could help restore credibility to a United Nations that has been drifting toward irrelevance.

I have been a strong and consistent supporter of the United Nations. I believe it is essential that we have a strong, credible and effective international forum where disputes can be debated and resolved without bloodshed, where problems that stretch beyond the boundaries and resources of any one nation can be tackled by the joint efforts of many countries and where those who flout the laws of civilized behavior not only face condemnation but international penalties with real bite.

In his speech, President Bush presented two challenges. One was to Saddam Hussein to abide by a series of UN resolutions over the past 12 years requiring him to halt production of weapons of mass destruction, to end internal political repression in Iraq and to abide by the terms of the ceasefire that ended the Gulf War. The other challenge was to the United Nations to enforce its own resolutions, if Saddam continues to murder and maim within Iraq while furiously working to complete his arsenal of chemical, biological and nuclear weapons.

By ordering Saddam to disarm and then failing to take any effective action to enforce those orders, the United Nations has endangered its own credibility. Since the 1991 ceasefire, the UN Security Council has issued 12 specific demands for Iraq to comply with requirements to eliminate weapons of mass destruction and other steps. Iraq has repeatedly and brazenly refused. As a result, UN weapons inspection teams left Iraq four years ago, ending any check on Saddam's growing arsenal.

President Bush made clear that this steady drift into danger will not be allowed to continue. Saddam has a well-documented history of invading neighboring nations like Iran and Kuwait, and using highly lethal concoctions of poison gas and nerve agents despite all prohibitions in international law and in civilized behavior. He also has a fully documented history of gassing entire villages of opposition groups within Iraq, as in 1988 when attacks against Kurdish villages killed hundreds of women and children.

The President puts it very simply: "The history, the logic and the facts lead to one conclusion: Saddam Hussein's regime is a grave and gathering danger. To suggest otherwise is to hope against the evidence. To assume this regime's good faith is to bet the lives of millions and the peace of the world in a reckless gamble, and this is a risk we must not take."

President Bush then posed two unavoidable questions that only the United Nations can now answer: "Are Security Council resolutions to be honored and enforced or cast aside without consequences? Will the United Nations serve the purpose of its founding or will it be irrelevant?"

The only adequate response to those questions is forceful and unequivocal action by the United Nations to require that Iraq immediately comply with the terms of the 1991 ceasefire and subsequent UN requirements, beginning with the complete elimination of weapons of mass destruction. These demands are not onerous or outrageous. They simply require that Iraq abide by the same standards of human decency that guide every civilized nation. To demand less would be to abandon millions of innocent people within Iraq and to endanger millions more throughout the rest of the world. It would also set the precedent that the malignant whims of a determined dictator can reduce the United Nations to a hollow debating society that cannot uphold the promise of world peace.

A war against Iraq by a renewed international coalition or by the United States alone would be a grave and sobering step with many risks and unknowns. We cannot and should not take such a step without full consideration by the United Nations and the Congress, as the President has promised. But the dangers of continued inaction, of endless dithering, are too frightening to ignore. We must act to support the President.

IN HONOR OF JACQUELINE ELLAM AUTRY, RECIPIENT OF THE HONORARY CONGRESSIONAL HORIZON AWARD

HON. ADAM B. SCHIFF

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Jacqueline Autry, who will receive the Honorary Congressional Horizon Award on September 27, 2002 at the Autry Museum of Western Heritage. The Honorary Congressional Horizon Award is presented annually to individuals who have personally contributed to expanding the opportunities for all Americans, and who have set an exceptional example for young people through their successes in life.

Success has always followed Jackie Autry. As a young woman in 1959, she started her career at Security First National Bank, working first as a switchboard operator, then as an Assistant Manager of Operations, and then Manager. At the young age of thirty-two, she was appointed to the position of Vice President, where she remained until July 17, 1981, when she married the American cowboy legend, Gene Autry.

Mrs. Autry has clearly demonstrated her selfless devotion to the community of Los Angeles. Her invaluable contributions to the community include serving as President of the Palm Springs chapter of the American Red Cross and serving as Treasurer and a member of the Board of Trustees of the Eisenhower Medical Center and Hospital. She has also served as President of Community Blood Bank of the Desert and currently serves as Director and President of the Autry Foundation.

Mrs. Autry also has the venerable distinction of being the only woman ever to serve on the Major League Baseball Executive Council and Board of Directors. She continues to serve the sporting community while acting as Honorary President of the American League of Major League Baseball.

Over the years, Mrs. Autry's remarkable breadth of involvement with the community has been a benefit and an inspiration to many. I am proud to honor the contributions of Mrs. Autry. It is through her accomplishments that we are inspired to believe in the power of each American to make a difference in our nation. In acknowledgement of her service, I ask all Members of Congress to join me in recognizing the achievements and contributions of Jacqueline Autry.

IDAHO PUBLIC LANDS

HON. MICHAEL K. SIMPSON

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, the people of Idaho are fortunate to have the incredible resources of the public lands for work and play. Our public lands provide forest, mineral, and grazing resources, as well as access to a wide variety of outdoor recreation pursuits. The beauty of Idaho's mountains and rivers draw thousands of tourists to our state, injecting millions of dollars into our state's economy and supporting thousands of small businesses. So it is fitting to draw attention to an expedition that recently passed through Idaho.

American Frontiers: A Public Lands Journey is drawing attention to America's public lands legacy through a two month, 3,000 mile journey entirely on public lands and waters. Two teams of adventurers, including teachers, a firefighter, a nurse, a reporter, and several outdoor enthusiasts began this trek on August 1, one team starting from the Canadian border, the other from the Mexican border. The two teams will join together on September 28, 2002 in Salt Lake City on National Public Lands Day. The northern group journeyed into Idaho while they were on the Continental Divide Trail, and hit the halfway point in their journey in the Targhee National Forest.

We all treasure the special moments spent in awe of the natural wonders around us, and stand to gain from a better understanding of America's public lands legacy. My thanks go to the Public Lands Interpretive Association and the many sponsors and partners organizing this special journey. I encourage you to read more about this incredible journey on America's public lands by visiting the interactive website www.americanfrontiers.net.

REPRESSION OF MINORITIES CONTINUES IN INDIA—SIKHS, MUSLIMS, CHRISTIANS CONTINUE TO BE TARGETED

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am distressed about two recent articles that show the continuing repression of minorities in India. One article appeared in The Hindu, an Indian newspaper. It said that over 5,000 Muslims were killed in the violence this spring in Gujarat. Then the Times of India reported that a group of Indian police officers fired on a group of peaceful Sikh protestors. These articles show that minorities such as Sikhs, Christians, Muslims, and others continue to suffer the worst kind of repression in "democratic" India.

In Gujarat, the police were quoted as saying that they were ordered to stand aside and let the Muslims be killed. This was strangely reminiscent of the 1984 massacre of Sikhs in Delhi. It is part of India's pattern of repression of its minorities. Now, it comes out that peaceful Sikh protestors who were simply holding a peaceful protest against what they see as desecration of their gurus and their scriptures were fired upon by Indian police. What kind of a democracy fires on peaceful protestors engaged in peaceful action?

Christians continue to be oppressed as well. Churches have been burned, prayer halls have been attacked, nuns have been raped, and priests have been murdered. Militant Hindu nationalists burned a missionary and his two young sons to death while they slept in their jeep. A few years ago, police fired on a Christian religious festival that was peacefully promoting the theme "Jesus Is the Answer."

Mr. Speaker, it is time to stop U.S. aid to India. It is time to declare our support for self-determination for the Sikhs of Khalistan, the Muslims of Kashmir, the Christians of Nagaland, and all the peoples demanding their freedom from India. We cannot just stand by and allow India's repression to go on with our support. Self-determination is everyone's birthright. Freedom is everyone's birthright. It is time for America to follow our principles and support it.

The Council of Khalistan issued an excellent press release on the police firing at the peaceful demonstrators. I would like to insert that into the RECORD at this time. In addition, I would like to place the article from The Hindu into the RECORD to show my colleagues the ongoing repression of minorities in supposedly democratic India.

INDIAN POLICE FIRE AT PEACEFUL SIKH PROTESTORS

INDIA AGAIN SHOWS IT IS NOT A DEMOCRACY

WASHINGTON, DC, August 5, 2002.—The Times of India reported on August 1 that police in Malout fired on a crowd of peaceful protestors, injuring many of them. Several have been admitted to Civil Hospital, Malout. Eight protestors were arrested. The police used tear gas on the demonstrators. Two people suffered bullet wounds, according to the article.

The demonstrators were protesting against a so-called religious function organized by the Divya Jyoti Jagriti Sansthan which was aimed at undermining the Sikh religion and slandering the Sikh gurus, according to the Times of India.

"Like the attack on the Golden Temple, this incident shows that there is no place in India for Sikhs," said Dr. Gurmit Singh Aulakh, President of the Council of Khalistan. Khalistan is the Sikh homeland declared independent on October 7, 1987. "The Indian government is dedicated to wiping out the Sikh religion," he said. "Nations that do not have political power perish. The only way to ensure that the Sikh religion can survive is to liberate Khalistan as soon as possible," he said.

"This attack shows that India is not a democracy, despite its pretensions," said Dr. Aulakh. "Democracies don't attack minorities and minority religions. Democracies don't commit genocide."

Indian security forces have murdered over 250,000 Sikhs since 1984, according to figures compiled by the Punjab State Magistracy and human-rights organizations. These figures were published in the book "The Politics of Genocide" by Inderjit Singh Jaijee. India has also killed over 200,000 Christians in Nagaland since 1947, over 80,000 Kashmiris since 1988, and tens of thousands of other minorities.

A report issued last year by the Movement Against State Repression (MASR) shows that India admitted that it held 52,268 political prisoners under the repressive "Terrorist and Disruptive Activities Act" (TADA) even though it expired in 1995. Many have been in illegal custody since 1984. There has been no list published of those who were acquitted under TADA and those who are still rotting in Indian jails. Additionally, according to Amnesty International, there are tens of thousands of other minorities being held as political prisoners. On February 28, 42 Members of the U.S. Congress from both parties wrote to President Bush to urge him to work for the release of Sikh political prisoners. The MASR report quotes the Punjab Civil Magistracy as writing "if we add up the figures of the last few years the number of innocent persons killed would run into lakhs [lsqb]hundreds of thousands.[rsqb]"

In November 1994, the Indian newspaper Hitavada reported that the Indian government paid the late governor of Punjab, Surendra Nath, $1.5 billion to organize and support covert terrorist activity in Punjab, Khalistan, and in neighboring Kashmir. The book "Soft Target", written by Canadian journalists Brian McAndrew and Zuhair Kashmeri, shows that the Indian government blew up its own airliner in 1985 to blame Sikhs and justify further repression. It quotes an agent of the Canadian Security Investigation Service (CSIS) as saying, "If you really want to clear up the incidents quickly, take vans down to the Indian High Commission and the consulates in Toronto and Vancouver. We know it and they know it that they are involved." On January 2, the Washington Times reported that India sponsors cross-border terrorism in the Pakistani province of Sindh.

Christians have been victims of a campaign of terror that has been going on since Christmas 1998. Churches have been burned, Christian schools and prayer halls have been attacked, nuns have been raped, and priests have been killed. Missionary Graham Staines and his two sons were burned alive while they slept in their jeep by militant Hindu members of the RSS, the parent organization of the ruling BJP. Earlier this year, over 5,000 Muslims were murdered by Hindus in Gujarat, according to The Hindu. These attacks were planned by the government, according to human-rights organizations, and news reports quoted a police officer as saying they had orders not to intervene to stop the violence.

"India's efforts to eliminate the Sikh religion are doomed to fail," Dr. Aulakh said. "This terrible act of police brutality shows that India is neither secular nor democratic, and it is time to launch a Shantmai Morcha to liberate our homeland, Khalistan, so that the Sikh Nation can finally enjoy the glow of freedom that was promised to us in 1947. Sovereignty is our birthright, and self-determination is the cornerstone of democracy. It is time for self-determination for all the peoples of South Asia."

GUJARAT RIOT TOLL COULD BE UP TO 5,000

JAIPUR, April 15.—Various social and political groups and human rights organizations, which held a public meeting here over the week-end to protest against the recent violence in Gujarat, demanded removal of the Narendra Modi Government and spoke out against the move to hold elections to the State Assembly prior to the return of normalcy.

The meeting addressed by K.S. Subramanyam, former Director-General of Police, Tripura; Magsaysay Award winner, Aruna Roy; noted economist, Prabhat Patnaik; Renuka Khanna, PUCL Activist from Baroda in Gujarat and others, asked for immediate steps to restore people's faith in the system in the riot-ravaged Gujarat.

Presenting the report of a delegation comprising prominent citizens who toured the affected areas of Gujarat, Mr. Subramanyam, who was a member of the delegation, said the police in Gujarat had extended a helping hand to the rioters on the instructions of the Chief Minister, Narendra Modi.

The official records speak of over 700 casualties in Gujarat riots but they had learnt that the number of those killed could be between 2,000 and 5,000, he observed. "Senior administrative as well as police officers confided with us that in a meeting with the officials called on the eve of the VHP-announced bandh of February 28, Mr. Modi had asked them to honour Hindu sentiments". This directive made the officers passive spectators to what went on in Gujarat on the day of bandh and thereafter, Mr. Subramanyam said.

He also said the delegation could see that the Godhra carnage itself was not the result of any pre-planned strategy but the outcome of a tussle between the Kar Sevaks in the train and the people living in the slum clusters near the railway station. Ms. Renuka Khanna said the police colluding with the rioters to wreak havoc with the lives and property of the minority community, would only lead to the birth of terrorism.

Ms. Aruna Roy said it was for villagers to preserve the pluralistic culture of India's rural areas and stop trouble-makers from disturbing the social fabric.

Prof. Patnaik traced the roots of the social and communal unrest to the growing unemployment and poverty in the wake of globalisation.

The meeting, which held the Gujarat Government, its police and administration fully responsible for the killings in that State, also found them guilty of discriminating against the victims and their families later, as well by denying them relief and compensation. By giving a clean chit to Mr. Modi, the National Democratic Alliance Government at the Centre too shared the guilt of the genocide in Gujarat, the meeting noted.

TRIBUTE TO JIM AMOS FOR YEARS OF SERVICE

HON. RANDY "DUKE" CUNNINGHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Jim Amos for his contributions to the San Diego community. Jim retired this month as President and CEO of Mail Boxes Etc., Inc., which is headquartered in my district.

Jim's professional accomplishments are indeed laudable. What I want to recognize today, however, is the mark Jim has left on San Diego through his commitment to philanthropy.

In 1998, Jim founded the MBE We Deliver Dreams Foundation, a non-profit organization committed to improving the lives of children who are victims of abuse, neglect, poverty, violence or illness.

The MBE Foundation has grown rapidly since its founding, and in that time has delivered numerous dreams to children throughout the world. I am particularly grateful for the Foundation's Community Care Fund; a separate fund dedicated to making dreams come true for San Diego youth.

Jim may be departing the San Diego community, but he is leaving an indelible impression upon it, and for that I thank him. I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing Jim's commitment to charity and his success with the MBE Foundation, both of which serve as examples to us all.

IN RECOGNITION OF JEFF LUDWIG, SENIOR VICE PRESIDENT OF NAI MICHAEL COS.

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to give recognition to Mr. Jeff Ludwig, senior vice president of Nai Michael Cos. As a result of his personal initiative to become a community emergency response team member, Mr. Ludwig was able to assist the community of La Plata, Maryland in constructing a new Town Center after it was hit by a powerful tornado in April 2002. After President Bush's State of the Union Address in January, Mr. Ludwig responded to the President's call to volunteerism by signing up for the Citizen Corps to become a member of the new emergency response group. He took advantage of online training manuals and completed his course, despite the fact that the Homeland Security Program had not yet begun to train citizen volunteers. This motivation prepared him to assist his community on April 28. It also makes him one of the first citizens corps community emergency response team leaders to take actions in the Nation's history.

When the tornado struck La Plata, Mr. Ludwig teamed up with the Facchina Group to create a plan to build a temporary Town Center. Not only did he help initiate this plan, he put in 18 hour days on the construction site, attacking problems, maintaining worker morale, and even buying dinner for the crew. The project was completed in eight days under his strong leadership. Mr. Ludwig's volunteerism is a strong symbol of the impact dedicated Americans can have on their communities in times of crisis.

Mr. Speaker, and colleagues, please join me in thanking Jeff Ludwig for his commitment to his community and congratulating him on his tremendous successes.

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT J. SPAZZARINI OF HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA

HON. ROBERT E. (BUD) CRAMER, JR.

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Mr. Robert J. Spazzarini of Huntsville, Alabama as he celebrates his retirement from thirty six years in the Legal Office of the United States Army Aviation and Missile Command at Redstone Arsenal, Alabama.

Robert Spazzarini first came to Redstone Arsenal in 1966 as a contract attorney. He served in various positions in this office and was appointed to the Senior Executive Service and named Chief Counsel in February 1997. He has a reputation of providing excellent legal services, which were demonstrated when he successfully led the consolidation of two legal offices into one AMCOM after the 1995 Base Realignment and Closure.

Mr. Spazzarini has been the recipient of numerous awards for his outstanding service to AMCOM including being named a Fellow, National Institute of Public Affairs. He was the first recipient of the Francis J. Buckley Managerial Award presented annually by the Command Counsel, U.S. Army Materiel Command. In addition to these specific awards, Mr. Spazzarini has been honored with the respect of his staff, peers, and the Command's leadership due to his expertise, professionalism, and high standards of leadership.

Though the people at Redstone Arsenal and in the Huntsville community will miss Mr. Spazzarini's exceptional legal services, I join his colleagues, family and friends today in wishing him the best in retirement and a well-deserved rest.

IN MEMORIUM OF BOB HAYES,

HON. CORRINE BROWN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is with sorrow that I announce the passing of my friend, Bob Hayes, at the age of 59.

"Bullet" Bob, a Jacksonville native, was known as the world's fastest man for his efforts in the 1964 Tokyo Olympics. In addition to winning the gold medal in the hundred-meter race, tying the world-record of 10.05 seconds, he also anchored the 400-meter relay team to victory with a time of 8.6. Not a bad day's work for the then Florida A&M junior.

For many athletes, the Olympics would be the culmination of an athletic career, but Hayes, switching sports to football and recruited by the Cowboys (after finishing up with the Rattlers), went on to redefine how football is played. In his rookie year, Bullet had 1,003 yards and 12 touchdowns, and his speed forced opposing teams to come up with zone defenses now common in pro play.

In 1972, when Dallas won the Super Bowl, Hayes became the only athlete to earn a Super Bowl ring and an Olympic gold medal. He retired in 1975 having made 9 consecutive playoff appearances, 3 Pro Bowl showings, two Super Bowl appearances, and earning a Cowboys receiving record of 371 catches for 7,414 yards with 71 touchdowns.

Hayes did not forget his roots, and returned home to Jacksonville. He remained active in the Bob Hayes Invitational Track and Field Meet, now in its 38th year. At the Bob Hayes Invitational in Jacksonville, 3500 high school and middle school athletes gain experience in competing on a national level against world class competition. He also attended as many Florida A&M games as he possibly could.

Just last year Hayes was the 11th inductee to the prestigious Dallas Cowboys' Ring of Honor. And, earlier this year, he received the Lifetime Achievement Award at the Seventh Annual Florida Sports Awards.

Bob "Bullet" Hayes died last Wednesday. He is survived by his mother, a brother and a sister, and five children.

I also submit the following article from the September 20th issue of the Gainesville Sun into the RECORD.

JACKSON REMEMBERS HAYES

Bob Hayes' speed made a difference for blacks during the tumultuous 1960s, the Rev. Jesse Jackson said Thursday.

"He was such a lift for our generation," said Jackson, who played football against Hayes and the powerful Florida A&M teams of the early 1960s. "He was the best in the whole world at what he did."

Jackson's North Carolina A&T team was just one of many schools routed on an annual basis by Hayes and the Rattlers.

"You couldn't catch him. No one could," he said. "The fact is nobody could catch Bob Hayes in the whole world."

HONORING THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF MARC NATHANSON AS CHAIRMAN OF THE BROADCASTING BOARD OF GOVERNORS

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT

OF MISSOURI

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of his retirement from the Broadcasting Board of Governors, it is a pleasure to recognize Marc Nathanson, who was named to the Board in 1995 and has served as its Chairman since 1999. Marc is a very dear friend to us; a person of the highest integrity and intelligence and it is with considerable pride that we share with our colleagues some of the many challenges he faced during his tenure and the outstanding manner in which he has served.

Marc led the BBG through its transition to independence in the Fall of 1999, ensuring the appropriate distribution of resources and authorities as the responsibilities of the U.S. Information Agency were divided between the new broadcasting entity and the State Department.

He set the standard for cooperative relationships between the State Department and the White House in a manner that protected the journalistic independence of the broadcasters, yet supported the new agency's ability to carry out its mission to present the policies of the United States clearly and effectively.

Marc chaired the Board during strong tests of its legislated role as a firewall—both in ensuring that the broadcast entities acted according to strong journalistic standards and principles, and ensuring that the broadcasters were protected from unwarranted interference from the State Department.

He led the Board through periods of foreign policy crisis, where the BBG's ability to surge its broadcasting to meet foreign policy priorities was severely tested. For example, during the crisis in the Balkans, the BBG established the "Ring Around Serbia"—a series of transmitters quickly established to allow the people of the region to have accurate news and information about the war around them, and of the crimes being committed against civilian populations. The success of this effort was evident when Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty was named the most popular radio station in the region at the height of the crisis.

He faced the challenge of terrorism, and ensured that the BBG was a strong part of the war on terrorism as the agency's broadcasts surged in the Dari and Pashto languages to Afghanistan and other parts of the Middle East and South Asia.

Marc challenged the agency to confront the need for new broadcast activities in this region where news and information is either government controlled or unavailable. He chaired the Board as it created the agency's new Middle East Radio Network ("Radio Sawa"), putting U.S. international broadcasting high in the ratings among young Arab audiences throughout the Middle East.

He helped lead the agency into the 21st Century by stressing the use of new technologies and the need to provide programming targeted at key audiences. He emphasized the need for more effective research, both to evaluate current programming and to lay the foundation for new programming, allowing the agency to more efficiently use its limited resources.

He shared a vision with other BBG members for enhanced television programming worldwide—and especially to Islamic audiences—encouraging the consideration of opportunities for television broadcasting to the Middle East.

Mr. Speaker, we invite our colleagues to join us in congratulating Marc Nathanson for his many accomplishments as head of the Broadcasting Board of Governors and to thank him for giving so freely of his time and expertise to help deliver America's message abroad.

PROJECT ROFEH RECOGNIZES LEADERS

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, for several years I have had the very distinct honor of sharing with our colleagues information about the important charitable work done by ROFEH International and the New England Chassidic Center. Under the leadership of Grand Rabbi Levi Y. Horowitz, the New England Chassidic Center and ROFEH International do an excellent job of helping people take full advantage of the wonderful medical facilities we have in Boston. Through their efforts, families are able to come to Boston when members of those families need medical care, and find their needs tended to so that they can focus on the important job of being supportive of that individual in need of medical care. I am very proud that this innovative program that does so much for people at a time of their-greatest need is headquartered in the district I am privileged to represent, and I am pleased to put here into the RECORD of our proceedings a list of those individuals who are receiving awards from ROFEH at a November 10 dinner, in the hopes that this will inspire people elsewhere in the country to emulate this creative work.

Mr. Speaker, here is the list of the award winners and a brief description of their efforts which does not do full justice to them, but does give some indication of how important they have been to ROFEH's vital work.

Dr. Eugene Braunwald is the Distinguished Hersey Professor of Medicine at Harvard Medical School, Faculty Dean and Chief Academic Officer of the Partners HealthCare System founded by the Brigham and Women's and Massachusetts General Hospitals. He is the only cardiologist who is a member of the National Academy of Sciences. In 2000 the living Nobel Prize winners in medicine voted Dr. Braunwald as "the person who has contributed the most to cardiology in recent years". The doctor is a Holocaust survivor. Dr. Eugene Braunwald, will receive the coveted "Lillian and Harry Andler Memorial Award".

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gann in recognition of their devotion to ROFEH International will have the newly renovated ROFEH International facility named in their honor, "The Joseph and Rae Gann ROFEH International Residence Facility". Mr. and Mrs. Gann have been affiliated with the Bostoner Rebbe, Grand Rabbi Levi Y. Horowitz for over 50 years and they continue to be strong supporters of ROFEH International.

Others to be bestowed with special laudatory communal awards are Mr. Irwin Chafetz and Mr. A. Joseph Stern.

Mr. Irwin Chafetz is the director of Interface Group-Massachusetts, Inc., a privately held company that owns and operates GWV International.

He has been instrumental in the development of ROFEH International and the renovation of its residential facility for the benefit of the families and the desperately ill, who come to Boston for medical help.

Mr. Chafetz received a Boston University Distinguished Alumni Award in 2000, and was honored by the Massachusetts Anti-Defamation League in 2001. He is a member of the executive board of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) and is an active participant at Chabad House of Lexington.

Mr. Chafetz grew up in Dorchester, Massachusetts. He lives in Brookline with Roberta his wife. They have two sons and four grandchildren.

Mr. A. Joseph Stern is a developer of residential and commercial construction. Mr. Stern's list of accomplishments as a builder of community needs is truly impressive. Despite his busy schedule, he has devoted and continues to devote substantial amounts of time, effort and material resources to a host of worthy causes.

Mr. Stern has a long family connection with the Bostoner Rebbe, Shlita. Recently he has been most helpful in the Rebbe's effort to reconstruct the ROFEH International building, making it possible to house the desperately ill and their families.

Mr. Stern continues to live up to his reputation as a builder of Torah and Chesed. He credits his accomplishments to the traditions handed down by his parents and grandparents.

Mr. Irwin Chafetz and Mrs. A. Joseph Stern will be presented with the ROFEH International Master Builders Award.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in recognizing and celebrating the anniversary of The Reverend Dr. D. P. Neely's sixty-four years in the ministry.

HOMELAND EMERGENCY RESPONDERS ORGANIZATION (HERO) ACT

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the HERO Act, the Homeland Emergency Responders Organization Act.

This Act will establish the Office of National Preparedness within the Federal Emergency Management Agency. The HERO Act will improve the ability of first responders to prepare for and respond to terrorist attacks by getting grants to them directly through this new Office.

In the past several months, I've received numerous letters and calls from state and community leaders on the critical issue of homeland security. Two overriding themes have surfaced again and again:

We must allocate more resources to homeland security.

And, those resources must go directly to cities and other local governments.

I believe that the best ideas on how to make the hometown more secure come from the hometown.

The HERO Act is a federal grant program that will improve the readiness of first responders at both the local and state levels. Since it utilizes an existing agency—FEMA—and its regional offices, federal grants will get to those who need them most, when they need them most—NOW!

The Director of the new Office will make grants available to first responders through each of FEMA's 10 regional offices. Each of these regional offices serves several states, as well as Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana's. Eligibility for grants will be based on criteria such as population density and proximity to international borders.

Dispersing funds directly to first responders, like the Broward County Sheriff's Office or the Hollywood, Florida Police Department, will enable local communities to concentrate on their highest priorities—training, purchasing communications equipment, or upgrading emergency operating centers.

The new Office will also distribute grants to each of the 50 states. The state grants can be used—to establish or upgrade state-wide emergency notification systems, plan terrorism response exercises, or to coordinate inter- and intra-state antiterrorism programs.

First responders in cities and towns across America need our help to make the homeland more secure. They, in fact we, can't wait for a new agency to be approved, and then created, before we take the first steps towards a more secure homeland. Local communities need our help and support now.

I am looking forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to move this bill as quickly as possible. Time is of the essence. Let's make the homeland more secure.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JANE ZIMMERMAN

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to recognize Ms. Jane Zimmerman of Durango, Colorado for her tireless dedication and the irreplaceable contributions she has made to her community. Ms. Zimmerman has served in the Durango Area Chamber Resort Association for over 19 years, overseeing a variety of community projects and activities that have immeasurably benefited the City of Durango. As she leaves her position of Executive Director, I would like to highlight her accomplishments before this body of Congress and this nation. –

Since beginning her career at the Chamber in 1983, Ms. Zimmerman has held a variety of leadership positions that have utilized her knowledge and expertise toward worthy causes. She has directed the Durango Area Chamber Resort Association through a multiplicity of challenges and transitional periods.

Under Ms. Zimmerman's watchful eye, the Durango Chamber of Commerce became the Durango Area Chamber Resort Association, DACRA, the transition was a new and shaky venture for the city but Ms. Zimmerman lead the organization through this uncertain period and into financial stability and success.

Ms. Zimmerman has also been instrumental in many other projects that have benefited the community. Through increased communication and coordination efforts, she has helped to bridge relationships between the business and education communities, providing valuable revenue for Durango's educational programs. Ms. Zimmerman organized and directed a High School Leadership program that today boasts the active involvement of students from all three high schools in La Plata County.

Over the summer, Ms. Zimmerman dedicated much of her time to forming the new La Plata County Disaster Recovery Coalition, helping to aid distressed victims of Colorado's forest fires. Ms. Zimmerman met with over 100 interested parties and formed the coalition to provide a proactive approach to aiding fire victims with badly needed supplies and shelter.

Mr. Speaker, it is a honor and a privilege to recognize Ms. Jane Zimmerman before this body of Congress and this nation for the countless contributions she has made to Durango. She is truly an irreplaceable asset to the welfare and vitality of the entire community, and I commend her for the hardwork and determination she has given to such a reputable and worthwhile pursuit. Thanks for your service Jane and I wish you all the best in your future endeavors.

IN MEMORY OF KATE GILL MARRIOTT MADGWICK

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of Kate Gill Madgwick of Terrell, Texas, the loving wife of Terrell Mayor Henry Madgwick and an outstanding citizen, who passed away in December of last year.

Born and raised in Terrell, Kate graduated from Terrell High School and attended the University of Texas, where she earned a degree in English Literature. Upon receiving her degree, she chose to serve her country during World War II as an aide to the American Red Cross in England. After returning to Terrell, she remained active in the community through her membership in the Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd.

She was a devoted wife, mother and grandmother and is survived by her husband, Henry; son Bruce Ragan Sanders of Denver; daughter Susan Sanders McCrum of Dallas; grandchildren Cole and Kelly McCrum; and inlaws Doris and Peter Gibbs of England. She was preceded in death by her previous husband of 40 years, Albert James Sanders of Tiverton, England.

All who knew Kate will miss her dearly, and she will certainly be remembered by those whose many lives she touched in Terrell. As we adjourn today, let us do so in memory of this outstanding citizen and my good friend—Kate Madgwick.

POST-HUSSEIN IRAQ

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, as we begin to discuss our options in Iraq it is important that we recognize the difficulties of a post-Hussein Iraq. I commend Thomas Friedman's column of September 1, 2002 to my colleagues, which I ask to have inserted into the RECORD.

"As I think about President Bush's plans to take out Saddam Hussein and rebuild Iraq into a democracy, one question gnaws at me: Is Iraq the way it is today because Saddam Hussein is the way he is? Or is Saddam Hussein the way he is because Iraq is the way it is?

"I mean, is Iraq a totalitarian dictatorship under a cruel, iron-fisted man because the country is actually an Arab Yugoslavia—a highly tribalized, artificial state, drawn up by the British, consisting of Shiites in the south, Kurds in the north and Sunnis in the center—whose historical ethnic rivalries can be managed only by a Saddam-like figure?

"Or, has Iraq, by now, congealed into a real nation? And once the cruel fist of Saddam is replaced by a more enlightened leadership, Iraq's talented, educated people will slowly produce a federal democracy.

"The answer is critical, because any U.S. invasion of Iraq will leave the U.S. responsible for nation-building there. Invade Iraq and we own Iraq. And once we own it, we will have to rebuild it, and since that is a huge task, we need to understand what kind of raw material we'll be working with.

"It is instructive in this regard to quickly review Iraq's history before Saddam. Romper Room it was not. It was a saga of intrigue, murder and endless coups involving the different ethnic and political factions that were thrown together inside Iraq's borders by the British. In July 1958, Iraq's King Faisal was gunned down in his courtyard by military plotters led by Brig. Abdel Karim Kassem and Col. Abdul Salam Arif. A few months later, Kassem ousted Arif for being too pro-Nasserite. Around the same time a young Saddam tried, but failed, to kill Kassem, who himself executed a slew of Iraqi Nasserites in Mosul in 1959.

"In 1963, Arif came back from exile and killed Kassem. A short time later Arif, and the Baath Party thugs around him, savagely slaughtered and tortured thousands of left-wingers and Communists all across Iraq. Arif ruled until 1966, when he was killed in a helicopter crash and was succeeded by his brother, who was toppled in 1968 by Saddam and his clan from the village of Tikrit. That's when Saddam first began sending away his opponents to a prison called Qasr al-Nahiya—'the Palace of the End.' Since 1958, every one of these Sunni-dominated military regimes in Baghdad began with a honeymoon with the Kurds in northern Iraq and ended up fighting them.

"The point here is that we are talking about nation-building from scratch. Iraq has a lot of natural resources and a decently educated population, but it has none of the civil society or rule of law roots that enabled us to quickly build democracies out of the ruins of Germany and Japan after World War II. Iraq's last leader committed to the rule of law may have been Hammurabi—the King of Babylon in the 18th century B.C. So once Saddam is gone, there will be a power vacuum, revenge killings and ethnic pulling and tugging between Kurds, Sunnis and Shiites.

"This is not a reason for not taking Saddam out. It is a reason for preparing the U.S. public for a potentially long, costly nation-building operation and for enlisting as many allies as possible to share the burden. There is no avoiding nation-building in Iraq. Because to get at Iraq's weapons of mass destruction we'll need to break the regime open, like a walnut, and then rebuild it.

"What's worrying about the Bushies is that they seem much more adept at breaking things than building things. To do nation-building you need to be something of a naïve optimist. I worry that the Bushies are way too cynical for nation-building.

"My most knowledgeable Iraqi friend tells me he is confident that the morning after any U.S. invasion, American troops would be welcomed by Iraqis, and the regime would fold quickly. It's the morning after the morning after that we have to be prepared for. In the best case, a 'nice' strongman will emerge from the Iraqi Army to preside over a gradual transition to democracy, with America receding into a supporting role. In the worst case, we crack Iraq open and it falls apart in our hands, with all its historical internal tensions—particularly between its long-ruling Sunni minority and its long-frustrated Shiite majority. In that case, George Bush will have to become Iraq's strongman—the iron fist that holds the country together, gradually redistributes the oil wealth and supervises a much longer transition to democracy.

"My Iraqi friend tells me that anyone who tells you he knows which scenario will unfold doesn't know Iraq."

CONGRATULATING SOUTH LOUISIANA MUSICAL PIONEERS—LUDERIN DARBONE, EDWIN DUHON AND THE HACKBERRY RAMBLERS

HON. CHRISTOPHER JOHN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. JOHN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend 2002 National Heritage Fellow Awardees—and my constituents—Luderin Darbone and Edwin Duhon, founding members of the acclaimed South Louisiana musical group, The Hackberry Ramblers.

The prestigious National Heritage Fellow Award was created in 1982 by the National Endowment for the Arts. To date, the award has honored 272 traditional artists, of all varieties, from across the United States.

My home state of Louisiana has been home to fifteen fellows since 1982, and ten of those fellows have been natives of Louisiana's 7th Congressional District, which I proudly represent. The artists or groups nominated for this award have made a "significant contribution to the cultural heritage of the United States."

Luderin Darbone and Edwin Duhon of The Hackberry Ramblers were among this year's thirteen awardees, and indeed have made a significant contribution to the world of Cajun music.

Mr. Darbone and Mr. Duhon have been thrilling audiences as the lead members of The Hackberry Ramblers since 1933. They began playing at local parties and dances in South Louisiana, and their ensemble is still playing and touring today—nearly 70 years later.

Undoubtedly the oldest Cajun music group in existence, the Ramblers combine their Cajun French repertoire with rural string band, western swing, and popular ingredients to produce their unique sound. A number of musical 'firsts' are attributed to The Hackberry Ramblers including being among the first Cajun musicians to de-emphasize the accordion and feature the fiddle; the first to successfully blend the Cajun music sound with western swing, blues and a variety of other medleys; the first to record and tag the name "Jolie Blonde," the tune often called the 'Cajun National Anthem'; and they were the first musicians to bring electronic amplification to area dancehalls by running a sound system off the engine of Mr. Darbone's Model-A Ford.

Their 1997 album, "Deep Water," received a grammy nomination in the traditional folk category, and on December 4, 1999, Darbone and Duhon fulfilled a life-long dream of performing at the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville. This past spring and summer, The Ramblers toured festivals across Louisiana and even ventured on their first European tour!

Over the years, The Ramblers have been profiled on Entertainment Tonight, Music City Tonight, and NPR's Weekend Edition. They have garnered critical acclaim from the New York Times, Rolling Stone, and USA Today—and they have even been featured on MTV!

As one report put it—"They have seen the Depression, World War II, rock and roll, flower power, disco, the computer age, and 9/11—and they're still going strong."

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate South Louisiana's 2002 National Heritage Fellows Mr. Luderin Darbone and Mr. Edwin Duhon on their lifetime of achievement and I wish The Hackberry Ramblers many more years of good times and great music!

HONORING LAURAN HOWARD AS AN "ANGEL IN ADOPTION"

HON. JOE KNOLLENBERG

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I would like to salute Lauran Howard, who will be one of the 277 Angels in Adoption honored tonight at a banquet organized by the Congressional Coalition on Adoption Institute (CCAI).

CCAI is a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization raising awareness about the tens of thousands of foster children in this country and the millions of orphans around the world in need of permanent, safe and loving homes; and eliminating the barriers that hinder these children from realizing their basic need of a family.

I was proud to nominate Lauran because her work has made a significant difference in the lives of children and adoptive families in our community. Since graduating from Marygrove College in Detroit, MI, Howard has been actively involved in ensuring that children are placed with loving families in a timely manner. After working with the Michigan Department of Social Services (now the Family Independence Agency) as a social worker, she began working as a caseworker for the Honorable James Lincoln at the Wayne County Juvenile Court. Later, as a shareholder in the firm of Kemp, Klein, Umphrey and Endelman in Troy, MI, she concentrated her practice in the adoption and family law areas. Lauran is a member of the American Academy of Adoption Attorneys (AAAA), having practiced as counsel in hundreds of adoptions.

Since January 2, 2000, she has been a court administrator in adoptions and juvenile support for Oakland County, MI. In that position, Lauran attempts to ensure that adoptions are processed quickly and in accordance with the Michigan adoption code and court rules. Lauran's efforts have helped reduce the time that children spend in foster care and guarantee the system is used as a temporary answer instead of a permanent solution. The swift placement of children in permanent homes is essential to their positive development and well-being.

Adoption allows people the opportunity to extend their homes and their hearts to people in need. I commend Lauran Howard for her work to break down the barriers that stand between foster children and their adoptive families. She is truly worthy of the Angels in Adoption recognition.

RECOGNIZING THE ACHIEVEMENT OF GLORIA WISE BOYS & GIRLS CLUB

HON. JOSEPH CROWLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in recognition of The Gloria Wise Boys & Girls Club of the Bronx, New York. I congratulate them on their recently awarded $218,500 grant from the U.S. Department of Justice.

This grant will fund the Juvenile Mentoring Program (JUMP). JUMP is a one-on-one mentoring program that takes at-risk youths from the Bronx neighborhoods of Co-Op City, Baychester, Edenwald, and Williamsbridge, and gives them the kind of activities they want and need. The goals of this program are to reduce gang participation, promote academic achievement and school attendance, and promote positive social behavior. The activities include college campus visits, outings to sporting events, and reading time with caring adult mentors.

That is precisely what is so wonderful about Gloria Wise—it recognizes the needs of this community and it provides services that serve this community. That is the mark of understanding, seasoned leadership—leadership provided by Gloria Wise's Executive Director, Charlie Rosen. Mr. Rosen has proven his commitment to the neighborhood for decades. And he continues to respond to the needs of this varied and diverse community.

Under his leadership, Gloria Wise has grown into a model community center, serving the young, the old, those in need of assistance, and those who long to help, this center serves all of us.

This Federal grant certainly speaks to the quality of Mr. Rosen's leadership. It also speaks to the quality of the Gloria Wise programs and staff, people like the Jeff Aulenbach who is the Deputy Executive Director who actually wrote the grant application—an application that was successful in a very competitive year where only three of these awards were given out in New York State.

This program has a lot of people behind it, including myself. This center has been blessed with incredible staff and an incredible leader. I am glad that the Federal Government and the Department of Justice has recognized how exceptional this Boys & Girls Club is to the Co-Op City community.

For all of their work, I thank them.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO HOLLY COORS

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. –Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to an individual who has contributed selflessly to the betterment of her community, Holly H. Coors of Denver, Colorado. It is my pleasure to honor Holly as a pillar and a pioneer to the advancements of our society.

Holly Coors was born and raised in Philadelphia by a caring charitable family. She moved to Colorado where she nurtured her own family with her example of humanitarian service. Holly has donated countless hours of service at St. Luke's Hospital and Spalding Rehabilitation Hospital in Denver, Colorado in addition to serving as the Colorado State Chairman for Reagan/Bush in 1980 and 1984. Holly's appointment as the United States Ambassador to the National Year of Americas by President Reagan highlights her ability to represent her country and her willingness to reach out. Holly has also helped found and fund the organization Women of Our Hemisphere Achieving Together to help women improve their lives through entrepreneurship. Through this organization and her support of Latin American schools and clinics, Holly has economically uplifted many developing communities and received numerous awards for her dedication to educational and health care issues.

Holly's humanitarian legacy extends to the Caribbean where she helped rebuild the fire ravaged Parliament House in the commonwealth of Dominica. When Hurricane Mitch wreaked havoc along its destructive path, Holly sent five plane loads of diapers to hospitals there. Appointed to serve as Ambassador-at-Large to Latin America by President George H. W. Bush, Holly moved throughout the western hemisphere standing out as a determined advocate and mentor to the women in every country she visited. She continues to tirelessly serve her country as an advocate on many health care issues at home and abroad.

With such a distinguished list of accomplishments, it is no surprise the Jefferson Symphony Orchestra has chosen to honor Holly at its 50th Anniversary Gala in December. It is our chance to give her the recognition she deserves for her years of volunteer service and philanthropic assistance she has given to her community, her state, and her nation.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great admiration that I extend my praise to Holly Coors before this body of Congress and this nation. Holly brings great care and sincerity wherever her mission takes her and she is truly an individual of great character and conduct deserving of the honors and awards bestowed on her throughout her career.

REMEMBERING SEPTEMBER 11, 2002

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as we reflect on the tragic attacks on America on September 11, 2001, and the remarkable heroism of those who responded selflessly to those attacks, the weapon we have most, that we need most, and that we need now more than any time in the history of the Republic is prayer.

We need prayer for our brave men and women in the military who are fighting the war on terrorism and for those who will go, prayer for our President and our leaders as they chart our Nation's course, prayer for the families and friends of the more than 3,000 citizens who lost their lives in New York City, on the plane that crashed in Pennsylvania and at the Pentagon, and prayer for the safety and security of our Nation.

We need prayer as well for the selfless and hardworking members of our police, firefighter and emergency response teams. The harsh reality of the danger of their jobs came crashing down on America on September 11 when 343 firefighters, 23 police officers and 37 Port Authority officers in New York City lost their lives at the World Trade Center.

With a year to ponder the terrible losses suffered that day and the threat of terrorism and evil still looming over our Nation, we realize now more than ever the debt of gratitude that we owe to those who place themselves in harm's way to protect our Nation and our citizens.

September 11 unified America and reawakened a spirit of determination and patriotism not seen since World War II. On that day we were reminded that freedom is not free—that there is a price that must be extracted to defeat tyranny and terrorism and to preserve the precious freedoms for which previous generations of heroes have fought so valiantly.

The war on terrorism will be a long war—but it is a war that we can and will win. So as we remember those who paid the ultimate sacrifice for their country and those still on the front lines in the battle for freedom, we are filled with renewed resolve that those who perpetrated these terrible acts will be brought to justice and that such a tragedy will never happen again in America.

May God bless the families of the victims of September 11, and may God continue to bless America.

STATEMENT ON POW/MIA RECOGNITION DAY

SPEECH OF

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

Thursday, September 19, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to bring my colleagues' attention to POW/MIA Recognition Day, which is tomorrow. Designated by the President and observed every year on the Third Friday of September, we take this day to remember the sacrifices of armed service-members who were captured in wartime, and whose ultimate fate remains unknown. Over the course of the last century more than 142,000 Americans were taken captive when fighting for their country. Those unfortunate enough to be taken prisoner all too often suffered from the very worst human treatment. Let us remember the sacrifice they made for their country.

I would encourage my colleagues not only to remember those who were captured, but also those who have never returned. I commend the Department of Defense's use of DNA sampling of living relatives to identify unknown remains. I have linked their website from mine and encourage other members to do the same to publicize this important step. We must also continue to encourage Korea, Vietnam and other countries to fully cooperate with our efforts to bring resolution to these cases.

Mr. Speaker, our missing heroes deserve much more than just a passive pledge not to forget, they deserve our active support. Let us all remember that fact on MIA/POW Recognition Day.

COMMENDING "SPIRIT OF AMERICA" AWARD RECIPIENTS PENNY FREDERICK AND KRISTIE BROUSSARD

HON. CHRISTOPHER JOHN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. JOHN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the achievements of two of the staff members in my Lafayette, Louisiana Congressional District Office—Penny Frederick and Kristie Broussard.

On September 11, 2002, Penny and Kristie received the "Spirit of America" Award from the Diocese of Lafayette, Louisiana. They received this award in recognition of their dedicated service to those in need in our community.

As the commendation reads, both Penny and Kristie have "upheld the founding spirit of America, extending a helping hand to those in need of new homes and new hope. Migration and Refugee Services extends this commendation with warmest regards and deepest appreciation."

I applaud their patience and compassion for our constituents in Louisiana's 7th Congressional District. Their years of service to our community, and their dedication to their jobs is evidenced through this award.

Along with my outstanding team of staffers both in the district and in Washington, DC, I commend Penny and Kristie on this achievement.

INTRODUCTION OF A RESOLUTION HONORING AMERICA'S SMALL BUSINESSES

HON. JAMES R. LANGEVIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, today I am joined by 35 of my colleagues in introducing a bipartisan resolution supporting the issuance of a postage stamp honoring America's small businesses.

Small businesses make up a significant sector of our economy. The estimated 25 million small businesses in this nation bring new and innovative services and products to the marketplace and provide business ownership opportunities to diverse and traditionally underrepresented groups. According to the Small Business Administration, small firms create two out of every three new jobs in America. In fact, small businesses employ 54 percent of the national work force, and the men and women who own small businesses represent over 99 percent of all employers.

Many cutting-edge technologies which have become a part of our daily lives are the product of small business innovation. From the zipper and quick-frozen food, to the personal computer and high-resolution x-ray microscopes, small businesses have been a major force in shaping the last half century. In fact, it is estimated that small firms produce twice as many innovations per employee as large firms. Although small businesses receive a low percentage of federal research and development funds, they are responsible for a larger percentage of patents than big companies.

I urge my colleagues to join me and the 35 original bipartisan cosponsors of this resolution in honoring the real engine of our nation's economy by supporting the issuance of a postage stamp in commemoration of America's small businesses.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO DON PARSONS

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with earnest respect that I recognize the life and passing of Mr. Don Parsons of Northglenn, Colorado. Sadly, Mr. Parsons recently passed away at the end of August and as his family mourns the loss, I would like to pay tribute to his life and to the wonderful contributions he made to the Northglenn Community.

For over fifteen years Don Parsons served diligently as Northglenn's mayor, prescribing effective solutions to many of the problems that confronted the city through out the years. Mr. Parsons served Northglenn's citizens honestly and faithfully and his reputation for fair dealing won him the bipartisan approval of his constituency. Don Parsons's ability to manage money and his overwhelming popularity throughout the community helped the mayor to resolve many of Northglenn's financial problems and place the city in a strong position fiscally.

Mr. Parsons believed and often said, "that those who are in charge should be those who are affected" and that is exactly how he made decisions for the City of Northglenn. He was always a citizen first and never lost touch with the real issues and concerns that affected his constituency with in the community. Mr. Parsons also contributed his time and expertise to a variety of regional boards and commissions, including the Regional Air Quality Council, the Metro Mayor's Caucus, and the Denver Regional Council of Governments.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I recognize Mr. Parsons before this body of Congress and this nation for the wonderful contributions he has made to the city of Northglenn, Colorado. My sincere condolences go out to his wife Jennifer, and his four children Julie, Jill, Doug, and Dirk. In life and in politics, Don Parsons always embodied the best of intentions. His loss will be deeply felt by the City if Northglenn and the entire state of Colorado.

CONGRATULATING EBBY HALLIDAY ACERS

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor one of Texas's most respected and most successful businesswomen—Ebby Halliday of Dallas—on the occasion of her 91st birthday. Her countless community activities, successful business venture and endless enthusiasm make her truly a remarkable woman.

Ebby Halliday Realtors, the company that she founded 47 years ago, has grown from its infancy into a nationally know entity. This company that began with one office has now expanded to become one of the world's largest independently-owned residential realty firms. And at the age of 91, Ebby still works 9-hour work days. Ebby Halliday Realtors assisted some 17,500 home buyers last year, and Ebby's remarkable business acumen is evident in the many awards that she has received from her industry and peers.

In 1996 Ebby was introduced into the Texas Business Hall of Fame. She was the recipient of the Distinguished Service Award from the National Association of Realtors and the International Real Estate Federation. Ernst and Young named her the regional Entrepreneur of the Year in 1997, and she was inducted into the Dallas Business Hall of Fame in 1999. In 2000, Ebby received the Lifetime Achievement Award in Real Estate from Texas A&M's Real Estate Center and was named Most Influential Woman in the Business and Professional Category by the Ft. Worth Business Press. Ebby was the first recipient of the Executive Women International's Executive Excellence Award—an award that will carry her name in the future—and she was conferred the Degree of Doctor of Humanities by Dallas Baptist University.

Aside from running a successful business, Ebby has selflessly devoted time and resources to local civic organizations. She has served as chairperson of the Thanksgiving Square Foundation, served on the boards of St. Paul Medical Foundation, the Communities Foundation of Texas, the Dallas Community College District Foundation, and the Better Business Bureau. She has also supported the Alexis de Tocqueville Society for the United Way, the Dallas Symphony Orchestra Guild, the Plano Symphony and the State Fair of Texas. She has been president of the North Dallas Chamber of Commerce and of the Greater Dallas Planning Council and served as a member of the Dallas Park and Recreation Board. In addition, the St. Paul Medical Center Foundation was dedicated to Ebby and her husband, Maurice Acers, in honor of their service.

Ebby's remarkable energy and philanthropy are a testament to her devotion to her career and to her community, and the State of Texas is grateful for her many significant contributions. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to recognize an outstanding citizen for her remarkable lifetime of achievement and philanthropy—my dear friend, Ebby Halliday Acers.

IN MEMORY OF ANN RITTLE MONACO

HON. DANNY K. DAVIS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Ann Rittle Monaco, a woman of strength, elegance, integrity and a passion for music. Ann, the Artistic Director at the Merit School of Music, died suddenly on July 30, 2002 after being hit from behind by a van while she was out on a run.

Born in Pittsburgh, she earned her bachelor's degree in music from Western College for Women in Oxford, Ohio, and her master's from the New England Conservatory in Boston. While studying at Western, she met Richard A. Monaco, an accomplished composer on the faculty. The two married and in 1974 moved to Oak Park, Illinois.

Over the years, Ann Monaco taught at Chicago State University, and UIC and spent nearly three decades teaching piano to students in her home. In 1982, she joined Merit as a piano teacher, ten years later she became the artistic director. She also was running the school's Tuition-Free Conservatory at the time of her death.

Merit offers a full continuum of instruction in music, both classical and jazz. More than 30,000 youths have studied at Merit since it was founded in 1979. Merit's primary goals are to serve the economically disadvantaged, to help young people achieve their full musical potential, and to give young people a sense of purpose by stimulating personal and educational growth through music.

Ann was a major influence on thousands of Merit students. Known for wearing "a velvet glove over an iron hand" Ann was in charge of keeping high overall artistic standards at Merit, but she also was known for her fierce dedication to her students. She paid close individual attention to her students, doing everything from helping them find appropriate apparel for performances, to teaching them how to bow properly, and to fighting to secure scholarships for them to attend college.

Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sadness that we remember the life of Ann Monaco. Her death creates a void not only at Merit, but also throughout the music education community and the world of music. I urge my colleagues to join me in expressing our condolences to her family and colleagues.

IN TRIBUTE TO ED HOGAN

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute to a close friend, Ed Hogan, who is celebrating his 75th birthday with no sign of slowing down.

Just over a year ago, I rose to honor Ed and his wife, Lynn, for celebrating 50 years of marriage as business partners and partners in life. I spoke extensively about their entrepreneurial success and their extensive philanthropic endeavors. Some highlights:

Together, Ed and Lynn opened Pleasant Travel Service and built it into a limited liability corporation with more than 1,700 employees and revenues exceeding $400 million.

They formed the Pleasant Hawaiian Holidays Foundation to grant annual scholarships and awards to benefit Hawaiian residents. The non-profit Hogan Family Foundation is dedicated to promoting an understanding of the importance of travel and tourism. The Ed and Lynn Hogan Program in Travel and Tourism is funded at Loyola Marymount University in Los Angeles.

Ed and Lynn volunteered for numerous other non-profit organizations focused on health care, child abuse and education, and sit on several boards, and have been honored frequently for their efforts.

In 1993, Ed and Lynn were inducted into the American Society of Travel Agents' "Hall of Fame," the travel industry's highest honor. In 1995, Ed served as a delegate to the first White House Conference on Travel and Tourism.

The past year has been no less busy. Through the Hogan Family Foundation, Ed and Lynn opened a community garden in Thousand Oaks, California, that is free and open to the public. The Gardens of the World was the site of a one-year anniversary tribute to the heroes and victims of September 11, 2001, sponsored by the city and the foundation.

The Hogans also opened the Hogan Entrepreneurial Program at the Chaminade University of Honolulu. Ed joined the board of the California Tourism Association. And, they were blessed with the birth of their third grandchild, Gavin Hogan, son of Gary and Nadine.

Mr. Speaker, through a lifetime of hard work and family teamwork, Ed Hogan has achieved the American dream. At the same time he has upheld the highest ideals of America by sharing his knowledge and the fruits of his success. I know my colleagues will join Janice and me in wishing Ed Hogan a very happy 75th birthday. We can hardly wait to see what this year brings.

IN RECOGNITION OF REVEREND FRED COBETT

HON. SAXBY CHAMBLISS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize Reverend Fred Cobett, Children's Minister to Calvary Assembly of God in Dunwoody, Georgia, for taking on an unusual role to teach children how to help other children, while raising money for mission work.

At the request of the children he works with, Pastor Cobett agreed to spend seven entire days on the ledge of a billboard forty feet above interstate 285 in Atlanta for a fundraiser called Up in the Air For Kids. This event is part of the Boys and Girls Missionary Crusade, a non-profit organization founded by the Assemblies of God Church that exists to reach the children of the world by creating a heart of compassion in the children they lead. The Up in the Air For Kids project is geared specifically toward raising community awareness of the needs of children around the world who are living in poverty. Nine other states nationwide are also participating in this benefit and hope to reach a cumulative goal of one million dollars. Pastor Cobett's goal for Georgia is to raise 100,000 dollars that will be distributed among four separate charities including Convoy of Hope, Latin America Child Care, Africa's Children, and Asia's Little Ones.

As the son of a minister, I have a special affinity for Pastor Cobett and his ministry. It is a high calling, and I commend him for dedicating his life to teaching children the principles of charity, generosity, and goodwill in this creative manner.

HONORING JEANNE CARIGLIA

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Jeanne Cariglia for her 30 years of service to the students, staff, and community of Gates Lane School of International Studies in Worcester, Massachusetts.

Mrs. Cariglia has done far more than efficiently serve breakfast and lunch for 30 years. Children also receive a warm smile, a friendly greeting, a hug, and a kind word. "Jeannie" is and always has been an integral part of the Gates Lane community. She has left such a lasting impression on our children that a Gates Lane Alumnus, author Jarett Krosoczka, has recently published a children's book entitled Bag Head wherein the "lunch lady" is a curly redheaded character named, as one would expect, "Jeannie."

An active participant in all school activities and social functions, Jeannie received the prestigious Thomas Jefferson Award from the Gates Lane community in 2000. This award was given in recognition of her service above and beyond the call of duty and, more importantly, for her caring attitude, with which she serves her little charges each and every day.

Jeannie's retirement, while a great loss to our community, promises to afford her more time to enjoy her home with her husband, Dante, and her family of three daughters and two grandchildren. She also plans on traveling to sunny places with both her family and her wide circle of friends.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the entire House of Representatives joins me in congratulating Mrs. Jeannie Cariglia on her long career of service to the Gates Lane School of International Studies, and wishes her the best of luck in retirement.

INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATIONS WEEK

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, today Representative JOHN PETERSON (R–PA) and I are introducing a bill to establish a National Visiting Nurse Associations Week in honor of the army of health care heroes who, every day, comfort, care for, and assist our loved ones. Modern society takes for granted the need for nursing as an indispensable component of our public health system, but this was not always the case. The very concept of a visiting nurse can be traced to the pioneering work of Florence Nightingale. She reformed British military hospitals in the Crimean War through an expose in the British press, she professionalized nursing and made it an acceptable profession for educated women, devoted the rest of her life to building on her experiences, setting standards and writing books, until the mission of nursing had gained the respect of the world.

When Henry Wadsworth Longfellow read of the work of Florence Nightingale, he penned a poem, Santa Filomena, that spoke of the deep appreciation owed by all of us to those dedicated to service in the ultimate caring profession. He wrote:

Whene'er a noble deed is wrought,
Whene'er is spoken a noble thought,
Our hearts, in glad surprise,
To higher levels rise.
The tidal wave of deeper souls
Into our inmost being rolls,
And lifts us unawares
Out of all meaner cares.

The Visiting Nurse Associations of today are founded on the principle that the sick, the disabled, and the elderly benefit most from healthcare when it is offered in their own homes. They are non-profit home health agencies that provide cost-effective and compassionate home and community-based health care to individuals, regardless of their condition or ability to pay for services. Through these exceptional organizations, 90,000 clinicians dedicate their lives to bringing healthcare into the homes of over 4 million Americans every year. In the face of rising costs and drastic changes in our health care system, visiting nurse associations have continued to deliver high quality health services for over 120 years.

It is time for Congress to recognize the vital services that visiting nurses provide their patients. Moreover, visiting nurses also are an indispensable lifeline for families. The comfort and quality care that visiting nurses provide can help family members cope with the difficulties of a loved one's illness.

I am proud to be introducing this important legislation with my colleague Representative PETERSON and urge my colleagues to join us in supporting National Visiting Nurse Associations Week.

TRIBUTE TO LANCE ARMSTRONG

HON. EARL BLUMENAUER

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution honoring and congratulating Lance Armstrong on his fourth successive victory of the Tour de France. One of the world's most grueling athletic events, this year's Tour de France bicycling race covered 2,036 miles in 20 days. Winning this challenging race is an amazing feat in itself but Lance Armstrong's triumph is even more remarkable considering his comeback from cancer. Through his efforts with the Lance Armstrong Foundation, Mr. Armstrong has been an effective advocate for cancer survivorship and research.

What I find particularly interesting is the connection between health and bicycling. The active lifestyle inherent in bicycling and the environmental benefits of bicycling as an emission-free, non-polluting transportation alternative is a cornerstone of my work on the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee and as Chair of the bipartisan Congressional Bike Caucus.

The resolution being introduced today is a deserving tribute to Lance Armstrong and his Tour de France victory, commitment to cancer awareness and survivorship, and promotion of bicycling.

TRIBUTE TO DOLORES HUERTA

HON. RUBÉN HINOJOSA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring attention to an outstanding member of the Hispanic community. Dolores Huerta has dedicated her life to fighting for equality and fairness for our Nation's farm workers. She has fought equally hard to protect first amendment rights and other issues of justice.

Ms. Huerta began her career as an educator. Her students were the children of farm workers and they routinely went without adequate food and clothing. In response, she founded the Stockton chapter of the Community Service Organization to educate and provide assistance to these laborers. This initial effort grew into the founding of the National Farm Worker Association, a precursor to United Farm Workers Organizing Committee. Ms. Huerta, along with this organization, has advocated against the use of harmful pesticides such as DDT and Parathion and has led a national campaign for environmental justice. Ms. Huerta was inducted to the Women's Hall of Fame in 1993. She has received the American Civil Liberties Union Roger Baldwin Medal of Liberty Award, as well as many other prestigious recognitions of her dedication.

I am proudly cosponsor H. Con. Res. 177, a bipartisan resolution to honor Dolores Huerta for her tireless efforts on behalf of our nation. Her work particularly interests the 15th Congressional District of Texas, as 60 percent of the national migrant population resides in this area of south Texas.

October 15, 2002 marks the end of Hispanic Heritage Month. I urge my colleagues to bring H. Con. Res. 177 to the floor before the end of this month in order to appropriately acknowledge the contributions of Dolores Huerta, a truly historic Latina.

IN SUPPORT OF H. CON. RES. 177—HONORING DOLORES HUERTA

HON. SILVESTRE REYES

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 24, 2002

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, as Chair of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, I would like to commend my colleague, Representative HILDA SOLIS of California, for introducing H. Con. Res. 177, honoring civil rights leader Dolores Huerta. And I share my colleague's frustration with the undue delay in bringing this resolution before the House.

With National Hispanic Heritage Month celebrated between September 15 and October 15, there isn't a better time to bring this resolution to the floor. This year's celebration would be incomplete if we do not recognize a historic Latina who has led the fight for equality and justice in the United States—Dolores Huerta.

Dolores Huerta's contributions are no less than those that our nation has proudly recognized over the years. Nearly 100 other Members of Congress acknowledge the need to give Dolores Huerta the recognition she deserves and have co-sponsored H. Con. Res. 177.

The contributions of Dolores Huerta are well known and have already been recognized by numerous organizations. Dolores Huerta was inducted into the Women's Hall of Fame in 1993 for her relentless dedication to farm worker issues. She has also received the American Civil Liberties Union Roger Baldwin Medal of Liberty Award and the Ellis Island Medal of Freedom Award. And in March, she was named one of six Women Sustaining the American Spirit honorees by the National Women's History Project.

Dolores Huerta has fought for the rights of underserved laborers for more than 40 years. She has advocated against the use of harmful pesticides such as DDT and Parathyon, led a national campaign for environmental justice, and protected our First Amendment rights through peaceful protests and demonstrations.

Dolores Huerta began as a teacher, but left the teaching profession because she couldn't stand to see her students—children of farmworkers—arrive at school hungry and without shoes. She founded the Stockton chapter of the Community Service Organization in 1955 to educate and assist farmworkers. In 1962, she joined with Cesar Chavez to found the National Farm Workers Association, a precursor to the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee. The organization has repeatedly fought for the rights of farmworkers, advocated against the use of harmful pesticides and led a national campaign for environmental justice.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and the rest of the leadership to bring H. Con. Res. 177 to the floor, so we may give Dolores Huerta the recognition she so richly deserves during Hispanic Heritage Month.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, September 26, 2002

The House met at 10 a.m.

Almighty God, Father of all who love You, this Nation owes You our liberty. Your truth shaped our law. Generation after generation You delivered us from enemies. For Your goodness, receive our thanks.

Now we confront new terrors. Clouds of war rise on the Middle Eastern horizon. We need Your help. Yet in many ways we have forgotten You. We are confused as to who You are. We have difficulty discerning good from evil in our private lives. We are often unjust in our relationships, corrupt in our commerce, self-interested in our pursuit of the Nation's welfare.

Forgive us, Lord. Turn our hearts to seek You, our minds to know You, our wills to serve You. Guide the men and women of this honorable House. Bless the President of these United States. Aid those who defend us. Save us through Your mercy, by the grace of Christ, our Sovereign. Amen.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 4628) "An Act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2003 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. BAYH, Mr. EDWARDS, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. KYL, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. HATCH, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. LUGAR, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. WILSON) is recognized for 1 minute; then there will be 15 1-minute speeches on each side.

WELCOMING REVEREND DR. K. ERIC PERRIN

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased to welcome Pastor Rick Perrin from the Irmo community of South Carolina as our guest chaplain. Pastor Perrin has been the senior pastor of Cornerstone Presbyterian Church for 11 years. He has been married to Barb Perrin for 30 years, and they have three wonderful sons. Scott Perrin serves with the Secret Service in Georgia; Tim Perrin, who worked for my mentor and predecessor, Floyd Spence; and Chris Perrin, who now works for my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATTS).

Pastor Perrin started the Community Roundtable, a group of leaders who have come together to lead and deal with at-risk youth. He also started the Human Relations Committee to promote harmony with racial and demographic changes in the community. Pastor Perrin is the chairman of the World Reform Fellowship which connects churches and ministry organizations around the world to build partnerships. Pastor Perrin has demonstrated consistent leadership over the years, and I count his family as friends.

It is a great honor for all South Carolinians to have Pastor Perrin perform the prayer today in the United States House of Representatives.

THE NEED FOR A HOMELAND SECURITY BILL

(Mr. FOLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FOLEY. Madam Speaker, I woke up this morning to a lot of noise on my TV set as two prominent Senators were berating the President of the United States, so I tuned in to listen and find out what all the fuss was about.

It turned out there was a concern echoed by the President that there is a national homeland security bill that left this Chamber in July. In July. We had promised the American public action on this critical legislation before the anniversary of the terror attacks in New York, Washington and Pennsylvania on September 11.

So I thought to myself, why would our President, our Commander-in-Chief, be outraged? Why would he be concerned, and why would we hear such volume from the Senate? Well, he is concerned about the life of every American living here in the United States who wants a safe homeland.

We passed our bill. I cannot urge action on the other body, it is prohibited by the rules of the House. But I would at least hope that the American people would speak out loud and clear about the need for a homeland security bill, about the need to protect our national security.

CODE ADAM ACT

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAMPSON. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the Code Adam Act. Code Adam is a proven, successful program that has saved lives in the retail environment. It is time to bring that same measure of safety to children in Federal buildings.

Since the Code Adam program began in 1994, it has been a powerful preventive tool against child abductions and lost children in more than 25,000 stores across the Nation. The House and Senate versions of the Code Adam Act would require the implementation of this protocol in all Federal buildings.

Wal-Mart started this fantastic program in the name of Adam Walsh, John and Reve Walsh's son, who was abducted from a mall and murdered in Florida about 20 years ago. Every day I see children walking through the Halls of Congress and in Federal buildings back home in Texas. God forbid, if a child would go missing in one of these buildings, this bill would make sure that a plan was in place to secure that building and find the child before something tragic could occur.

Join me, the gentleman from Puerto Rico and many of our other colleagues in supporting this great piece of legislation.

URGING ACTION ON HOMELAND SECURITY

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Madam Speaker, we are at war. Homeland security legislation passed this body in July, as the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY) just mentioned, and yet the Senate has not acted.

The President wants the tools that he thinks are necessary to protect every man, woman and child in this country, and yet the Senate has not acted.

He wanted it done before September 11, the anniversary of the tragedy that happened in New York, here in Washington, D.C. and in Pennsylvania, but the Senate has not acted.

It is almost October. We are about to get out of here, and the Senate has not acted.

The other body wants to give the President less authority over national security than any other agency of government, and that is wrong. He needs the tools to protect this country, and yet the Senate has not acted.

Let me just say to the leaders of the Senate who were raising Cain yesterday: Get on the ball, protect America, support our President, and protect all the people who want to be protected in this country. We do not need another attack of terror.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT). Members are to be reminded that they should not characterize inaction or action of the Senate.

ILL-CONCEIVED CUTS IN MEDICARE

(Mrs. CAPPS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mrs. CAPPS. Madam Speaker, seniors back at home have been waiting for years for Congress to pass a prescription drug benefit as part of Medicare. Each month, many choose between buying medications and paying rent. I am not exaggerating. They are desperate.

To make matters worse, many seniors were told by their doctors this year that they had to go somewhere else for care. This is because an arcane formula arbitrarily cuts the fees Medicare pays physicians. The administration says there was nothing they could do.

Now seniors in my district will be told they cannot get other health care, like a pacemaker or a pint of blood, because Medicare is cutting these rates also. And this time it is not because of some formula. The administration is actually doing this on purpose. This will hurt our already stretched seniors.

This will also get in the way of efforts to prepare for bioterrorism. Hospitals depend upon Medicare to help pay the bills. These cuts will mean our hospitals will be even more strapped for resources and less prepared.

I urge the administration to reject this ill-conceived idea and support our seniors, our doctors and our hospitals.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM BILL UNDERMINED BY TAINTED AMENDMENT

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Madam Speaker, some proponents of the current bankruptcy reform bill have claimed they want to stop violence. Well, we already know that fines and judgments for violent acts cannot be discharged in bankruptcy, so we have been arguing that the amendment added in conference committee is really out to stop peaceful, nonviolent protestors at abortion clinics.

Well, last week the Senator who wrote the amendment said on MNPR, and I quote, "They'd pay their fine and go back and stand in front of the clinic again. And they'd pay their fine and go back and stand in front of the clinic again; and they'd pay their fine and go back and stand again. They were taking the law into their own hands; in a peaceful way, but a very serious way, that led us to write the law."

Well, there we have it, right from the horse's mouth. Peaceful, pro-life protestors are the target of that amendment.

Madam Speaker, the current bill discriminates against pro-life Americans for no other reason than for what they believe. That is not right, not in America; and as much as I want to vote for bankruptcy reform, I cannot support the bill with this harmful language restricting first amendment rights of pro-lifers.

HONORING ALEXANDER LOPEZ FOR HIS APPOINTMENT TO THE CALIFORNIA STATE UNIVERSITY BOARD OF TRUSTEES

(Ms. SÁNCHEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SANCHEZ. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor Alexander Lopez of Santa Ana.

Alex, a junior pursuing a Bachelor of Science Business Administration degree at California State University, Fullerton, has been appointed to one of the two student slots on the California State University Board of Trustees.

Student trustees are an important part of the governing body overseeing the 23-campus California State University system. They are responsible for creating policies, for hiring university presidents, and for representing the concerns of over 400,000 students in the California State University system.

I met Alex following a commencement address I gave at Cal State Fullerton this past year. He was all the things we hope our young people will grow to be: bright, ambitious, and compassionate. In addition to serving as the president of the student government, Alex is committed to advocacy for programs that will help low-income and minority students attend college.

I am very proud of Alex for his achievement, and I wish him luck. I also wish we would take note of this and invest in education instead of war.

OVERSIGHT HEARING TO INVESTIGATE HESHAM HEDAYET

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Immigration of the Committee on the Judiciary, I am scheduling an oversight hearing next week on the bizarre case of Hesham Hedayet. He is the Egyptian national who killed two people at the Los Angeles International Airport back on July 4.

After that incident happened, the press reported that this individual had applied for a green card and was denied, and then later, was granted a green card based on the diversity application lottery that we have for visas based on diversity.

Later on, we got so worried about it that I issued a letter to the INS commissioner asking for full access to that Hesham Hedayet file so that we could inquire into it. Madam Speaker, 2½ months later, we still have not received a reply and then, somehow, that became clear to the Attorney General that there were questions about this individual, and the Attorney General has asked the INS to clarify it.

We are going to have an oversight hearing next week to determine answers to all of the inquiries about this matter.

MORE MONEY FOR FIRE PREVENTION

(Ms. SOLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. SOLIS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to talk about an incident that is occurring now in the San Gabriel Valley in California and that is the Williams fire. We just went through a very, very debilitating fire several weeks ago in the same area. Now the Williams fire is continuing to burn there without much success to put it out.

Every day we spend about a million dollars just to try to bring resources to put this out. The problem here, though, is that there is not enough money being put in for preventive measures, and that is when the forest, the national forest is but up against our communities. We have community development areas, we have housing, we have people that are going to be affected.

Madam Speaker, 44 structures have already been burned; and I can tell my colleagues right now that with the conditions in California, the drought, the fact that we do not have enough preventive measures going in to help with containment is a serious problem. We need to put more money into this area, because we cannot afford to lose houses and human life and not even to mention the habitat that will not be replaced. It is important for us to understand that.

Madam Speaker, I ask this House to help by considering providing more support for fire prevention.

HOMELAND SECURITY

(Mr. REHBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. REHBERG. Madam Speaker, time is of the essence. With national security on the minds of many Americans, I urge my colleagues to seize the opportunity and pass legislation to create the Department of Homeland Security.

Each day that passes without this coordinating effort is a day that America is vulnerable to the very people who attacked this country on September 11. Creating the Department of Homeland Security will send a resounding message to the world: America is stronger and safer than it was 12 months ago.

I applaud those who have put partisan agendas aside to do what is right for this country. An entire year has passed. Let us get our work done. Let us put an end to the politics and provide Americans with the safety they deserve.

A NOTE OF REMEMBRANCE

(Mr. HAYWORTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYWORTH. Madam Speaker, I rise this morning with a note of remembrance. Raymond Hall Hayworth, age 98, passed away peacefully yesterday. The last teammate of Ty Cobb has now left his earthly field.

Ray Hayworth wore a major league uniform in parts of 3 decades. His career spanned 13 years in the major leagues, first called up in 1926 to the Tigers.

For purposes of full disclosure, Madam Speaker, I should note that Ray Hayworth was my granddad; and the lessons he taught me, not only about sports, but about life, are lessons far more valuable than I can express on the floor of this House.

Our founders said they moved to secure the blessings of liberty for themselves and their posterity. In much the same way, my grandfather has left a legacy of freedom, as an athlete, as a role model, but, most of all, as a man. I was blessed for having his example to guide me.

SUPPORT H.R. 4600, THE HEALTH ACT

(Mr. KINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINGSTON. Madam Speaker, the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, was forced to close its trauma unit after 57 of 58 surgeons quit, citing exposure to costly medical malpractice. In LeHigh, Pennsylvania, one-third of the surgeons quit because of unrelenting problems with medical malpractice. In Wheeling, West Virginia, all of the neurosurgeons have left, so that trauma patients needing brain surgery must be flown to Pittsburgh. And in Philadelphia, the Methodist Hospital stopped delivering babies June 30 because of malpractice insurance costs.

But this House will have an opportunity to do something about that with the passage of H.R. 4600. This will help get health care malpractice premiums in line that will bring some balance, protect the interests of the patients, and restore the doctor-patient relationship.

The objective of H.R. 4600 is to put patients into the emergency room and not get lawyers into the courtroom. I urge my colleagues to support it.

HELP FOR FIGHTING FIRES

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Madam Speaker, over the last several months we have seen the terrible fires that have hit Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Oregon, and other parts of the country. We are feeling the impact of the droughts. But now the fires have hit the Los Angeles area, and over the past several weeks we have had what was known as the Curve fire burn over 20,000 acres, and right now, the Williams fire, which started 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, has hit the Angeles National Forest, the number one most-used national forest, national park in the country. We have had many structures damaged.

I would like to congratulate the President and thank him for the fact that we are going to, through the Federal Emergency Management Agency, have reimbursement to those who are fighting the fire. I also want to say that our challenge will be dealing with reseeding which, as we face the rains that will hit come this winter, the mudslides can have an even more devastating impact.

Our thoughts and prayers are with those who are on the frontline fighting these fires, and we look forward to a quick resolution.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2215, 21ST CENTURY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Madam Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 552 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 552

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 2215) to authorize appropriations for the Department of Justice for fiscal year 2002, and for other purposes. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived. The conference report shall be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Madam Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 552 is a standard rule waiving all points of order against the conference report to accompany H.R. 2215, the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act and against its consideration.

It has been over 20 years since Congress last authorized appropriations for the Department of Justice. This conference report that we are preparing to consider takes the long overdue step of putting our mark on the vital justice programs and funding levels that we have addressed solely through appropriations, since the 96th Congress. This conference report is a product of a careful deliberative bipartisan process. Every member of the conference committee, Republican and Democrat, House and Senate, has signed the conference report.

I believe that all of the conferees, especially the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), the chairman, and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member, should be commended for their work.

The conference report establishes fundamental and budgetary administrative authorities that simplify, harmonize, and clarify over 2 decades of statutory authorities. Few times in our national history has it been so important that we update and provide direction to the Department of Justice. The conference report helps the Department of Justice to adjust to the new century and the new challenges facing America. As President Bush has noted, "We are today a Nation at risk to a new and changing threat."

The Department of Justice has played and obviously will continue to play a very important, a pivotal role, in securing our Nation against the possibility of terrorist attacks.

Importantly, the conference report also reasserts congressional oversight of the Department. The administration has gone to extraordinary lengths to secure the Nation, while respecting the free and open society which we are privileged to live in.

Nevertheless, Congress is designed to serve as a check on the actions of the executive branch, to oversee the executive branch, that is obviously as fundamental a role for Congress as is legislating; and this conference report reaffirms our oversight responsibility.

This conference report is not by any means limited to the streamlining and strengthening of the Department of Justice's law enforcement responsibility or congressional oversight of its actions.

The conference report provides 94 additional U.S. Attorneys to work with State and local law enforcement to enforce existing Federal laws, firearms laws, for example, especially in and around schools.

The conference report also provides eight new permanent Federal judgeships in the State of Florida. Also in my State and that of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), it creates a new temporary Federal District Court judgeship for the Southern District to ease the extraordinary burden on our Federal courts.

The conference report provides an increase in funds for the Boys and Girls Club, which will allow them to increase outreach efforts and increase membership throughout the Nation.

I think it is also worth a commendation that the conference report establishes a permanent, separate, and independent Violence Against Women Office in the Department of Justice. The office will be headed by a director who reports directly to the Attorney General and has final authority over all grants and cooperative agreements and contracts awarded by the office.

The conference report contains important provisions regarding drug abuse prevention and treatment, safeguarding the integrity of the criminal justice system, and providing for the enactment of juvenile justice and delinquency prevention legislation.

Madam Speaker, the conference report before us I believe is an extremely important piece of bipartisan legislation that will serve the Nation in innumerable ways.

The conference report, and I believe the rule, obviously, providing for its consideration, deserve our support. Accordingly, I urge all of my colleagues to support this rule and this very important underlying legislation.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in full support of the conference report for H.R. 2215, the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act.

As my colleagues know, H.R. 2215 passed the House of Representatives in July, 2001, by a voice vote. I am quite certain that my colleagues will join us today and approve the conference report in an overwhelming way again.

Madam Speaker, while sitting in the Committee on Rules yesterday afternoon, and in reviewing the conference report, I am in true admiration of the bipartisanship that was shown by the committee's chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS). I applaud the bipartisanship that the two of them showed while working on this report, and thank the conferees for their inclusion of many Democratic amendments.

As the House works on a variety of contentious issues in the coming days, I urge my colleagues to heed the bipartisan lessons of the chairman and ranking Democrat of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Many Members of the House were here this morning and spoke about the words that are being slung around on homeland security, and faulting the other body for delays in that regard. I would remind my colleagues that we have not completed the appropriations process, and all of us need to be about that business.

Madam Speaker, H.R. 2215 authorizes funding to the Department of Justice for the current fiscal year and the following one, which begins next Tuesday. In addition to authorizing dollars to the Department for the salaries of the Federal judges, attorneys, and support staff, the report also authorizes funding for many important programs utilized by millions of Americans every year.

As the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) says, he and I are happy to report that the Southern District of Florida will be the recipient of one of the judges authorized under this legislation.

Additionally, H.R. 2215 serves as a commitment to keeping drugs off of our streets and out of our schools. While much of the Nation focuses on the war on terrorism and a possible war with Iraq, we cannot and should not forget a war that we have been fighting for more than three decades: the war on drugs.

As we seek to stabilize Afghanistan, we cannot and should not forget that prior to and during Taliban rule, Afghanistan was one of the world's largest producers of poppy, an integral ingredient of heroin. Thus, economic stability in this renewed democracy must provide alternate means of income to Afghans who once depended on poppy sales for a living.

Further, we cannot and should not forget that the war on drugs has no definitive end. The dollars authorized in this bill, albeit limited, serve as Congress' continued commitment to fighting the war on drugs. I do, however, urge the authorizing committee to increase spending for this fight in the coming years. In my lifetime in south Florida I have seen hundreds of lives ruined and ended because of drugs. We cannot allow this trend to continue into the 21st century.

Madam Speaker, in addition to authorizing funding for the war on drugs, this legislation also funds the Immigration and Naturalization Service, an agency that my office works with every day. Nearly 30 percent of everything we do in the Fort Lauderdale office deals with immigration.

While Congress continues to address the obvious shortcomings of this poorly funded, understaffed, and overworked agency, the United States remains a Nation created by immigrants. Those who enter our borders legally and pose no threat to our security should be afforded equal opportunity to excel and prosper. They should enjoy the benefits that those of us born here take for granted.

To many, the United States remains a land where the streets are paved with gold. It is those we let in legally, not those we do not, who will help us extend this street of gold to the rest of the world.

Finally, among many things, the conference report also establishes a national Violence Against Women Office. This is a plan that I and many of the Members have supported for years. Domestic violence remains a disgusting reality in our society, and the establishment of this office is a step in the right direction toward protecting women and punishing those who believe violence is an acceptable practice.

Madam Speaker, the Department of Justice should always be America's voice of justice. Though I do not always agree with its policies today, or its practices, I do agree with its charter.

This conference report is a good one, and so is the rule. I urge my colleagues to support both of them.

Additionally, prior to the consideration of the rule, my very good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOLDEN), will make a motion for the previous question. I ask my colleagues to consider his motion, as well.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 552.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I am more than pleased to yield such time as he may consume to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOLDEN).

Mr. HOLDEN. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

At the conclusion of this debate, I will seek to defeat the previous question on this rule. If the previous question is defeated, I will then offer an amendment to the rule that will instruct the Enrolling Clerk to add to the conference report language to permanently extend Chapter 12 bankruptcy protections for family farmers.

This is not a proposal that should be considered controversial. In fact, this House has voted overwhelmingly three times in the last 18 months to extend these bankruptcy protections for family farmers.

Chapter 12 was enacted in 1986 as a temporary measure to allow family farmers to repay their debts according to a plan under court supervision. It prevents a situation from occurring where a few bad crop years lead to the loss of the family farm.

In the absence of Chapter 12, farmers are forced to file for bankruptcy relief under the Bankruptcy Code's other alternatives, none of which work quite as well for farmers as Chapter 12.

Chapter 11, for example, will require a farmer to sell the family farm to pay the claims of creditors. How can a farmer be expected to come up with the money to pay off his debts without his farm? Chapter 11 is an expensive process that does not accommodate the special needs of farmers.

Since its creation, Chapter 12, family farmer bankruptcy protection, has been renewed regularly by Congress and has never been controversial. In 1997, the National Bankruptcy Review Commission recommended that Chapter 12 be made permanent.

In this Congress, H.R. 333, the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2001, includes a provision that permanently extends Chapter 12. Just like previous versions of this bill in previous Congresses, H.R. 333 is a bill plagued with controversy and a bill whose passage is an uncertainty, at best.

For 5 years now, family farmers have been held hostage by the contentious debate surrounding the larger bankruptcy issue. For 5 years, they have been made to sit on pins and needles waiting to see if Congress will extend these protections for another 11 months, 4 months, 8 months, or whatever length of time we feel it will take us for the next legislative hurdle on the larger bankruptcy issue.

Madam Speaker, family farmers have waited long enough. The games must stop. Right now, family farmers are making plans to borrow money based on next year's expected harvest in order to be able to buy the seeds needed to plant the crops for that harvest. As these farmers leverage themselves, they need to have the assurance that Chapter 12 family farmer bankruptcy protections are going to be there for them on a long-term basis. Sporadic and temporary extensions do not do the job.

Attaching Chapter 12 bankruptcy protections for family farmers to the Department of Justice authorization conference report will give farmers the kind of protections they desperately need, the kind of protections we have already voted three times in the 107th Congress.

On February 21, 2001, we voted 408 to 2 to retroactively extend Chapter 12 for 11 months. On June 6, 2001, we voted 411 to 1 to extend Chapter 12 for an additional 4 months. Most recently, on April 16 of this year, we voted 407 to 3 to extend Chapter 12 for yet an additional 8 months. So Members can see, extending Chapter 12 by no means is a controversial idea.

Madam Speaker, Chapter 12 is scheduled to expire at the end of this year. If we do nothing today, Members of the House will be home in their districts enjoying the holidays with their families while once again family farmers are put at risk. Let us end this cliffhanger once and for all. Let us give family farmers the assurance of permanent protection they deserve and close this chapter for good.

Members should understand that a no vote will not stop the House from considering and approving this conference report, but it will allow us to extend once and for all, and provide the permanent extension of Chapter 12 family farmer bankruptcy protection that farmers so desperately need. However, a yes vote on the previous question will prevent the House from adding this noncontroversial farmer-friendly provision.

I urge all my colleagues to be consistent with their three earlier votes in this Congress and vote no on the previous question.

Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this amendment be printed in the RECORD immediately before the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Madam Speaker, I thank my dear friend, the gentleman from Miami, Florida, for yielding me this time.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of both this rule and the Department of Justice conference report. It has been over two decades, 22 years to be precise, since we have actually had a Department of Justice authorization bill. This has been done through the appropriations process in the past.

I believe that if we look at the issues that the Committee on the Judiciary and others involved in this process have been able to address, I believe that it is a very, very good measure.

We have in Southern California tremendous problems with overburdened courts because of drug cases. I am very pleased that the State of California, and specifically southern California, will be benefiting from five new judgeships for southern California, six overall for the State of California. I believe that that will go a long way towards dealing with the challenge that we have of our overburdened court system in California.

Another issue that has an impact on California that is included in this measure, which is not California-specific, however, is the very balanced approach to the H–1B visa program. We know that as we deal with the challenges of the 21st century economy, Madam Speaker, one of the problems that we have had is the inability to get the best expertise possible for our high-tech sector of the economy, and other sectors, quite frankly.

The fact that we have had a bureaucracy dealing with this has been a challenge, but I am pleased that through legislation that we have been able to get through in the past, we have been able to increase the number of H–1B visas. It was the high-skilled workers who have been able to come in and who filled this need so that the United States of America can remain on the cutting edge technologically.

There has been, as I said, a bureaucratic mess that has existed for some. And so in this conference report we see the inclusion of a 1-year period, a grace period which will allow for those who were holding H–1B visas to be here to continue their very important work. And so, Madam Speaker, this is a very good rule, it is a very good conference report, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, first I would like to offer an apology to my good friend from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART). I indicated to him that we had but one speaker, but that was before two others showed up.

Ms. BALDWIN. Madam Speaker, as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary and the conference committee that produced the underlying bill, I am very pleased with much of the work reflected there. But I do think there is one enormous omission, and I rise to speak to that today.

I urge my colleagues to defeat the previous question on the rule so that we can take immediate action to protect our Nation's family farmers and family fishermen. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOLDEN), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PHELPS), the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT), and I have introduced H.R. 5348 to permanently extend Chapter 12 bankruptcy protection. It is long past time for us to do so.

Madam Speaker, it is increasingly evident that we will not see comprehensive bankruptcy reform this session. As in the last 5 years, it has stalled. Whatever one thinks of the merit of that bill, we have broad agreement of making Chapter 12 farmer and fishermen protection permanent as a good idea and good public policy. By defeating the previous question today, we can consider this important question now.

During this current session of Congress, we have extended Chapter 12 bankruptcy three times, most recently as part of the farm bill. It is now due to expire again at the end of this year. The next 2 weeks may be our final chance to renew it before it expires once again, and we should do that today.

Madam Speaker, it is time to stop using our farmers as pawns in the push for bankruptcy reform. It is time to stop pretending that this important protection has in any way helped win support for the comprehensive bankruptcy reform bill. It is time to protect our family farmers.

A farmer who has a dairy farm in Belleville, Wisconsin, in my district contacted me recently about this issue. He has been farming like his dad before him most of his life. He milks 70 cows to make his living. Milk prices have remained low for most of the time he has been in farming. Now milk prices are again reaching historic lows. He simply cannot stay in business because he is losing money every day. He is scared he is going to lose his farm to his creditors and let his whole family down.

Madam Speaker, let us amend this rule right now so we can take up my bill, H.R. 5348, and give all our family farmers and our family fishermen another chance to reorganize their debts and keep their farms or fishing operations in their families. I urge my colleagues to defeat the previous question and support this rule.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD).

Mr. GREENWOOD. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of this rule and adoption of the conference report on H.R. 2215, the Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act. I am elated to report that after more than 6 years of working on legislation to reauthorize the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, we finally have a real opportunity for reauthorization of the act to become a reality.

This conference report includes the language embodied in H.R. 1900, my legislation, which overwhelmingly passed the House 1 year ago on September 20 of last year.

The Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention was created by Congress in 1974 to help communities and States prevent and control delinquency and to improve their juvenile justice systems. This office has not been reauthorized since 1994, although a similar bill has passed the Congress by overwhelming margins twice since then.

The nature and extent of juvenile delinquency has changed considerably since the office was created, and this reauthorization has taken that into account. It is an extraordinarily difficult task to create a juvenile justice system in each of the States and each of the counties that can respond to the very, very different young people in our society who get caught up in the law. But I believe that this bipartisan bill represents good policy.

The bill successfully strikes a balance in dealing with children who grow up and come before the juvenile justice system who are already very vicious and dangerous criminals, and other children who come before the juvenile justice system who are harmless and scared and running away from abuse at home.

The legislation is designed to assist States and local communities to develop strategies to combat juvenile crime through a wide range of prevention and intervention programs. We acknowledge that most successful solutions to juvenile crime are developed at the State and local level of government by those individuals who understand the unique characteristics of youth in their area. By combining the current discretionary programs into prevention block grants to the States and allowing States and local communities discretion in how such funds are used, we allow the local officials to use their own good judgment based on the realities of each situation. We have found a way to provide the additional flexibility that our local officials need, still protect society from dangerous teenagers, while protecting scared kids from overly harsh treatment in our juvenile justice system.

Madam Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT) for joining me in this effort. This is virtually the same legislation that the gentleman and I successfully negotiated on a bipartisan basis last Congress.

Madam Speaker, I also want to thank the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER); and the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER); the chairman of the Subcommittee on Select Education of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA); and the ranking member, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), for their valued assistance in guiding the legislation through committee. Finally, a special thank you to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), for their willingness to work with us to include this bill in the H.R. 2215 conference report.

Madam Speaker, I also want to thank my legislative director, Judy Borger, who has lived this thing for many, many years and who has done yeoman's work for both committees. I urge all my colleagues to join me in supporting the rule.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), my good friend.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) for his leadership, but as well his yielding me time. I rise to acknowledge the very hard work that was done on this legislation and to suggest that we have made strides. Particularly, let me note that as the ranking member on the Subcommittee on Immigration, Border Security, and Claims of the Committee on the Judiciary, I think the fact that we have kept the H-1B's responsive, those visas, in light of September 11 when many people will equate immigration issues to terrorism, that is not the case. And I think it is important that we allow talented individuals to be able to come into this country and share their talents. And certainly we want to make sure that Americans have the same access to technology and computer knowledge and software knowledge, but it is important to have this talent. So I applaud the legislation, therefore the rule, of this particular initiative because that is in it.

Likewise, let me acknowledge, as my colleague from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) just noted, the consequences for juvenile offenders, a bill that I was very happy to support, that was worked on and co-sponsored by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT), came through the Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism and Homeland Security of the Committee on the Judiciary. And might I say that this is an important statement for our young people, that our young people are not throw-aways, that they can be rehabilitated. And many people will tell you they are our future. I tell you that juveniles, young people today, those young people in middle schools and high schools around America are our today. And it is important to realize that if we incarcerate and lock up a youngster in their teenage years, we are only perpetrating their ways of violence and ill acts. And it is very important that we have these rehabilitative measures, we intervene and it is a very important point.

I would like to acknowledge, as well, the importance of violence against women's office. We stabilized it, if you will, allowed it to be free-standing, and supported it by funding; and I believe that is extremely important.

But I believe, Madam Speaker, that we have some concerns, some more work that could have been done and that is my dilemma today as we come forward. We could have passed 245i that again reinforces family reunification with those who are in this country or seeking to reunite their families who happen to be immigrants. Just this past week I faced a very troubling situation in my own district where nine members of a Palestinian family were about to be deported and not looking at the humanitarian grounds of them having come to this country from a tumultuous region seeking asylum and yet not being able to do so. We were able to provide some remedy for them, and they had a 9-year-old citizen, their daughter who was born in this country; but because she was not of the age of majority, she could not petition for their relief. So we have these problems. We did not do anything in this legislation on that.

We did not fix 1996 immigration laws to keep families together so we do not have these large numbers of individuals being deported to places they have never lived. I believe we should have looked at trying to fix that. And the same thing with the comprehensive immigration bill that I and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) have authored. It fixes the immigration system in its totality. It recognizes that we must be safe but at the same it fixes some of the major loopholes that we have in our immigration system.

I believe, Madam Speaker, as well we have not done ourselves proud by not including the hate crimes legislation that has 206 sponsors so that we would have to result to a discharge petition to try to get that on the floor of the House. How much more do Members have to say when 206 Members believe that we should get rid of hate crimes and have laws against it, legislation authored by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS); and yet we cannot get that to the floor of the House. This should have been included in this legislation.

I am glad to see that we did not codify the TIPS program, neighbors spying on neighbors. Yes, we believe in the security of this Nation, but I also believe Americans believe in civil liberties. I am glad that that is not in this legislation.

Let me conclude, Madam Speaker, on this point, and that is the civil rights office that I believe certainly there are good intentions there but there are issues of police brutality around this Nation. In fact, in my own district we have some incidents of a Hispanic being shot in the back and the medical examiner declared it was a homicide and no action was taken against any of those involved in this case. Another African American shot in the back, unarmed and no action taken against law enforcement.

I am a supporter of law enforcement, but I am supportive of law. And I believe the civil rights division should be invigorated with funding and they should be utilized for what they are utilized for regardless of whether it is a Republican or Democratic administration.

School desegregation orders. I represent a district that is now trying to get rid of their school desegregation order, and they still have the same violations. The Justice Department should not be engaged in being on the side of a school district that is fighting to get rid of their desegregation order when they are still failing our children.

These problems should be addressed in this legislation and more funding should be given to the civil rights division in order to fix these problems. I believe this is a good piece of legislation, but we could have done more.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, in closing I will invite the Members' attention to the matter discussed earlier by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOLDEN). Defeating the previous question as proposed by the gentleman will allow us to permanently extend Chapter 12 protection for farmers. The House has already voted on three separate occasions in this Congress to extend these bankruptcy protections for farmers. Sporadic and temporary extensions leave farmers uncertain of their future. Even as they face record drought, and the gentleman from Montana (Mr. REHBERG) from the other side and I have a drought bill that a substantial number of Members have joined on that we consider critical for our Nation's farmers, and when they experience poor harvest in many regions of the country.

In the absence of Chapter 12, farmers are forced to file bankruptcy under much less favorable terms. Permanent extension as proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOLDEN) will ease these pressures. I ask our membership to defeat the previous question.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Madam Speaker, I want to reiterate my support, strong support for this rule and the underlying legislation. It is very important underlying legislation. It has been over 20 years since we have in effect authorized the needed expenditures of the Department of Justice, and so I urge, again, support for the rule and the underlying measure.

Mr. PHELPS. Madam Speaker, I rise today to move to defeat the previous question on H.R. 2215—Department of Justice Authorization Conference Report. I am very disappointed that the permanent extension of Chapter 12 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code was not included in this legislation.

Madam Speaker, Chapter 12 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code gives farmers much needed bankruptcy protections. This is an issue I have been working on for some time now and was disappointed to see it was not included in this conference report. On April 10th, I offered a motion to Instruct Conferees on the Farm Bill which asked conferees to accept language in the Senate Bill that would make Chapter 12 of the Bankruptcy Code permanent. My motion passed overwhelmingly, but was not included in the final version of the bill.

H.R. 333, the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2001 includes a permanent extension of Chapter 12, but like its predecessor in previous Congresses, H.R. 333 is a bill whose passage is uncertain. Since 1997, farmers have been told to wait for the Bankruptcy Reform Act to pass and they would be protected forever. For five years, farmers have been waiting for this to happen. Farmers have waited too long and need protection now.

Including a permanent extension of Chapter 12 in the DOJ Authorization Conference Report would have given farmers the kind of family farmer bankruptcy protections, on a permanent basis, that we have already voted for three times this Congress. As farmers harvest their crops for this year, they will soon have to borrow against next year's harvest to plant next year's crops. They need to know that the legal protections Congress enacted in 1986 will be there for them if something goes wrong. Unfortunately, they have seen Congress let Chapter 12 lapse several times in the last five years and, despite repeated promises, no permanent relief is in sight. The inability to plan and know that if the worst happens they can save their family farm . . . especially in these uncertain times . . . is devastating.

I do not think that there is any controversy whatsoever that Chapter 12 works well, that it protects our family farmers who are in distress, that it properly balances the legitimate needs of financially troubled farmers and their creditors, and that it preserves the family farm.

Ms. BALDWIN. Madam Speaker, I was absent during rollcall vote No. 418. However, if I would have been present on the Johnson of Texas Motion to Instruct Election Reform Conferees, I would have voted, "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, on rollcall Nos. 416, 417, and 418, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on Nos. 416 and 417, and "nay" on No. 418.

HELP EFFICIENT, ACCESSIBLE, LOW COST, TIMELY HEALTH CARE ACT OF 2002

Mr. REYNOLDS. Madam Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 553 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 553

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 4600) to improve patient access to health care services and provide improved medical care by reducing the excessive burden the liability system places on the health care delivery system. The bill shall be considered as read for amendment. In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committees on the Judiciary and on Energy and Commerce now printed in the bill, the amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution shall be considered as adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, as amended, to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) one hour of debate on the bill, as amended, with 40 minutes equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary and 20 minutes equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce; and (2) one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Madam Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 553 is a closed rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 4600, the Help Efficient, Accessible, Low Cost, Timely Health Care Act of 2002, more commonly known as the HEALTH Act. The rule waives all points of order against consideration of the bill and provides one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Madam Speaker, when it comes to health care, there is nothing more hallowed than the quality of patient care and the integrity of patient choice. However, there is an unfortunate and rising trend in our country that is not only threatening patient care and choice, but is obstructing the way in which doctors and other providers administer that care, and it is collectively costing patients, their families, doctors and taxpayers billions of dollars every year.

In recent years, medical liability insurance premiums have soared to the highest rates since the mid-1980s. These devastating increases have forced health care professionals to limit services, relocate their practices, or retire early. Meanwhile, affordability and availability of insurance is in grave jeopardy, and, in the end, patients are the ones shortchanged.

One might assume that the generous lawsuit judgment awards and settlements would bode well for injured patients seeking redress. However, studies show that most injured patients receive little or no compensation at all. Alarmingly, there is clear evidence indicating that skyrocketing medical liability premiums are a direct result of increases in both lawsuit awards and litigation expenses, and, according to a study compiled by the United States Department of Health and Human Services, excessive litigation is impeding efforts to improve the quality of care and raising the cost of health care that all Americans pay.

By placing modest limits on unreasonable awards for economic damages, an estimated $60 billion to $108 billion, that is $60 billion to $108 billion, could be saved in health care costs each year. Reclaiming this money would lower premiums for doctors and patients, allowing millions of Americans the opportunity to obtain affordable health insurance. Currently, runaway litigation expenses are getting in the way.

Take into consideration my home State of New York. In most instances New York physicians are paying the highest medical liability premiums in the country and are likely to pay at least 20 percent more in premiums over the next year alone. My region of the State is especially feeling the impact.

"The number of doctors leaving Erie last year doubled from the previous year, a trend that continues to 2002," wrote Donald Copley, M.D., an officer of the Erie County Medical Society in the Business First of Buffalo newspaper. The Medical Society of New York says the trend of physicians leaving New York State or retiring early is happening all across the State.

When exorbitant litigation goes unchecked, as it has, premiums escalate, leaving doctors either unable to afford insurance or unable to provide a variety of services, thereby leaving Americans at risk of not being able to find a doctor.

Madam Speaker, this is completely unacceptable.

The legislation before us today will halt the exodus of providers from the health care industry, stabilize premiums, limit staggering attorney fees, and, above all, improve patient access to care.

The HEALTH Act is modeled after legislation adopted by a Democratic legislature and a Democratic Governor in the State of California over 27 years ago. Since that time, insurance premiums in the rest of the country have increased over 500 percent, while California's has only risen 167 percent.

California's insurance market has stabilized, increasing patient access to care and saving more than $1 billion per year in liability premiums. Equally important, California doctors are not leaving the State.

In scaling this model into a national standard, the sponsors of the HEALTH Act included a critical component, state flexibility. The HEALTH Act respects States rights by allowing States that already have damages caps, whether larger or smaller than those provided in the HEALTH Act, to retain such caps.

Madam Speaker, right now this crisis is affecting every State in its own way, but the Nation as a whole is suffering.

President Bush has said that the lawsuit industry is devastating the practice of medicine. Let us not pass up our opportunity to step up to the plate. Doctors should not be afraid to practice medicine and patients should not be afraid of losing their doctor.

I urge my colleagues to support this rule and the underlying legislation.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I thank my friend the gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) for yielding me time.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to the closed rule for H.R. 4600. This is an extremely complex piece of legislation and certainly one that requires a full and open debate. The closed rule denies us a much-needed opportunity to discuss its pros and cons.

To start, I have received, as I am sure other Members have, a number of phone calls from physicians in the district that I am privileged to serve urging me to support this legislation. Most of them expressed their readiness to close their doors because of the high premiums they currently pay for malpractice insurance and erroneously, in my judgment, believe that H.R. 4600 will relieve them of high malpractice insurance premiums.

There is no question that medical liability insurance rates are out of control and doctors, as well as other health care providers, often abandon high-risk patients for fear of being sued. However, what many, if not all, of the physicians who have called my office fail to realize is that H.R. 4600 will not lower doctors' premiums.

Despite a wide consensus, skyrocketing premiums are not due to bad politics. Hiked premiums are the result of insurers' failed profits on their market investments. When insurance companies began to make sound investments with the insured's money, and when our friends on the other side of the aisle allow an open rule so sensible amendments from Democrats and Republicans can be heard, then and only then will premiums be lowered.

The fact is, this bill would restrict the amount of money that malpractice insurance companies will have to pay. But nowhere in this legislation, and I invite my colleagues on the other side to point to the place, nowhere in this legislation are any of these savings going to be passed along to physicians.

Had this been an open rule, we could offer amendments similar to that of my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) that would require savings realized by the insurers as a result of the $250,000 cap be passed on to health care providers in the form of lower premiums. There are other Members who are going to speak here that had this been an open rule, their amendments would have been included as well.

Medical malpractice is the fifth leading cause of death in the United States, where an estimated 98,000 people die annually in United States hospitals because of negligent medical errors. The medical malpractice system is important because it compensates victims injured by negligence, deters future medical misconduct, punishes those who cause injury and death through negligence and removes and informs the public of harmful products and practices.

While a $250,000 cap on punitive and non-economic damages may suffice for the men and women on the other side of the aisle, my constituents and all Americans deserve more. This is a one-size-fits-all bureaucratic approach that objectifies victims and the uniqueness of their suffering.

I told the story yesterday of my grandmother's death. In the "halcyon" days of segregation, when she died at the hands of a physician, we could not sue for the reason we were black. That is not the issue here. But I can tell you this, there was no price that anybody could have put on my grandmother, and there is no price that anybody can put on your sister or your brother, whether you are a doctor or a lawyer or an insurer.

This bill sends a clear and distinct message that lawmakers are more concerned with abating insurance companies' malpractice problems instead of reducing the pain and suffering of the American people.

Let us call this bill what it really is, and that is another poor attempt by my friends on the other side to give financial breaks to their corporate friends. One would think that they would learn from previous incidents of corporate mishaps; but I guess, Madam Speaker, some things never change.

Madam Speaker, H.R. 4600 is a health care immunity act that benefits insurance companies, HMOs, manufacturers and distributors of defective products and pharmaceutical companies, not physicians. It is a tort reform effort of the worst kind. Stunting the judicial process by disallowing the public to litigate unrestricted malpractice suits is not only biased, but it is un-American. I am in strong opposition to this measure. I urge a "no" vote on the rule and the underlying bill.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Nothing in the HEALTH act denies injured plaintiffs the ability to obtain adequate redress, including compensation for 100 percent of their economic losses, their medical costs, their lost wages, their future lost wages, rehabilitation costs, and any other economic out-of-pocket loss suffered as a result of a health care injury. Ceilings on noneconomic damages limit only the inherently unquantifiable element damages, such as those awarded for pain and suffering, loss of enjoyment, and other intangible items. When we look at health care, the reality is, and CBO estimates, that under this bill premiums of medical malpractice ultimately will be on an average of 25 to 30 percent below what they would be under current law. It is time for action.

Mr. COX. Madam Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from New York for yielding me this time.

He is exactly right. What we are talking about doing here is making sure that all of us who have agreed to pay the cost of this system through the insurance system, we all pay for it; that is where the money comes from, to make sure that we all agree that we will pay for unlimited compensation for people who are the victims of medical malpractice, that we will pay for 100 percent of any imaginable cost, 100 percent of all medical costs, 100 percent of lost wages, 100 percent of lost future earnings, 100 percent of any rehabilitation costs; obviously, 100 percent of any medical expenses, doctors, nurses, hospitals, prescription drugs, nursing home care, assisted living, whatever it is, 100 percent of all of these things.

But what we are trying to do is save the patients from a system right now that is falling down all around them. Doctors are getting out of practice; whole hospitals are shutting down, OB-GYNs are not delivering babies any more. People are not getting care. There is a crisis in this country. We had extraordinary testimony before the Committee on Energy and Commerce. We heard that in Nevada, for example, southern Nevada is without a trauma center right now; and it is directly attributable to this malpractice crisis.

We want to do what we have done in California. The law has worked, as the gentleman from New York described.

On June 30 of this year, Methodist Hospital in south Philadelphia, which has been delivering babies since 1892, closed its doors because of this crisis. They are not going to be delivering babies any more. Women need health care; men need health care. We need doctors, we need care, we need treatment. The Congressional Budget Office, as the gentleman from New York pointed out, said that if we pass this bill, we will have $14 billion more available to help our hospitals, available for health care, available to keep the cost of health care down so more people will have insurance. That is what this is all about. The only people who will suffer if this bill is passed are those in their enormous mansions right now that are skimming the top in the gold-plated tort system by faking more than all of the costs that I described for themselves.

In California, what has happened, our premiums, of course, they have gone up; they have gone up 140 percent, but at the same time, the rest of the country has gone up over 5 percent, so we have a system that is much more under control. People are healthier in California. In lawsuits, plaintiffs are getting a greater share of the recoveries in California than they are in other States. And they are getting the recoveries faster. There is no question that the HEALTH act is good for everyone, for patients, for doctors, for the whole health care system, for hospitals, for nurses, for everyone that has come to this Congress.

Madam Speaker, I urge the enactment of this rule and passage of the legislation.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I am very pleased and privileged to yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL), my good friend.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his leadership on this issue.

The doctors in my district in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, and all in the Philadelphia area, face a financial crisis, the same as many doctors around the country, as we have heard here today. This bill will not solve their crisis. This bill does not reflect a comprehensive effort to solve the medical malpractice crisis that we face in southeastern Pennsylvania and across many parts of this country. Nobody wants a compromise. Nobody wants to come together in a reasonable way to find a middle ground. That has happened at various State levels, but it is not happening here in Washington. It is not happening because the Washington representatives of the doctors do not want to compromise; the Washington representatives of the lawyers do not want to compromise. The Committee on Rules has brought forward a closed rule so the House of Representatives cannot be involved in working our will.

If we were to make a good-faith effort to address medical malpractice around the country, we would fundamentally have to address insurance industry reform, and that bill is completely silent on that issue. Frankly, we need to partially lift the antitrust exemption that the insurance industry has enjoyed for 55 years, that allows them to collude, to engage in anticompetitive practices. Those are the problems that are driving up medical malpractice insurance rates, in addition to their losses in the stock market that the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) has already described.

We need to give the Attorney General the ability to regulate national insurance companies because the States are not doing it, and we are not, we are not having these anticompetitive practices investigated and resolved. If we are going to make a good-faith effort regarding caps which are, by their nature, inflexible and arbitrary, we need to add judicial discretion, at a minimum, to any cap, so that a court can make a judgment that could allow an award to reflect what the jury has found in that particular case, not what this body chooses to impose here in Washington as an inflexible one-size-fits-all.

Madam Speaker, this bill does not resolve the problem. We are failing here today. I ask for a negative vote on the rule and against the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK).

Mr. KIRK. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the rule and the bill. We have a medical malpractice crisis in America and especially in my home State of Illinois. I am particularly worried about malpractice rates for obstetricians and gynecologists who are leaving the practice of medicine, rather than ensure the delivery of healthy babies.

I spoke with Dr. Gina Wehramann, an Evanston OB-GYN, who reported that after malpractice payments were paid, she made just $35,000. Her office manager makes $90,000. She is leaving the practice of medicine to become a pharmacist where she can triple her income. She reports that OB-GYNs are leaving the field of medicine in Illinois in dozens and women in northern Illinois will find it hard to receive sufficient care for the delivery of their babies. Dr. Wehramann reported that 85 percent of OB-GYNs in northern Illinois are sued for malpractice. The plaintiffs' bar tells us that 85 percent of OB-GYNs in my State are bad doctors.

All of this adds up to a war on women by the plaintiffs' bar. The plaintiffs' bar killed contraceptive development in our country, with no vote in the Congress and no Presidential decision. European women have many more safe and effective options than Americans, but the plaintiffs' bar does not care. They believe that 85 percent of all OB-GYNs are bad doctors and must be sued out of existence.

The American Association of Neurological Surgeons recently designated 25 States as crisis States, including my home State of Illinois. A constituent of mine, Dr. Jay Alexander, recently told me that his group of 17 cardiologists paid $250,000 in premiums last year, but the bill this year is $800,000. The stories are not limited to physicians. In 2001, Lake Forest Hospital paid $734,000 in malpractice coverage, but that cost will go up to $1.5 million this year. These costs deprive patients of health care at Lake Forest Hospital, and Lake Forest Hospital delivers more babies than any other hospital in Lake County, Illinois; but they will soon have to deny care to these women because of these costs.

With the passage of H.R. 4600 we will end the plaintiffs' bar's war on women. Without this bill, we will continue to see greater distances for deliveries, fewer screening services, and less training for women's health and health care.

Madam Speaker, we must restore the doctor-patient relationship. Today we have a genuine opportunity to pass this legislation and make sure that the women of Illinois and every other State have access to obstetric care.

I urge passage for the bill, and I applaud the gentleman for bringing it to the floor.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

No reflection on my young colleague from Illinois, but as a 40-year lawyer and one involved in the process, I find it difficult to believe that I participated in something dealing with the elimination of contraception, because I protected the rights of women who were victims. My belief is it is the right-to-life group that had as much to do with the elimination of contraception.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL), my distinguished friend and colleague.

Mr. PASCRELL. Madam Speaker, I rise to speak against this unfair rule and against this flawed legislation.

It is really unfortunate that the rule will not allow any amendments to improve the bill. My primary concern is that nowhere in H.R. 4600 does it limit health care lawsuits to just medical malpractice. In fact, health care lawsuits applies to any health care liability claim, quote unquote.

H.R. 4600 would undermine the 11 States of the Union, including my State of New Jersey, that hold HMOs accountable. We arrived at that in a very bipartisan way. It would decimate what we have done in New Jersey, what we have worked so hard to do. In my memory, if my memory serves me correctly, last summer, a majority in this Congress, on both sides of the aisle, voted to hold HMOs accountable when they make medical decisions that kill or permanently maim patients.

So we are on the floor today doing the exact opposite of what most of us supported just last summer. In looking at what happened in California, I have heard that mentioned a few times this afternoon, H.R. 4600 probably would not accomplish its goal of reducing premium costs or increasing the availability of medical malpractice insurance, either. Premiums in California rose 190 percent in the 12 years following the enactment of their claim limitation bill. In its present form, H.R. 4600 is not good for patients, and it does not work.

So I ask that we vote against H.R. 4600. Let us focus on real solutions, such as making the Patients' Bill of Rights law. It is good to be back on domestic issues.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Madam Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON).

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

If we are out there talking to our constituents, if we keep in touch with the medical communities, not just the doctors but the hospitals, the little home health agencies, and if we listen, we will know that our Nation is galloping toward a health care crisis of dimensions we have never faced before, a crisis of cost and a crisis of access.

There are whole States in America where a woman cannot find an obstetrician who will take a high-risk pregnancy. If we talk to the specialty surgeons, many will not take the high-risk cases. Very quietly, access to sophisticated, high-risk care is declining in America. That is the unique strength of the American medical system and it is becoming inaccessible to more and more Americans.

Just in going about my rounds, a five-town area is losing its ENT practice. ENT is a relatively low pickup specialty. Their liability premiums last year were only $22,000. Next year they are going to be closer to $50,000. There are not enough hours in the day for these physicians to see enough patients to pay the increase in those premiums. They are being forced to leave practice.

I had a meeting at a senior citizen center in Brookfield, Connecticut. A gentleman came in and sat all through the senior citizens' questions, and then rose to say that in fact he could not stay in practice after 14 years invested in education and training. He was leaving in 2 years because there were not enough hours in the day for him to see enough patients to pay a $150,000 malpractice premium over this year's $100,000.

My home hospital, in a small little urban community, has all the uncompensated care costs and all the difficulties urban hospitals face: this year, $300,000 malpractice premiums; next year, $1 million. We cannot close our eyes. If this House and our Senate can send a malpractice reform bill to the President, we will lower premiums.

The evidence has been given from California. In California, OB-GYN premiums across the board on average are $43,000; nationally, $107,000. How can doctors continue, how can hospitals continue, without pushing costs up tremendously when their premiums are going to double and triple?

One practice in Waterbury, in the last 7 years the doctors have taken a 50 percent pay cut. Why? Because they are paying their people more, they are investing in technology and medical supplies. They are doing all the right things to provide quality care, to their people. This is in Waterbury, Connecticut. They are doing all the right things. Their own pay has gone down 50 percent.

We in this House were unable to protect them from a 5 percent cut last year, and the Senate is refusing to act, to protect them from another 5% cut this next year. We must protect them from extraordinary malpractice increases that will reduce their ability to provide care to the women of the Waterbury region.

Madam Speaker, this is not something Members can close their eyes to. It does not do any good to say on a grand scale that we have to reform our insurance laws; this is today. It is today women cannot find obstetricians to cover high-risk pregnancies. It is today doctors are being forced to retire by our failure to provide common sense malpractice reform legislation!

Mr. HASTINGS in Florida. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I still point out to the gentlewoman that there is nowhere in this bill that says that insurance premiums are going to go down as a result of this. We could have passed the measure of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) and would have accomplished that.

Madam Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to my good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO).

Mr. DEFAZIO. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Madam Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule and the bill. I had hoped to offer amendments, as did others, that are not being allowed to improve this legislation and deal realistically with this problem.

Even if we believe the preemption of the laws of the 50 States with tort reform, something the Republicans, of course, the States rights party, does not normally believe in, would resolve this problem, we have to question, why is the pharmaceutical industry in this bill? Are they buying malpractice insurance? No. This is an incredible gift to the pharmaceutical industry.

Why is the HMO industry in this bill? Why are the nursing homes in this bill? Guess what? It is all about campaign fundraising on that side of the aisle. They know this bill is so radical, and is not a solution. It is not going anywhere in the Senate, but they want to bring it up today with no amendments and no attempt to really resolve this.

No savings are required to be passed on to the doctors in their premiums. In fact, the insurers never promised that tort reform would achieve specific premium savings. That is the American Insurance Association. That is a quote from them.

The premiums are excessive. Are they excessive because of a cyclical change in settlements? No. We have had four crises in 20 years. Guess what, there have not been four up-and-down cycles in settlements in lawsuits and malpractice; there have been four cycles in the investment losses of the insurance industry, bad underwriting, and bad accounting on their practice.

This is another corporate bailout by the Republicans, plain and simple. This is not going to help my docs. My docs really want a solution. They are desperate. Some of them are even biting on this stuff they are shoveling out. They are going to do nothing to resolve this problem long-term in this country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Madam Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Wyoming (Mrs. CUBIN).

Mrs. CUBIN. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding time to me.

Madam Speaker, the vast majority of physicians across this country are highly qualified medical doctors who look out for the best interests of their doctors. My husband has been in the practice of medicine in a sole practice for over 30 years. My son now is in his second year of medical school, and I know this insurance problem intimately.

The very principle that governs the medical profession is the concept of "do no harm." So what does it say about our society when one of the greatest preoccupations for physicians these days is fear of being sued? In fact, a survey conducted by the organization known as Common Good found that 87 percent of physicians now fear potential medical malpractice lawsuits more than they did when they started their careers, 87 percent.

Health care costs are drastically inflated when doctors order tests that they feel are truly not medically necessary, but they have to order those tests in case a lawsuit should be brought against them. What they want is to do the right thing by their patient healthwise and pocketbook-wise.

We are not talking about limiting economic damages, we are talking about limiting punitive damages. The median medical liability award jumped 43 percent in 1 year, from $700,000 in 1999 to $1 million in the year 2000. This is having a critical effect on health care in many States, many of the lower-populated States, such as Nevada, Oregon, and my home State of Wyoming.

Wyoming goes far beyond what is traditionally known as a rural State. The vast majority of Wyoming has the designation of "frontier," which means there are fewer than 6 people per square mile. Wyoming's population is sparse, with roughly 490,000 spread out over 100,000 square miles. Providers are few and far between, and health care facilities are very limited.

Madam Speaker, what it means when excessive malpractice litigation takes hold is professional liability insurance skyrockets and physicians scramble for coverage. There are only two companies in the State of Wyoming that provide coverage. What happens is the doctors close their doors and have to go to other places to find a job.

This is a travesty of twofold dimensions: Wyoming loses a good physician; but even worse, patients in frontier Wyoming lose access to vital primary care. That is unacceptable to me. I urge everyone to support this rule and support this legislation for physicians and patients alike.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I am privileged to yield 3 minutes to my good friend, the gentlewoman from Nevada (Ms. BERKLEY), who has a considerable amount of experience in her State, as I do in mine, with this problem.

Ms. BERKLEY. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the closed rule for H.R. 4600. Nevada's health care crisis reached alarming proportions this past year. Malpractice insurance premiums jumped as much as $150,000 a year for many of our doctors. At least 150 Nevada doctors closed their practices, and 1 in 10 obstetricians have stopped delivering babies. Others are limiting their practices.

Pregnant women find it difficult to get care. Our largest emergency center closed temporarily when huge malpractice rates forced doctors out the door. So, Madam Speaker, I know firsthand the problems caused by runaway insurance rates, but H.R. 4600 is not the answer.

Let me tell the Members how this harms this Nation's health care. It caps noneconomic damages in the aggregate, barring punitive damages even in the most gross acts of malpractice. It caps noneconomic damages in a way that hits low-income Americans the hardest.

There is no provision for enhancing patient safety. Judicial discretion of egregious circumstances does not exist, or streamlining our court cases. This bill wipes out all of the hard work that Nevada's legislature and its carefully-crafted solution and legislation would solve.

The State of Nevada has passed a reform plan that is a far better starting point than H.R. 4600. This measure, signed by the Governor last month, is a product of hard negotiations and compromise, hard work by the medical and the legal and the insurance professionals. It passed a bipartisan legislature unanimously.

I find it very interesting that many of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle keep talking about Nevada's health care crisis. Not one of them will stand with me and suggest that Nevada's health care solution might be an answer to the problem.

The Nevada plan holds both doctors and lawyers accountable while setting limits on noneconomic damages. It allows judges discretion to make higher awards in the most egregious cases of malpractice. It does not let medical products manufacturers or HMOs or the pharmaceutical companies off the hook.

Madam Speaker, in an unwise rush to vote on H.R. 4600, my amendment that brings the Nevada plan to the floor was denied. My husband is a physician. I know firsthand the crisis facing the medical profession. I live with it every day. This Congress has an obligation to help ease the crisis so doctors can continue to treat their patients.

This legislation is so extreme it has no chance, no chance of passing and getting to the President's desk for signature. While this Congress is playing games with medical malpractice problems, the problem only gets worse, and this legislation will do nothing, absolutely nothing, to help because it will never be passed. This is an election year ploy, and it is shameful in its transparency. I am embarrassed. I am embarrassed for the United States Congress. I am embarrassed for the other side of the aisle.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON).

Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding time to me.

Madam Speaker, I have been involved in legislative issues for 25 years at the State and in Congress. Most of the time, my number one issue has been health care. I chaired health at the State for 10 years. I believe this is the greatest health care crisis facing my State, Pennsylvania, and this country that we will see.

Let me give a little Pennsylvania information. Pennsylvania hospital malpractice premiums in the last 12 months have increased an aggregate of 220 percent. One-third of the hospitals have increased over 300 percent.

Forty percent of the hospitals in Pennsylvania have closed or curtailed services; number one, OB-GYN; number two, trauma, when people are the most seriously ill or traveling further and further; three, neurosurgery and other surgical specialties.

Half of the hospitals in Pennsylvania cannot recruit a physician and are losing the physicians that they have. Fifty percent of teaching programs are finding out that almost all of their students are leaving Pennsylvania. Three-fourths of hospital physicians were denied coverage from an insurance company, and the only reason in Pennsylvania they have coverage is because we have a high-risk pool, at outrageous prices.

Thirty-two rural hospitals in my district, the most rural part of Pennsylvania, had to form their own insurance company because no one would insure them. Eighteen additional hospitals in Pennsylvania are forming their own insurance company. These people have no idea where this is going to take them and what their long-term risks are.

Hospital coverage alone for medical malpractice in Pennsylvania is in excess of one-half billion dollars and rising daily. That does not include physician costs, it does not include nursing homes and health agencies. That is over half a billion dollars that does not treat a patient.

The worst part of the crisis is OB-GYNs and the poorest of American women are going to be denied; those who cannot travel long distances are going to be denied prenatal care, and we will pay for that decades ahead. Any struggling rural hospital that loses their surgeons or OB-GYNs will soon close.

Let me tell my colleagues what they have not heard about this morning. The real opposition to this bill. It limits trial lawyers' rewards. That is what the opposition to this bill is about. But let us see if it is fair. Fifty percent of a $50,000 reward they can still get. That is pretty good pay; 33 1/3 percent of the next $50,000. So that is 42 percent on a $100,000 claim. I think that is pretty good pay. Twenty-five percent on the next half a million. So on a $600,000 claim, they get 28 percent reward. Pretty good pay. Fifteen percent on anything thereafter. So a million dollar reward, they will still make 23 percent that will not go to the victim. I think that is darn good pay.

If we do not address this issue in this country, we are going to be doing the biggest disservice to those who need health care because it will not be available in rural areas, and they are not even a high-risk area. It will not be available in urban areas. I am told the Philadelphia sports teams are having to leave Philadelphia for orthopedic care. A tragedy. Let us fix it.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my good friend and thoughtful legislator, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO).

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend and colleague from the Committee on Rules for yielding me this time.

I am going to try to keep the volume down and talk about what is in this bill. There is no question, my colleagues, that we have a problem in the country. No Member of Congress can say that the status quo is all right. It is not okay for those that are coming into this world not to have the best services of a doctor, of an OB–GYN, of pediatricians; nor is it fair for those who are in the autumn of their lives not to have the right kind of medical assistance.

I think there is unanimity in recognizing what the problem is and that we should be unified in how we resolve this. As a Californian, I know what the MICRA law is. For those who do not know what it stands for, it is the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act. It has been on the books in California for more than a quarter of a century. Democrats put it into place. Democratic Governors have not repealed it. Republican legislators, Democratic Governors, regardless of what that combination has been, for those who take shots at lawyers and Democrats, a Democratic legislature, and for over a quarter of a century, they have kept this law in place.

In the Congress we have looked at MICRA; and the general consensus has been that MICRA is good, MICRA works. To the gentleman and my friend from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD), I told him I will not only be a cosponsor, I will be an original cosponsor of MICRA. This is not MICRA. MICRA places a $250,000 cap on economic damages and malpractice cases. This bill does that as well, and I think that is right. But it also does on product liability cases against drug and medical device manufacturers. How can any Member say to their constituents that that is all right, that they have no recourse? This is not about lawyers. This is about injured patients. We have to stand next to them as well.

The gentlewoman from Connecticut said do not close your eyes; do not close your eyes to that part of the bill. This bill is overburdensome. It is not MICRA, no matter how they advertise it to be such. It does not honor the people we represent. It should be rejected. It is a closed rule because it is closed thinking. I urge a "no" vote.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT).

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the rule on H.R. 4600. Malpractice lawsuits are spiraling out of control. Too many doctors are settling cases even though they have not committed a medical error, and good doctors are ordering excessive tests and procedures and treatments out of fear.

These were the primary issues a panel of experts highlighted at a medical forum I hosted last month in my congressional district. The experts said these issues, or cracks in our medical system, are driving physicians and hospitals out of business.

Are some malpractice lawsuits necessary? Absolutely. Patients must have access to justice and restitution. But it is wrong when excessive costs of malpractice suits and excessive costs of malpractice insurance drive out health care providers.

Mr. Speaker, Congress had the opportunity to fix the malpractice system last summer, but we failed to do so. The good news is that we have another chance today to take the big step towards preserving the long-term viability of the medical system in Illinois and around the country. I urge my colleagues to support the rule on H.R. 4600.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my very good friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK).

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the rule and the underlying bill. This legislation, H.R. 4600, says if we cap lawsuit damages, everything will be okay; but in this bill, once again, the majority party has gone way too far. In this area, as they have in so many other areas, the right to sue is being attacked as the root of all evil and stopping Americans from having access and their day in court. It is not the magic cure-all as the majority party would make it out to be. In fact, when we eliminate and take away the incentive to behave or to be sued, we eliminate deterrence.

And we have gone too far. This is not just malpractice. This is product liability. This is nursing home care. It is all rolled into this one big bill. I understand and I sympathize with those doctors facing huge premiums, but this bill is not the answer they are seeking. We went to offer an amendment, the antitrust, to take the antitrust exemption that insurance companies enjoy so they cannot jack up those premiums 200, 300 percent.

They can because they can all get together. They are not subject to monopoly laws and anti-trust laws. And of course we were denied because this is a closed rule.

Also we heard the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO) say that if you think that this bill is the answer to the malpractice problem, we need to look no further than California, which has a law in place for the last 26 years and this bill is claimed to be done and modeled after that California law. California medical malpractice insurance problems have not disappeared because of the law they passed 26 years ago. They still have it. It did not work.

The focus should not be just this simplistic answer of putting a cap on lawsuits and everything would be okay.

In Michigan we did this 10 years ago. Many of the provisions of this bill were in Michigan's bill passed in the early 90's. Michigan is now considered one of the States, once again, in medical malpractice crisis because the premiums have risen so much. If caps do not work, it is time we look at this crisis from a new focus, a new set of eyes; and what we have to do is start looking at why and look for ways to prevent malpractice.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just disagree with my friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK). One cannot argue with the facts that in California the premiums in the last 27 years have gone up 167 percent. The rest of the country is 500 percent. Doctors are not leaving California like they are in New York, and we have heard testimony from other States like Pennsylvania. So the reality is there is a result based on the acts of that Democratic legislature and Governor 27 years ago. And in addition, we know the CBO in scoring this says that this legislation versus the current law as it is today would reduce the premiums paid by 25 to 30 percent for medical malpractice.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK).

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, since the last speaker brought up Michigan, I thought I would bring it up. Even with our caps in Michigan, our premiums for our doctors are higher than those States without caps. If California has gone up 167 percent in the last few years and the rest of country has gone up 500 percent for malpractice premiums, is it not time we took away the anti-trust exemption for the insurance companies so they cannot go up 500 percent when the rate of inflation is 2 or 3 percent? Why are they going up 500 percent? It is not the lawsuits. It is the stock market, the Enrons and all the other things.

When St. Paul pulls $1.5 billion out of their reserves, they have to make it up someway, and they make it up on the backs of doctors.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) has 10 minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) has 6½ minutes remaining.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT).

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, if we talk about malpractice, we ought to talk about malpractice. If this bill passes, there is no commitment from any insurance company to actually reduce rates. There are some provision in here that have nothing to do with malpractice rates.

The previous speaker mentioned attorneys' fees and how reducing attorneys' fees will reduce attorneys' fees. It did not have anything to do with malpractice insurance. He said if you have a $1 million settlement, that if you limit lawyers' fees to 23 percent that will do some good. He did not say that the malpractice carrier will pay a million dollars. If it is a one-third fee, they will pay a million dollars. If it is no fee, they will pay a million dollars. This does not have anything to do with malpractice.

We ought to focus on the malpractice problem, not just gratuitously hurt the innocent victims of malpractice.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, we have heard from a lot of lawyers today and a few business people. I would like to now have an opportunity to hear from a medical doctor educated in the University of Buffalo and then moved to Florida.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON).

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule and the underlying bill. I just want to touch on a very, very important issue and that is defensive medicine, the incorrect costs of liability on the practice of medicine in the United States. Now, I practiced medicine for 15 years prior to being elected. I still see patients once a month. I practice defensive medicine. I know it is real.

I want to share with my colleagues who think this is not a Federal issue. A study was done, it was published in the Journal of Economics in May of 1996, looking at the impact of the California tort reforms on health care costs and specifically they looked in the Medicare plan. And they discovered that there was a 5 to 9 percent reduction in health care costs brought about in the Medicare plan in the State of California attributable to the caps on noneconomic damages and less defensive medicine.

This is an excellent study, and I would encourage all of my colleagues to read it. What this study also looked at was morbidity and mortality. They said it is not enough to just look at a decline in health care charges, but was it having an adverse effect on patients; were there more complications; were there more deaths. And lo and behold there were not. The researchers out of Stanford University, it is an excellent study published by Kessler and McClellan, they extrapolated this data and concluded that defensive medicine, because of liability, costs us $50 billion a year.

How can that be? I can tell you the patients came in my office. I thought they had this; I would order that test. And then I would say to myself, What if they have something else? What if they have this or that? What if they sue me? So I would start ordering the additional tests to prevent myself from being sued.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to support this rule and support the underlying bill. It is a Federal issue.

DO DOCTORS PRACTICE DEFENSIVE MEDICINE?

[By Daniel Kessler; Mark McClellan]

"Defensive medicine" is a potentially serious social problem: if fear of liability drives health care providers to administer treatments that do not have worthwhile medical benefits, then the current liability system may generate inefficiencies much larger than the cost of compensating malpractice claimants. To obtain direct empirical evidence on this question, we analyze the effects of malpractice liability reforms using data on all elderly Medicare beneficiaries treated for serious heart disease in 1984, 1987, and 1990. We find that malpractice reforms that directly reduce provider liability pressure lead to reductions of 5 to 9 percent in medical expenditures without substantial effects on mortality or medical complications. We conclude that liability reforms can reduce defensive medical practices.

INTRODUCTION

The medical malpractice liability system has two principal roles: providing redress to individuals who suffer negligent injuries, and creating incentives for doctors to provide appropriately careful treatment to their patients [Bell 1984]. Malpractice law seeks to accomplish these goals by penalizing physicians whose negligence causes an adverse patient health outcome, and using these penalties to compensate the injured patients [Danzon 1985]. Considerable evidence indicates that the current malpractice system is neither sensitive nor specific in providing compensation. For example, the Harvard Medical Practice Study [1990] found that sixteen times as many patients suffered an injury from negligent medical care as received compensation in New York State in 1984. In any event, the cost of compensating malpractice claimants is not an important source of medical expenditure growth: compensation paid and the costs of administering that compensation through the legal system account for less than 1 percent of expenditures [OTA 1993].

The effects of the malpractice system on physician behavior, in contrast, may have much more substantial effects on health care costs and outcomes, even though virtually all physicians are fully insured against the financial costs of malpractice such as damages and legal defense expenses. Physicians may employ costly precautionary treatments in order to avoid nonfinancial penalties such as fear or reputational harm, decreased self-esteem from adverse publicity, and the time and unpleasantness of defending a claim [Charles, Pyskoty, and Nelson 1988; Weiler et al. 1993].

On the one hand, these penalties for malpractice may deter doctors and other providers from putting patients as excessive risk of adverse health outcomes. On the other hand, these penalties may also drive physicians to be too careful—to administer precautionary treatments with minimal expected medical benefit out of fear of legal liability—and thus to practice "defensive medicine." Many physicians and policy-makers have argued that the incentive costs of the malpractice system, due to extra tests and procedures ordered in response to the perceived threat of a medical malpractice claim, may account for a substantial portion of the explosive growth in health care costs [Reynolds, Rizzo, and Gonzalez 1987; OTA 1993, 1994]. The practice of defensive medicine may even have adverse effects on patient health outcomes, if liability induces providers either to administer harmful treatments or to forgo risky but beneficial ones. For these reasons, defensive medicine is a crucial policy concern [Sloan, Mergenhagen, and Bovbjerg 1989].

Despite this policy importance, there is virtually no direct evidence on the existence and magnitude of defensive medical practices. Such evidence is essential for determining appropriate tort liability policy. In this paper we seek to provide such direct evidence on the prevalence of defensive medicine by examining the link between medical malpractice tort law, treatment intensity, and patient outcomes. We use longitudinal data on all elderly Medicare recipients hospitalized for treatment of a new heart attack (acute myocardial infarction, or AMI) or of new ischemic heart disease (IHD) in 1984, 1987, and 1990, matched with information on tort laws from the state in which the patient was treated. We study the effect of tort law reforms on total hospital expenditures on the patient in the year after AMI or IHD to measure intensity of treatment. We also model the effect of tort law reforms on important patient outcomes. We estimate the effect of reforms on a serious adverse outcome that is common in our study population: mortality within one year of occurrence of the cardiac illness. We also estimate the effect of tort reforms on two other common adverse outcomes related to a patient's quality of life; whether the patient experienced a subsequent AMI or heart failure requiring hospitalization in the year following the initial illness.

To the extent that reductions in medical malpractice tort liability lead to reductions in intensity but not with increases in adverse health outcomes, medical care for these health problems is defensive; that is doctors supply a socially excessive level of care due to malpractice liability pressures. Put another way, tort reforms that reduce liability also reduce inefficiency in the medical care delivery system to the extent that they reduce health expenditures which do not provide commensurate benefits. We assess the magnitude of defensive treatment behavior by calculating the cost of an additional year of life or an additional year of cardiac health achieved through treatment intensity induced by specific aspects of the liability system. If liability-induced precaution results in low expenditures per year of life saved relative to generally accepted costs per year of life saved of other medical treatments, then the existing liability system provides incentives for efficient care. But if liability-induced precaution results in high expenditures per year of life saved, then the liability system provides incentives for socially excessive care. Because the precision with which we measure the consequences of reforms is critical, we include all U.S. elderly patients with heart diseases in 1984, 1987, and 1990 in our analysis.

Section I of the paper discusses the theoretical ambiguity of the impact of the current liability system on efficiency in health care. For this reason, liability policy should be guided by empirical evidence on its consequences for "due care" in medical practice. Section II reviews the previous empirical literature. Although the existing evidence on the effectiveness of alternative liability rules has provided considerable insights, direct evidence on the crucial effects of the tort system on physician behavior is virtually nonexistent. Section III presents our econometric models of the effects of liability rules on treatment decisions, costs, and patient outcomes, and formally describes the test for defensive medicine used in the paper. We identify liability effects by comparing trends in treatment choice, costs, and outcomes in states adopting various liability reforms to trends in those that did not. We also review a number of approaches to enriching the model, assisting in the evaluation of its statistical validity and providing further insights into the tort reform effects. Section IV discusses the details of our data, and motivates our analysis of elderly Medicare beneficiaries for purposes of assessing the costs of defensive medicine. Section V presents the empirical results. Section VI discusses implications for policy, and Section VII concludes.

I. Malpractice liability and efficient precaution in health care

In general, malpractice claims are adjudicated in state courts according to state laws. These laws require three elements for a successful claim. First, the claimant must show that the patient actually suffered an adverse event. Second, a successful malpractice claimant must establish that the provider caused the event: the claimant must attribute the injury to the action or inaction of the provider, as opposed to nature. Third, a successful claimant must show that the provider was negligent. Stated simply, this entails showing that the provider took less care than that which is customarily practiced by the average member of the profession in good standing, given the circumstances of the doctor and the patient [Keeton et al. 1984]. Collectively, this three-part test of the validity of a malpractice claim is known as the "negligence rule."

In addition to patient compensation, the principal role of the liability system is to induce doctors to take the optimal level of precaution against patient injury. However, a negligence rule may lead doctors to take socially insufficient precaution, such that the marginal social benefit of precaution would be greater than the marginal social cost. Or, it may lead doctors to take socially excessive precaution, that is, to practice defensive medicine, such that the marginal social benefit of precaution would be less than the marginal social cost [Farber and White 1991]. The negligence rule may not generate socially optimal behavior in health care because the private incentives for precaution facing doctors and patients differ from the social incentives. First, the costs of accidents borne by the physician differ from the social costs of accidents. Because malpractice insurance is not strongly experience rated [Sloan 1990], physicians bear little of the costs of patient injuries from malpractice. However, physicians bear significant uninsured expenses in response to a malpractice claim, such as the value of time and emotional energy spent on legal defense [OTA 1993, p. 7]. Second, patients and physicians bear little of the costs of medical care associated with physician precaution in any particular case because most health care is financed through health insurance. Generally, insured expenses for drugs, diagnostic tests, and other services performed for precautionary purposes are much larger than the uninsured costs of the physician's own effort. Third, physicians bear substantial costs of accidents only when patients file claims, and patients may not file a malpractice claim in response to every negligent medical injury [Harvard Medical Practice Study 1990].

The direction and extent of the divergence between the privately and socially optimal levels of precaution depends in part on states' legal environments. Although the basic framework of the negligence rule applies to most medical malpractice claims in the United States, individual states have modified their tort law to either expand or limit malpractice liability along various dimensions over the past 30 years. For example, several states have imposed caps on malpractice damages such that recoverable losses are limited to a fixed dollar amount, such as $250,000. These modifications to the basic negligence rule can affect both the costs to physicians and the benefit to patients from a given malpractice claim or lawsuit, and thereby also affect the frequency and average settlement amount ("severity") of claims. We use the term malpractice pressure to describe the extent to which a state's legal environment provides high benefits to plaintiffs or high costs to physicians or both. (Malpractice pressure can be multidimensional.)

If the legal environment creates little malpractice pressure and externalized costs of medical treatment are small, then the privately optimal care choice may be below the social optimum. In this case, low benefits from filing malpractice claims and lawsuits reduce nonpecuniary costs of accidents for physicians, who may then take less care than the low cost of diagnostic tests, for example, would warrant. However, if the legal environment creates substantial malpractice pressure and externalized costs of treatment are large, then the privately optimal care choice may be above the social optimum: privately chosen care decisions will be defensive. For example, increasing technological intensity (with a reduced share of physician effort costs relative to total medical care costs) and increasing generosity of tort compensation of medical injury would lead to relatively more defensive medical practice.

Incentives to practice defensively may be intensified if judges and juries impose liability with error. For example, the fact that health care providers' precautionary behavior may be ex post difficult to verify may give them the incentive to take too much care [Cooler and Ulen 1986; Craswell and Calfee 1986]. Excessive care results from the all-or-nothing nature of the liability decision: small increases in precaution above the optimal level may result in large decreases in expected liability.

Because privately optimal behavior under the basic negligence rule may result in medical treatment that has marginal social benefits either greater or less than the marginal social costs, the level of malpractice pressure that provides appropriate incentives is an empirical question. In theory, marginal changes to the negligence rule can either improve or reduce efficiency, depending on their effects on precautionary behavior, total health care costs, and adverse health outcomes. Previous studies have analyzed effects of legal reforms on measures of malpractice pressure, such as the level of compensation paid malpractice claimants. To address the potentially much larger behavioral consequences of malpractice pressure, we study the impact of changes in the legal environment on health care expenditures to measure the marginal social cost of treatment induced by the liability system, and the impact of law changes on adverse health events to measure the marginal social benefit of law-induced treatment. As a result, we can provide direct evidence on the efficiency of a baseline malpractice system and, if it is inefficient, identify efficiency-improving reforms.

II. Previous empirical literature

The previous empirical literature is consistent with the hypothesis that providers practice defensive medicine, although it does not provide direct evidence on the existence or magnitude of the problem. One arm of the literature uses surveys of physicians to assess whether doctors practice defensive medicine [Reynolds, Rizzo, and Gonzalez 1987; Moser and Musaccio 1991; OTA 1994]. Such physician surveys measure the cost of defensive medicine only through further untestable assumptions about the relationship between survey responses, actual treatment behavior, and patient outcomes. Although surveys indicate that doctors believe that they practice defensively, surveys only provide information about what treatments doctors say that they would administer in a hypothetical situation: they do not measure behavior in real situations.

Another body of work uses clinical studies of the effectiveness of intensive treatment [Leveno et al. 1986; Shy et al. 1990]. These studies find that certain intensive treatments which are generally thought to be used defensively have an insignificant impact on health outcomes. Similarly, clinical evaluations of malpractice control policies at specific hospitals have found that intensive treatments thought to serve a defensive purpose are "overused" by physicians [Master et al. 1987]. However, this work does not directly answer the policy question of interest: does intensive treatment administered out of fear of malpractice claims have any effect on patient outcomes? Few medical technologies in general use have been known to be ineffective in all applications, and the average effect of a procedure in a population may be quite different from its effect at the margin in, for example, the additional patients who receive it because of more stringent liability rules [McClellan 1995]. Evaluating malpractice liability reforms requires evidence on the effectiveness of intensive treatment in the "marginal" patients.

A third, well-developed arm of the literature estimates the effects of changes in the legal environment on measures of the compensation paid and the frequency of malpractice claims. Danzon [1982, 1986] and Sloan, Mergenhagen, and Bovbjerg [1989] find that tort reforms that cap physicians' liability at some maximum level or require awards in malpractice cases to be offset by the amount of compensation received by patients from collateral sources reduce payments per claim. Danzon [1986] also finds that collateral-source-rule reforms and statute-of-limitations reductions reduce claim frequency. Based on data from malpractice insurance markets, Zuckerman, Bovbjerg, and Sloan [1990] and Barker [1992] reach similar conclusions: Zuckerman, Bovbjerg, and Sloan find that caps on damages and statute-of-limitations reductions reduce malpractice premiums, and Barker finds that caps on damages increase profitability.

Despite significant variety in data and methods, this literature contains an important unified message about the types of legal reforms that affect physicians' incentives. The two reforms most commonly found to reduce payments to and the frequency of claims, caps on damages and collateral-source-rule reforms, share a common property: they directly reduce expected malpractice awards. Caps on damages truncate the distribution of awards; mandatory collateral-source offsets shift down its mean. Other malpractice reforms that only affect malpractice awards indirectly, such as reforms imposing mandatory periodic payments (which require damages in certain cases to be disbursed in the form of an annuity that pays out over time) or statute-of-limitations reductions, have had a less discernible impact on liability and hence on malpractice pressure.

However, estimates of the impact of reforms on frequency and severity from these analyses are only the first step toward answering the policy question of interest: do doctors practice defensive medicine? Taken alone, they only provide evidence of the effects of legal reforms on doctors' incentives; they do not provide evidence of the effects of legal reforms on doctors' behavior. Identifying the existence of defensive treatment practices and the extent of inefficient precaution due to legal liability requires a comparison of the response of costs of precaution and the response of losses from adverse events to changes in the legal environment.

A number of studies have sought to investigate physicians' behavioral response to malpractice pressure. These studies generally have analyzed the costs of defensive medicine by relating physicians' actual exposure to malpractice claims to clinical practices and patient outcomes [Rock 1988; Harvard Medical Practice Study 1990; Localio et al. 1993; Baldwin et al. 1995]. Rock, Localio et al., and the Harvard Medical Practice Study find results consistent with defensive medicine; Baldwin et al. do not. However, concerns about unobserved heterogeneity across providers and across small geographic areas qualify the results of all of these studies. The studies used frequency of claims or magnitude of insurance premiums at the level of individual doctors, hospitals, or areas within a single state over a limited time period to measure malpractice pressure. Because malpractice laws within a state at a given time are constant, the measures of malpractice pressure used in these studies arose not from laws but from primarily unobserved factors at the level of individual providers or small areas, creating a potentially serious problem of selection bias. For example, the claims frequency or insurance premiums of a particular provider or area may be relatively high because the provider is relatively low quality, because the patients are particularly sick (and hence prone to adverse outcomes), because the patients had more "taste" for medical interventions (and hence are more likely to disagree with their provider about management decisions), or because of many other factors. The sources of the variation in legal environment are unclear and probably multifactorial. All of these factors are extremely difficult to capture fully in observational data sets and could lead to an apparent but noncausal association between measured malpractice pressure and treatment decisions or outcomes.

Thus, while previous analyses have provided a range of insights about the malpractice liability system, they have not provided direct empirical evidence on how malpractice reforms would actually affect physician behavior, medical costs, and health outcomes.

III. Econometric modes

Our statistical methods seek to measure the effects of changes in an identifiable source of variation in malpractice pressure influencing medical decision making—state tort laws—that is not related to unobserved heterogeneity across patients and providers. We compare time trends across reforming and nonreforming states during a seven-year period in inpatient hospital expenditures, and in outcome measures including all-cause cardiacmortality as well as the occurrence of cardiac complications directed related to quality of life. We model average expenditures and outcomes as essentially nonparametric functions of patient demographic characteristics, state legal and political characteristics, and state- and time-fixed effects. We model the effects of state tort law changes as differences in time trends before and after the tort law changes. We test for the existence and magnitude of defensive medicine based on the relationship of the law-change effects on medical expenditures and health outcomes.

While this strategy fundamentally involves differences-in-differences between reforming and nonreforming states to identify effects, we modify conventional differences-in-differences estimation strategies in several ways. First, as noted above, our models include few restrictive parametric or distributional assumptions about functional forms for expenditures or health outcomes. Second, we do not only model reforms as simple one-time shifts. Malpractice reforms might have more complex, longer term effects on medical practices for a number of reasons. Law changes may not have instantaneous effects because it may take time for lawyers, physicians, and patients to learn about their consequences for liability, and then to re-establish equilibrium practices. Law changes may affect not only the static climate of medical decision making, but also the climate for further medical interventions by reducing pressure for technological intensity growth. Thus, the long-term consequences of reforms may be different from their short-term effects. By using a panel data set including a seven-year panel, our modeling framework permits a more robust analysis of differences in time trends before and after adoption.

We use a panel-data framework with observations on successive cohorts of heart disease patients for estimating the prevalence of defensive medicine. In state s=1, S during year t=1, T, our observational units consist of individual T=1, [N.sub.st] who are hospitalized with new occurrences of particular illnesses such as a heart attack. Each patient has observable characteristics [X.sub.ist], which we describe as a fully interacted set of binary variables, as well as many unobservable characteristics that also influence both treatment decisions and outcomes. The individual receives treatment of aggregate intensity [R.sub.ist], where R donates total hospital expenditures in the year after the health event. The patient has a health outcome [O.sub.ist], possibly affected by the intensity of treatment received, where a higher value denotes a more adverse outcome (O is binary in our models).

We define state tort systems in effect at the time of each individual's health event based on the existence of two categories of reforms from a maximum-liability regime: direct and indirect malpractice reforms. Previous studies, summarized in Section II, found differences between these types of reforms on claims behavior and malpractice insurance premiums (Section IV below discusses our reform classification in detail). We denote the existence of direct reforms in state s at time t using two binary variables [L.sub.mst]: [L.sub.1st] = 1 if state s has adopted a direct reform at time t, and [L.sub.2st] = 1 if state s has adopted an indirect reform at time t. [L.sub.st] = [[L.sub.1st][L.sub.2st]] is thus a two-dimensional binary vector describing the existence of malpractice reforms.

We first estimate linear models of average expenditure and outcome effects using these individual-level variables. The expenditure models are of the form, (1) [R.sub.ist] = [[theta].sub.t] + [[alpha].sub.s] + [X.sub.ist][beta] + [W.sub.st][gamma] + [L.sub.st][[phi].sub.m] + [V.sub.ist], where [[theta].sub.t] is a time-fixed effect, [[alpha].sub.s] is a state-fixed effect, [W.sub.st] is a vector of variables described below which summarize the legal-political environment of the state over time, [beta] and [gamma] are vectors of the corresponding average-effect estimates for the demographic controls and additional state-time controls, [[phi].sub.m] is the two-dimensional average effect of malpractice reforms on growth rate, and [v.sub.ist] is a mean-zero independently distributed error term with E([v.sub.ist] [pipe] [X.sub.ist], [L.sub.st],[W.sub.st]) = 0. Because legal reforms may affect both the level and the growth rate of expenditures, we estimate different baseline time trends [[theta].sub.t] for states adopting reforms before 1985 (which were generally adopted before 1980) and nonadopting states. Our data set includes essentially all elderly patients hospitalized with the heart diseases of interest for the years of our study, so that our results describe the actual average differences in trends associated with malpractice reforms in the U.S. elderly population. We report standard errors for inferences about average differences that might arise in potential populations (e.g., elderly patients with these health problems in other years). Our model assumes that patients grouped at the level of state and time have similar distributions of unobservable characteristics that influence medical treatments and health outcomes. Assuming that malpractice laws affect malpractice pressure, but do not directly affect patient expenditures or outcomes, then the coefficients [phi] identify the average effects of changes in malpractice pressure resulting from malpractice reforms.

To distinguish short-term and long-term effects of legal reforms, we estimated less restrictive models of the average effects of legal reforms that utilize the long duration of our panel. These "dynamic" models estimate separate growth rate effects [[phi].sub.md] based on time-since-adoption: (2) [Mathematical Expression Omitted] where we include separate short-term average effects [[phi].sub.m0] and long-term average effects [[phi].sub.m1]. We estimate the short-term effect of the law (within two years of adoption) [[phi].sub.m0] by setting [d.sub.st0] = 1 for 1985–1987 adopters in 1987 and 1988–1990 adopters in 1990, and we estimate the long-term effect (three to five years since adoption) by setting [d.sub.st] = 1 for 1985–1987 adopters in 1990.

The estimated average effects [[phi].sub.md]d in these models form the basis for tests of the effects of malpractice reforms on health care expenditures and outcomes, and thus for tests of the existence and magnitude of defensive medicine. In all of these models, there is evidence of defensive medicine if, for direct or indirect reforms m, [[phi].sub.md] < 0 in our models of medical expenditures and [[phi].sub.md] = 0 in our models of health outcomes. In other words, if a state law reform is associated with a reduction in the growth rate of medical expenditures and does not adversely affect the growth rate of adverse heath outcomes through its impact on treatment decisions, then malpractice pressure is too high from the perspective of social welfare, and defensive medicine exists. More generally, defensive medicine exists if the effect of malpractice reforms on expenditures is "large" relative to the effect on health outcomes. Thus, in the results that follow, we test both whether expenditure and outcome effects of reforms differ substantially from zero, as well as the ratio of expenditure to outcome effects.

The power of the test for defensive medicine depends on the statistical precision of the estimated effects of law reforms on outcomes. Consequently, we evaluate the confidence intervals surrounding our estimates of outcome efforts carefully. It is not feasible to collect information on all health outcomes that may matter to some degree to individual patients. Instead, our tests focus on important health outcomes, including mortality and significant cardiac complications, which are reliably observed in our study population. Because the cardiac complications we consider reflect the two principal ways in which poorly treated heart disease would affect quality of life (e.g., through further heart attacks or through impaired cardiac function), estimates of effects on these health outcomes along with mortality would presumably capture any important health consequences of malpractice reforms.

We estimated additional specifications of our models to test whether reform adoption is not in fact correlated with unobserved trends in malpractice pressures or patient characteristics across the state-time groups. One set of specification tests was based on the inclusion of random effects for state-time interactions. To account for any geographically correlated variations in costs or expenditures over time, we included Huber-White [1980] standard error corrections for zip code-time error correlations. We also tested whether our estimated standard errors were sensitive to Huber-White corrections for state-time error correlations.

Another set of specification tests involved evaluating a range of variables [W.sub.st] summarizing the political and regulatory environment in each state at each point in time, to test whether various factors that might influence reform adoption influence our estimates of reform effects on either expenditure or health outcomes. Since the main cause of the tort reforms that are the focus of our study was nationwide crisis in all lines of commercial casualty insurance, it is unlikely that endogeneity of reforms is a serious problem [Priest 1987; Rabin 1988]. However, Campbell Kessler, and Shepherd [1996] show that the concentration of physicians and lawyers in a state and measures of states' political environment are correlated with liability reforms, and Danzon [1982] shows that the concentration of lawyers in a state is correlated with both the compensation paid to malpractice claims and the enactment of reforms. Consequently, we control for the political party of each state's governor, the majority political party of each house of each state's legislature, and lawyers per capita in all of the regressions, and we tested the sensitivity of our results to these controls.

A third set of specification tests relied on other tort reforms enacted in the 1980s which should have had a minimal impact on malpractice liability cases in the elderly during the time frame of our study. However, these reforms might be correlated with relevant malpractice reforms if, for example, general concerns about liability pressures in all industries led to broad legal reforms. If such reforms were correlated with included reforms, then our estimates might overstate the impact of the malpractice law reforms that we analyze.

Along these lines, we investigate the validity of our assumption of no omitted variable bias by estimating the impact of reforms to states' statuses of limitations. Statutes of limitations are most relevant in situations involving latent injuries. Malpractice arising out of AMI in the elderly would involve an injury of which the adverse consequences would appear before any statute of limitations would exclude an injured patient. Nonetheless, statutes of limitations are the potentially most important reform not included in our study (23 states shortened their statutes of limitations between 1985 and 1990, and Danzon [1986] finds that shorter statutes of limitations reduced claims frequency). If our models are correctly specified, then statute-of-limitations reforms sohuld have no effect on the treatment intensity and outcome decisions that we analyze. If omitted variable bias is a problem, however, statute-of-limitations reforms may show a significant estimated effect.

Finally, because all of our specifications control for fixed differences across states, they do not allow us to estimate differences in the baseline levels of intensive treatment and adverse health outcomes. Thus, we also estimate additional versions of all of our models with region effects only, to explore baseline differences in treatment rates, costs, and outcomes across legal regimes.

IV. Data

The data used in our analysis come from two principal sources. Our information on the characteristics, expenditures, and outcomes for elderly Medicare beneficaries with heart disease are derived from comprehensive longtiudinal claims data for the vast majority of elderly Medicare beneficaries who were admitted to a hospital with a new primary diagnosis (no admission with either health problem in the preceding year) of either acute myocardial infraction (AMI) or ischemic heart disease (IHD) in 1984, 1987, and 1990. Data on patient demographic characteristics were obtained from the Health Care Financing Administration HISKEW enrollment files, with death dates based on death reports validated by the Social Security Administration. Measures of total one-year hospital expenditures were obtained by adding up all reimbursement to acute-care hospitals (including copayments and deductible not paid by Medicare) from insurance claims for all hospitalizations in the year following each patient's initial admission for AMI or IHD. Measures of the occurrence of cardiac complications were obtained by abstracting data on the principal diagnosis for all subsequent admissions (not counting transfers) in the year following the patient's initial admission. Cardiac complications included re-hospitalizations within one year of the initial event with a primary diagnosis (principal cause of hospitalization) of either subsequent AMI or heart failure. Treatment of IHD and AMI patients is intended to prevent subsequent AMIs if possible, and the occurrence of heart failure requiring hospitalization is evidence that the damage to the patient's heart from ischemic disease has serious functional consequencies. The programming rules used in the data set creation process and sample exclusion criteria were virtually identical to those reported in McClellan and Newhouse [1995, 1996].

We analyze cardiac disease patients because the choice of a particular set of diagnoses permits detailed exploration of the health and treatment consequences of policy reforms. Cardiac disease and its complications are the leading cause of medical expenditures and mortality in the United States. A majority of AMIs and IHD hospitalizations occurs in hte elderly, and both mortality and subsequent cardiac complications are relatively common occurrences in this population. Thus, this condition provides both a relatively homogeneous set of patients and outcomes (to analyze the presence of defensive medicine with reasonable clinical detail), and medical expenditures are large enough and the relevant adverse outcomes common enough that the test for defensive medicine can be a precise one. Furthermore, because AMI is essentially a severe form of the same underlying illness as is IHD, we can assess whether reforms affect more or less severe cases of a health problem differently by comparing AMI with IHD patients.

In addition, cardiovascular illness is likely to be sensitive to defensive medical practices. In a ranking of illnesses by the frequency of and payments to the malpractice claims that they generate, AMI is the third most prevalent and costly, behind only malignant breast cancer and brain-damaged infants [PIAA 1993]. AMI is also disinctive because of the severity of medical injury associated with malpractice claims: conditional on a claim, patients with AMI suffer injury that rates 8.2 on the National Association of Insurance Commissioners nine-point severity scale, the second-highest severity rating of any malpractice-claim-generating health problem [PIAA]. Cardiovascular illnesses and associated procedures also include 7 of the 40 most prevalent and costly malpractice-claim-generating health problems [PIAA].

We focus on elderly patients in part because no comparable longitudinal microdata exist for nonelderly U.S. patient populations. However, there are other advantages to concentrating on this population. Several studies have documented that claims rates are lower in the elderly than in the nonelderly population, presumably because losses from severe injuries would be smaller given the patients' shorter expected survival [Weller et al. 1993]. This hypothesis suggests that physicians are least likely to practice defensively for elderly patients. Thus, treatment decisions and expenditures in this population would be the least sensitive to legal reforms. Similarly, relatively low baseline incentives for defensive practices and the relatively high frequency of adverse outcomes in the elderly imply that this population can provide the most sensitive tests for adverse health effects of reforms. These considerations suggest that analysis of elderly patients provides a lower bound on the costs of defensive medicine. In any event, trends in practice patterns over time have been similar for elderly and nonelderly patients (e.g., intensity of treatment has increased dramatically and survival rates have improved for both groups [National Center for Health Statistics 1994]). Thus, we would expect the findings for this population to be qualitatively similar to results for the nonelderly, if such a longitudinal empirical analysis were possible.

Table I describes the elderly population with AMI and IHD from the years of our study. Between 1984 and 1990 the elderly AMI population aged slightly, and the share of males in the IHD population increased slightly, but the characteristics of AMI and IHD patients were otherwise relatively stable. The number of AMI patients in an annual cohort declined slightly (from 233,000 to 221,000), while the number of IHD patients increased (from 357,000 to 423,000). Changes in real hospital expenditures in the year following the AMI or IHD event were dramatic. For example, one-year average hospital expenditures for AMI patients rose from $10,880 in 1984 to $13,140 in 1990 (in constant 1991 dollars), a real growth rate of around 4 percent per year. These expenditure trends are primarily attributable to changes in intensity. Because of Medicare's "prospective" hospital payment system, reimbursement given treatment choice for Medicare patients actually declined during this period. This growth in expenditures and treatment intensity was associated with significant mortality reductions, from 39.9 percent to 35.3 percent for AMI patients (with the bulk of the reduction coming after 1987) and from 13.5 percent to 10.8 percent for IHD patients (with the bulk coming before 1987). However, the AMI survival improvements—but not the IHD improvements—were associated with corresponding increases in recurrent AMIs and in heart failure complications. This underscores that the role of changes in intensity versus other factors—as well as any role of changes in liability—is difficult to identify directly in all of these trends.

Second, building on prior efforts to collect information on state malpractice laws (e.g., Sloan, Mergenhagen, and Bovbjerg [1989]), we have compiled a comprehensive database on reforms to state liability laws and state malpractice-control policies that contain information on several types of legal reforms from 1969 to 1992(8). The legal regime indicator variables are defined such that the level of liability imposed on defendants in the baseline is at a hypothetical maximum.

Eight characteristics of state malpractice law, representing divergences from the baseline legal regime, are summarized in Table IIA. We divide these eight reforms into two groups of four reforms each: reforms that directly reduce malpractice awards and reform that only reduce awards indirectly. "Direct" reforms include reforms that truncate the upper tail of the distribution of awards, such as caps on damages and the abolition of punitive damages, and reforms that shift down the mean of the distribution, such as collateral-source-rule reform and abolition of mandatory prejudgment interest. "Indirect" reforms include other reforms that have been hypothesized to reduce malpractice pressure but only affect awards indirectly, for instance, through restricting the range of contracts that can be enforced between plaintiffs and contingency-fee attorneys. As discussed in Section II above, we chose this division because the previous empirical literature generally found the impact of direct reforms to be larger than the impact of indirect reforms on physicians' incentives through their effect on the compensation paid and the frequency of malpractice claims. Each of the observations in the Medicare data set was matched with a set of two tort law variables that indicated the presence or absence of direct or indirect malpractice reforms at the item of their initial hospitalization.

Table IIB contains the effective date for the adoption of direct and indirect reforms for each of the 50 states. The table shows that a number of states have implemented legal reforms at different times. For example, 13 states never adopted any direct reforms, 23 states adopted direct reforms between 1985 and 1990, and 18 states adopted direct reforms 1984 or earlier (adoptions plus nonadoptions exceed 50 because some states adopted both before and after 1985). Similarly, 16 state never adopted any indirect reforms, 23 states adopted indirect reforms between 1985 and 1990, and 18 states adopted indirect reforms 1984 or earlier. Adoption of direct and indirect reforms is not strongly related: sixteen states that never adopted reforms of one type have adopted reforms of the other.

V. Empirical results

Table III previews our basic difference-in-difference (DD) analysis by reporting unadjusted conditional means for expenditures and mortality for four patient groups, based on the timing of malpractice reforms. Expenditure levels in 1984 (our base year) were slightly higher in states passing reforms between 1985–1987 and lower in states passing reforms between 1988–1990. Baseline mortality rates were slightly lower for AMI and higher for IHD in the 1985–1987 reform states, and conversely for the 1988–1990 reform states. Thus, overall, reform states looked very similar to nonreform states in terms of baseline expenditures and outcomes. States with earlier reforms (pre-1985) had slightly higher base year expenditures but similar base year mortality rates. The table shows that expenditure growth in reform states was smaller than in nonreform states during the study years. Altogether, growth was 2 to 6 percent slower in the reform compared with the nonreform states for AMI, and trend differences were slightly greater for IHD. Although mortality trends differed somewhat across the state groups, mortality trends on average were quite similar for reform and nonreform states. These simple comparisons do not account for any differences in trends in patient characteristics across the state groups, do not account for any effects of other correlated reforms, and do not readily permit analysis of dynamic malpractice reform effects. Nonetheless, they anticipate the principal estimation results that follow.

Table IV presents standard DD estimates of the effects of tort reforms between 1985 and 1990 on average expenditures and outcomes for AMI, that is, no dynamic reform effects are included. In this and subsequent models, we include fully interacted demographic effects—for patient age (65–69, 70–74, 75–79, 80–89, 90–99), gender, black or nonblack race, and urban or rural residence—and controls for contemporaneous political and regulatory changes described previously. For each of the four outcomes—one-year hospital expenditures, mortality, and AMI and CHF readmissions—two sets of models are reported. The first set includes complete state and year fixed effects. The second set, intended to illustrate the average differences of states that had adopted reforms before our study began as well as the sensitivity of the results to a more complete fixed-effect specification, includes only time and census region effects. As described in Section II, both specifications are linear, the dependent variable in the expenditure models is logged, all coefficient estimates are multiplied by 100 and so can be interpreted as average effects in percent (for expenditure models) or percentage points (for outcomes models), and the standard errors are corrected for heteroskedasticity and grouping at the state/zip-code level.

The estimates of average expenditure growth rates in both specifications are substantial showing an increase in real expenditures of over 21 percent between 1984 and 1990. The estimated DD effects show that expenditures declined by 5.3 percent in states that adopted direct reforms relative to nonreforming states. The corresponding DD estimate of the effect of indirect reforms, 1.8 percent, is positive but small; these reforms do not appear to have a substantial effect on expenditures. In the region-effect models, the estimated DD reform effects are slightly larger but qualitatively similar States that adopted reforms prior to our study period had 1984–1990 growth rates in expenditures that were slightly larger, by around 3 percent. The region-effect model shows that these states as a group also had slightly higher expenditure levels in 1984. Because these states generally adopted reforms at least five years before our panel began, our results suggest that direct reforms do not result in relatively slower expenditure growth more than five years after adoption. However, lack of a pre-adoption baseline for and adoption-time heterogeneity among the early-adopting states, as well as the sensitivity of the early-adopter/nonadopter differential growth rates to alternative specifications (as discussed below), complicates interpreting estimates of differential early-adopter/nonadopter growth rates as a long-term effect. In any event, in no case would the differential 1984–1990 expenditure growth rate between adopters and nonadopters offset the difference-indifference "levels" effect. In total, malpractice reforms always result in a decline in cost growth at least 10 percent.

The remaining columns of Table IV describe the corresponding DD estimates of reform effects on AMI outcomes. Mortality rates declined, but readmission rates with cardiac complications increased during this time period, confirming the results of Table I. Outcome trends were very similar in reform and nonreform states: the cumulative difference in mortality and cardiac complication trends was around 0.1 percentage points. These small estimated mortality differences are not only insignificantly different from zero, they are estimated rather precisely as well. For example, the upper 95 percent confidence limit for the effect of direct reforms on one-year mortality trends between 1984 and 1990 is 0.64 percentage points. Coupled with the estimated expenditure effect, the expenditure effect, the expenditure/benefit ratio for a higher pressure liability regime is over $500,000 per additional one-year AMI survivor in 1991 dollars.

Even a ration based on the upperbound mortality estimate translates into hospital expenditures of over $100,000 per additional AMI survivor to one year. The estimates in the corresponding region-effect models are very similar. Indirect reforms were also associated with estimated mortality effects that were very close to zero. Results for outcomes related to quality of life, that is, rehospitalizations with either recurrent AMI or heart failure, also showed no consequential effects of reforms. In this case, the point estimates (upper bound of the 95 percent confidence interval) for the estimated effected of direct reforms were −0.18 (0.21) percentage points for AMI recurrence and −0.07 (0.28) percentage points for the occurrence of heart failure. Again, compared with the estimated expenditure effects, these differences are not substantial.

Table V presents estimated effects of malpractice reforms on IHD expenditures and outcomes, with results qualitatively similar to those just described for AMI. IHD expenditure also grew rapidly between 1984 and 1990. Direct reform led to somewhat larger expenditure reductions for IHD (9.0 percent) and indirect reforms were again associated with relatively smaller increases in expenditures (3.4 percent). The effects of reform on IHD outcomes are again very small: the effect of direct reforms on mortality rates was an average difference of −0.19 percentage points (95 percent upper confidence limit of 0.10), and the effects on subsequent occurrence of AMI or heart failure hospitalizations were no larger. Estimates from the models with region effects were very similar. Thus, directly liability reforms appear to have relatively larger effect on IHD expenditures, without substantial consequences for health outcomes.

As we noted in Section III, the simple average effects of liability reforms estimated in the DD specifications of Tables IV and V may not capture the dynamic effects of reforms. Table VI presents results form model specifications that estimate reform effects less restrictively. In these specifications we use our seven-year panel to estimate short-term and long-term effects of direct and indirect reforms on expenditures and outcomes, to determine whether the "shift" effect implied by the DD specification is adequate. The models retain our state and time fixed effects.

We find the same general patterns as in the simple DD models, but somewhat larger effects of malpractice reforms three to five years after adoption compared with the short-term effects. In particular, Table VI shows that direct reforms lead to short-term reductions in AMI expenditures of approximately 4.0 percent within two years of adoption, and that the reduction grows to approximately 5.8 percent three to five years after adoption. This specification also shows that the positive association between indirect reforms and expenditures noted in Table IV is a short-term phenomenon: the long-term effect on expenditures is approximately zero.

As in Table IV, both direct and indirect reforms have trivial effects on mortality and readmissions with complications, both soon and later after adoption. For example, the average difference in mortality trends between direct-reform and nonreform states is −0.22 percentage points (not significant) within two years of adoption, with a 95 percent upper confidence limit of 0.39 percentage points. At three to five years the estimated effect is 0.12 percentage points (not significant) with a 95 percent upper confidence limit of 0.75 percentage points. These points estimates translate into very high expenditures per reduction in adverse AMI outcomes.

The results for the corresponding model of IHD effects over time are presented in the right half of Table VI. Direct reforms are associated with a 7.1 percent reduction in expenditures by two years after adoption (standard error 0.5) and an 8.9 percent reduction by five years after (standard error 0.5). In contrast, mortality tends for states with direct reforms do not differ significantly by two years (point estimate of −0.15 percentage points, 95 percent upper confidence limit 0.18) or five years after adoption (point estimate −0.11 percentage points, 95 percent upper confidence limit 0.22). Direct reforms also have no significant or substantial effects on cardiac complications, either immediately or later. Indirect reforms are again associated with small positive effects on expenditure growth (3.1 percent within two years), but these effects decline over time to a relative trivial level (1.4 percent at three to five years). Indirect reforms are also associated with slightly lower mortality rates and slightly higher rates of cardiac complications, but the size of these effects is very small (e.g., the upper limit of the 95 percent confidence interval around the estimated effect of indirect reforms three to five years after adoption is 0.47 percentage points for AMI recurrence and 0.29 percentage points for heart failure occurrence). Thus, the pattern of reform effects for IHD is again qualitatively similar to that for AMI, with direct reforms having a somewhat larger effect on expenditures.

Taken together, the estimates in Tables IV through VI consistently show that the adoption of direct malpractice reforms between 1984 and 1990 led to substantial relative reductions in hospital expenditures during this period—accumulating to a reduction of more than 5 percent for AMI and 9 percent for IHD by five years after reform adoption—and that these expenditure effects were not associated with any consequential effects on mortality or on the rates of significant cardiac complications.

We estimated a variety of other models to explore the robustness of our principal results. We tested the sensitivity of our results to alternative assumptions about the excludability of state/time interactions. One set of tests reestimated the models with random state/time effects to determine whether correlated outcomes at the level of state/time interactions might affect our conclusions. Our estimated effects of reforms did not differ substantially or significantly with these methods. Using the model presented in Tables IV and V, the estimated difference-indifference effect of direct reforms on expenditures for AMI patients, controlling for random state/time effects, is −4.9 percent (standard error 2.1), and for indirect reforms, the estimated effect is −0.6 percent (standard error 2.0). The estimated DD effect of direct reforms on mortality for AMI patients, controlling for random state/time effects, is 0.15 percentage points (standard error 0.32) and for indirect reforms, the estimated effect is −0.19 percentage points (standard error 0.32). We obtained similar results for IHD patients: direct reforms showed a negative and statistically significant effect on expenditures with an insubstantial and precisely estimated effect on mortality, and indirect reforms showed no substantial effect on either expenditures or mortality. Estimated differential 1984–1990 expenditure growth rates between early-adopters and nonadopters were insignificant in the random effects specification. For AMI patients the differential growth rate for early adopters of direct reforms is 0.61 percent (standard error 3.1). For early adopters of indirect reforms the differential growth rate is 0.61 percent (standard error 2.3). For IHD patients the differential growth rate for early adopters of direct reforms is −1.9 percent (standard error is 3.0). For early adopters of indirect reforms the differential growth rate is −3.2 percent (standard error is 2.2). Another related diagnostic involved estimating the models with Huber-White [1980] corrections for state/time grouped errors instead of corrections for zipcode/ time grouped errors. Standard errors corrected for state/ time grouping were somewhat larger than those corrected for zipcode/ time grouping but smaller than those obtained under the random effects specification.

Although they did have a statistically significant influence on expenditures in some models, the broad set of political and regulatory environment controls that we used did not change our results substantially. Using the models presented in Tables IV and V but excluding controls for the regulatory and legal environment, the estimated DD effect of direct reforms on expenditures for AMI patients −9.1 percent (standard error is 0.44). For indirect reforms the estimated DD effect is 3.3 percent (standard error is 0.40). In addition, the difference in 1984–1990 growth rates between early-reforming and nonreforming states changes sign from positive to negative for enacting direct reforms before 1985 (Table IV: 3.1 percent with legal environment controls, −3.1 percent without them). The difference in growth rates for states enacting indirect reforms before 1985 remains about the same (Table IV: 2.8 percent with legal environment controls, 3.5 percent without them). These two specification checks, taken together, underscore the points made by Tables IV and V. Direct reforms reduce expenditure growth without increasing mortality, indirect reforms have no substantial effect on either expenditures or mortality, and differential 1984–1990 expenditure growth rates for early-adopting states are not robust estimates of the long-term impact of reforms.

Finally, we reestimated the models in Tables IV and V including controls for statute-of-limitations reforms. Statute-of-limitation reforms have a very small positive effect on expenditures and no effect on mortality, which is consistent with their classification as an indirect reform. Using the models presented in Tables IV and V, statute-of-limitations reforms are associated with a 0.96 percent increase in expenditures for AMI patients (standard error is 0.46), and a 0.003 percentage point increase in mortality (standard error is 0.28). Inclusion of statute-of-limitation reforms did not substantially alter the estimated DD effect of either direct or indirect reforms: for AMI patients the estimated effect of direct reforms went from −5.3 percent (Table IV) to −5.5 percent, and the estimated effect of indirect reforms remained constant at 1.8 percent (Table IV).

To explore the sources of our estimated reform effects more completely, we estimated additional specifications that analyzed effects on use of intensive cardiac procedures such as cardia catheterization, that used alternative specifications of time-since-adoption and calendar-year effects, and that estimated the effects of each type of tort reform separately (see Table IIA). These specifications produced results consistent with the simpler specifications reported here for both AMI and IHD. Specifically, reforms with a determinate, negative direct impact on liability led to substantially slower expenditure growth, somewhat less growth in the use of intensive procedures (but smaller effects than would explain the expenditure differences, suggesting less intensive treatments were also affected), and no consequential effects on mortality.

VI. Policy implications

We have developed evidence on the existence and magnitude of "defensive" medical practices by studying the consequences of reforms limiting legal liability on health care expenditures and outcomes for heart disease in the elderly. These results provide a critical extension to the existing empirical literature on the effects of malpractice reforms. Previous studies have found significant effects of direct reforms on the frequency of and payments to malpractice claims. Because the actual costs of malpractice litigation comprise a very small portion of total health care expenditures, however, these litigation effects have only a limited impact on health care expenditure growth. To provide a more complete assessment of malpractice reforms, we have studied their consequences for actual health care expenditures and health outcomes. Our study is the first to use exogenous variation in tort laws not related to potential idiosyncrasies of providers or small geographic areas to assess the behavioral effects of malpractice pressure. Thus, our analysis fills a crucial empirical gap in evaluating the U.S. malpractice liability system, because the effects of malpractice law on physician behavior are both a principal justification for current liability rules and potentially important for understanding medical expenditure growth.

Our analysis indicates that reforms that directly limit liability—caps on damage awards, abolition of punitive damages, abolition of mandatory prejudgment interest, and collateral-source-rule reforms—reduce hospital expenditures by 5 to 9 percent within three to five years of adoption, with the full effects of reforms requiring several years to appear. The effects are somewhat smaller for actual heart attacks than for a relatively less severe form of heart disease (IHD), for which more patients may have "marginal" indications for treatment. In contrast, reforms that limit liability only indirectly—caps on contingency fees, mandatory periodic payments, joint-and-several liability reform, and patient compensation funds—are not associated with substantial effects on either expenditures or outcomes, at least by several years after adoption. Neither type of reforms led to any consequential differences in mortality or the occurrence of serious complications. As we described previously, the estimated expenditure/benefit ratio associated with direct reforms is over $500,000 per additional one-year survivor, with comparable ratios for recurrent AMIs and heart failure. Even the 95 percent confidence bounds for outcome effects are generally under one percentage point, translating into over $100,000 per additional one-year survivor. While it is possible that malpractice reforms have had effects on other outcomes valued by patients, this possibility must be weighed against the absence of any substantial effects on mortality or the principal cardiac complications that are correlated with quality of life. Thus, at the current level of malpractice pressure, liability rules that are more generous in terms of award limits are a very costly approach to improving health care outcomes.

Approximately 40 percent of patients with cardiac disease were affected by direct reforms between 1984 and 1990. Based on simulations using our effect estimates, we conclude that if reforms directly limiting malpractice liability had been applied throughout the United States during this period, expenditures on cardiac disease would have been around $450 million per year lower for each of the first two years after adoption and close to $600 million per year lower for each of years three through five after adoption, compared with nonadoption of direct reforms.

While our panel is relatively lengthy for a DD study, it is to long enough to allow us to reach equally certain conclusions about the long-term effects of malpractice reforms on medical expenditure growth and trends in health outcomes. Plausible static effects of virtually all outcomes. Plausible static effects of virtually all policy factors cannot explain more than a fraction of expenditure growth in recent decades [Newhouse 1992], and we have also documented that outcome trends may be quite important. Whether policy changes such as malpractice reforms influence these long-term trends through effects on the environment of technological change in health care is critical issue. Do reforms have implications for trends in expenditures and outcomes long after they are adopted, or do the trend effects diminish over time? Preliminary evidence on the question from early-adopted (pre-1985, mostly pre-1980) reforms suggest that long-term expenditure growth is not slower in states that adopt direct reforms. On the other hand, subsequent growth does not appear to offset the expenditure reductions that occur in the years following adoption. Moreover, we found no evidence that direct reforms adopted from 1985–1990 had smaller effects in states that had also adopted direct reforms earlier, suggesting that dynamic malpractice policies may produce more favorable long-term expenditure/benefit trends. In any event, our conclusions about long-term effects are speculative at this point, given the absence of baseline data on expenditures and outcome trends in reform states. Follow-up evaluations of longer term effects of malpractice reforms should be possible within a few years, and might help confirm whether liability reforms have any truly lasting consequences for expenditure growth or trends in health outcomes.

Hospital expenditures on treating elderly heart disease patients are substantial—over $8 billion per year in 1991—but they comprise only a fraction of total expenditures on health care. If our results are generalizable to medical expenditures outside the hospital, to other illnesses, and to younger patients, then direct reforms could lead to expenditure reductions of well over $50 billion per year without serious adverse consequences for health outcomes. We hope to address the generalizability of our results more extensively in future research. More detailed studies using both malpractice claims information and patient expenditure and outcome information, linking the analysis of the two policy justifications for a malpractice liability system, should be particularly informative. Such studies could provide more direct evidence on how liability rules translate into effects on particular kinds of physician decisions with implications for medical expenditures but not outcomes. Thus, they may provide more specific guidance on which specific liability reforms—including "nontraditional" reforms such as no-fault insurance and mandatory administrative reviews—will have the greatest impact on defensive practices without substantial consequences for health outcomes.

Our evidence on the effects of direct malpractice reforms suggests that doctors do practice defensive medicine. Given the limited relationship between malpractice claims and medical injuries documented in previous research, perhaps our findings that less malpractice liability does not have significant adverse consequences for patient outcomes but does affect expenditures are not surprising. To our knowledge, however, this is the first direct empirical quantification of the costs of defensive medicine.

VII. Conclusion

We have demonstrated that malpractice liability reforms that directly limit awards and hence benefits from filing lawsuits lead to substantial reductions in medical expenditure growth in the treatment of cardiac illness in the elderly with no appreciable consequences for important health outcomes, including mortality and common complications. We conclude that treatment of elderly patients with hear disease does involve "defensive" medical practices, and that limited reductions in liability can reduce these costly practices. () We would like to thank Randall Bovbjerg, David Genesove, Jerry Hausman Paul Joskow, Lawrence Katz, W. Page Keeton, Gary King, A. Mitchell Polinsky George Shepherd, Frank Sloan, seminar participants at Northwestern University, the University of Michigan and the National Bureau of Economic Research, and two anonymous referees for advice, assistance, and helpful comments. Jeffrey Geppert and Mohan Ramanujan provided excellent research assistance. Funding from the National Institute of Aging, Harvard/MIT Research Training Group in Positive Political Economy, and the John M. Olin Foundation is greatly appreciated. All errors are our own. Reforms requiring collateral-source offset revoke the common-law default rule which states that the defendant must bear the full cost of the injury suffered by the plaintiff, even if the plaintiff were compensated for all or part of the cost by an independent or "collateral" source. Under the common-law default rule defendants liable for medical malpractice always bear the cost of treating a patient for medical injuries resulting from the malpractice even if the treatment were financed by the patient's own health insurance. Either the plaintiff enjoys double recovery (the plaintiff recovers from the defendant and his own health insurance for medical expenses attributable to the injury) or the defendant reimburses the plaintiff's (subrogee) health insurer, depending on the plaintiff's insurance contract and state or federal law. However, some states have enacted reforms that specify that total damages payable in a malpractice tort are to be reduced by all or part of the value of collateral source payments. Estimates of the impact of reforms on claim severity vary over time and across studies. Based on 1975–1978 data, Danzon [1982, p. 30] reports that states enacting caps on damages had 19 percent lower awards, and states enacting mandatory collateral source offsets had 50 percent lower awards. Based on 1975–1984 data, Danzon [1986, p. 26] reports that states enacting caps had 23 percent lower awards, and states enacting collateral source offsets had 11 to 18 percent lower awards. Based on 1975–1978 and 1984 data, Sloan, Mergenhagen and Bovbjerg [1989] find that caps reduced awards by 38 to 39 percent, and collateral-source offsets reduced awards by 21 percent. Again, because all elderly patients with serious heart disease during the years of our study are included, this consideration applies only to extending the results to other patient populations. Of course, if such state-time specific effects exist, there is no reason to expect that they would be normally distributed. Normality assumptions in error structures generally have not performed well in models of health expenditures and outcomes. However, incorporating such random effects permits us to explore the robustness of our estimation methods to possible state-time specific shifts. According to Danzon [1982, 1986], urbanization is a highly significant determinant both of claim payments to and the frequency of claims and of the enactment of tort reforms. We control for urbanization at the individual level, as discussed below. Although we did not include controls for the number of physicians per capita in the reported results because of concerns regarding the exogeneity of that variable, results conditional on physician density are virtually identical. We include both a current and a one-year-lagged effect to account for the possibility that past political environments influence current law. Data on lawyers per capita for 1980, 1985, and 1988 are from the American Bar Foundation [1985, 1991]. Intervening years are calculated by linear interpolation. Our data set is partially derived from Campbell, Kessler, and Shepherd [1966]. The baseline is defined as the "negligence rule" without any of the liability-reducing reforms studied here and with mandatory prejudgment. That is, (.063$13,140)/.0064[nearly equal to]$108,000 using the 95 percent upper bound of the estimated mortality effect and (.053*$13,140)/.007[nearly equal to]$1,000,000 using the actual DD estimate. Both of these ratios are very large, the difference in absolute magnitude of the two estimates results from the denominator being very close to zero. Because we were concerned that reforms might affect the rate of IHD hospitalization as well as outcomes among patients hospitalized, we estimated models analogous to the specifications reported using population hospitalization rates with IHD as the dependent variable. We found no significant or substantial effects of either direct or indirect reforms on IHD hospitalization rates. Models with region effects only, analogous to the right halves of Tables IV and V, again showed very similar effect estimates. We also estimate separate time-trend effects for early-reform (pre-1984) states. This approach may permit the development of some evidence on "longterm" effects of reforms on intensity growth rates. As noted previously we find no evidence for such effects. Of course, our lack of a pre-adoption baseline for the early-adopting states precludes DD identification and makes the long-term conclusion more speculative. A follow-up study using more recent expenditure and outcome data would provide more convincing evidence on effects beyond five years. In contrast to AMI, the slower rate of expenditure growth between 1984 and 1990 for early-reform states (see Table V) suggests that reforms may have longer term effects on slowing IHD expenditure growth.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from West Virginia (Mrs. CAPITO).

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, West Virginia's health care system and the health care system of many States are facing many challenges. But medical liability insurance has caused a mass exodus of doctors from my State of West Virginia.

I live in Charleston, West Virginia, our capital city. We have one of the largest medical facilities in our State, the Charleston Area Medical Center, which was downgraded from a level one trauma center to a level three trauma center because we could not provide the 24 hour, 7-day-a-week emergency care.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge anybody to tell me about living in a capital city of any State in this Nation and you have to be air lifted out of your capital city, out of the largest medical facilities in your State if you have multiple injuries.

That is a sad story, but I can tell my colleagues what is going to be a sadder story if we do not fix this problem.

Last week, a young boy 6 years old had a pen lodged in his windpipe. His parents rushed him to the emergency room. What happened, the emergency physician had to call all around to find somebody to treat him. Did they find anybody? No. He drives 3 hours to Cincinnati, Ohio, to find a specialist that can help this young man. What if he could not endure a 3-hour car ride?

I challenge my colleagues, a tragedy is in the making. The perfect storm is created because of the high cost of medical liability insurance, and our doctors across the Nation and most especially in West Virginia are suffering, and the access and the quality care that we deserve as Americans is going to suffer as well.

Without this Federal legislation, the exodus of our health care providers from the practice of medicine will continue, and patients will find it increasingly difficult to find the care. I urge all of my colleagues to recognize this critical and growing problem and to pass H.R. 4600. It will go a long way to helping the health care system in our State and our Nation rise and stay at the level that we expect.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of our time, and I probably will not take it all.

I do ask a question, if this bill is supposed to be the end all, be all, then will someone please explain to me what would have been wrong with accepting the amendments that were very thoughtful, that were offered by Members of the House of Representatives, most of whom were Democrats? No, they did not get that opportunity.

I do not know whether the gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) cares to indulge in this particular colloquy or any other Republican or any Member of the House of Representatives. I ask my colleague from New York when he closes to point to the place in this legislation where savings are going to be passed to physicians.

Let me give my colleagues what may not appear to be an exacting analogy. We pass a significant number of subsidies for farmers in the United States of America and I support those. We supported subsidies, for example, for the sugar industry and for wheat, but nowhere after those subsidies where sugar went down or wheat went down did we see Corn Flakes or candy go down. The consumer gets slapped every time, it does appear.

Let me set the record straight. This is modeled on California, and we have more Members from California in this House of Representatives than from any other State in the Nation. We had the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO) come down here to talk about California. Let me tell my colleagues what they are not saying about MICRA, it is referred to.

The California experience is perhaps in many respects the most telling fact having to do with this legislation since it is modeled on California. In 1975, California enacted into law the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act, and this is the act after which many of the provisions of H.R. 4600 are modeled after, including caps on noneconomic damages, collateral source offsets and limitation on attorney's fees. Despite these reforms in California, premiums for medical malpractice in California grew more quickly between 1991 and 2000 than in the Nation, 3½ percent versus 1.9 percent respectively, and between 1975 and 1993, California's health care costs rose 343 percent, almost double the rate of inflation.

Not only does the evidence show that California's tort reform has failed to lower premiums for physicians, it also shows that California's insurance companies are reaping excessive profits in the aftermath of tort reform. In 1997, California's insurers earned more than $763 million, yet paid out less than $300 million to claims.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) offered an amendment yesterday that would direct insurers to use any savings received as a result of H.R. 4600 to reduce the premiums they charge their health care providers. If within 2 years of that enactment, his legislation called for insurers not realizing cost savings, then the provisions of H.R. 4600 relating to liability lawsuits and liability claims would not apply to any lawsuits and claims against providers insured by the insurance companies. That was defeated in the Committee on Rules by 2 to 8 and never will see the light of day here, a measure that would have given an opportunity for physicians to receive the benefits that would be saved.

I want to harken back to 1993 when my colleagues on the other side of the aisle very skillfully built an infrastructure on radio and all I could hear, I was a new Member of Congress, all I could hear was the Democrats are having closed rules. People that did not even know what a rule was were calling in to the talk shows and saying those Democrats are horrible about closed rules. So little did I know that time would pass and I would become a member of the Committee on Rules, and what I am experiencing and what we experienced here today is a closed rule. If it was bad in 1993, it is bad in 2002.

What closed rules have done and what they are doing is stopping the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK), who we heard from, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL). Very thoughtful amendments, that if this body worked its will could have gone about the business of attending to.

I am a lawyer for 40 years and I am proud of that, and what I learned in law school in torts, written by some of the more brilliant persons in the world, including those founders in England that gave us this great judicial system that we have, and that is that that process of punitive damages is embedded in our laws to make sure that people do not act grossly negligent.

That said, most physicians, most health care providers are honest. There is nothing that is going to stop the bad physician from being bad in this particular measure, and punitive damages are what alerts the entire profession that they need to be careful. It is just that simple. I invite my colleague from New York to show me where the insurance companies are going to pass on to the physicians any savings and where H.R. 4600 does anything to lower insurance premiums.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

I thank the gentleman from Florida for some of his opportunity to share with passion his views on this legislation.

First, both the Committee on the Judiciary, which passed the legislation out by voice vote, and the Committee on Energy and Commerce have had ample debate on this legislation before it came to the Committee on Rules and now on to the floor for consideration of by the entire body.

Two Stanford University economists have conducted two extensive studies using national data on Medicare populations and concluded that patients from States that adopted direct medical care litigation reforms, and I will say that again for my Florida colleague, that the study which adopted and concluded that patients from States that adopted direct medical care litigation reforms, such as limits on damage awards, incur significantly lower hospital costs while suffering no increase in adverse health outcomes associated with the illness for which they were treated.

Mr. Speaker, in public opinion, by a survey conducted by Wirthlin Worldwide for Health Care Liability Alliance, 71 percent of Americans agree that the main reason health care costs are rising is because of medical liability lawsuits; 78 percent of Americans say they are concerned about the access to care being affected because doctors are leaving the practices due to rising liability costs; 73 percent of Americans support reasonable limits on awards for pain and suffering in medical liability lawsuits; and more than 76 percent of Americans favor a law limiting the percentage on contingent fees paid by the patient.

This legislation is intended to control escalation in lawsuit damage awards and slow the rising costs of medical malpractice insurance. The HEALTH Act would benefit patients because it will award injured patients unlimited economic damages. It will award injured patients noneconomic damages up to $250,000. It will award injured patients punitive damages of up to two times economic damages of $250,000 or whatever is higher. It establishes a fair share rule that allocates damage awards fairly and in proportion to a party's degree of fault, and it establishes a sliding scale of attorney's contingent fees, therefore maximizing the recovery for patients. It allows States the flexibility to establish or maintain their own laws on damage awards, whether higher or lower than those provided for in this bill.

I hear my time is expiring. I urge a yes vote on the rule and on the underlying legislation, a yes vote for patients and families all across America.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 221, nays 197, not voting 14, as follows:

Mrs. JONES of Ohio changed her vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 553, I call up the bill (H.R. 4600) to improve patient access to health care services and provide improved medical care by reducing the excessive burden the liability system places on the health care delivery system, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). Pursuant to House Resolution 553, the bill is considered read for amendment.

H.R. 4600

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Help Efficient, Accessible, Low Cost, Timely Health Care (HEALTH) Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—

(1) EFFECT ON HEALTH CARE ACCESS AND COSTS.—Congress finds that our current civil justice system is adversely affecting patient access to health care services, better patient care, and cost-efficient health care, in that the health care liability system is a costly and ineffective mechanism for resolving claims of health care liability and compensating injured patients, and is a deterrent to the sharing of information among health care professionals which impedes efforts to improve patient safety and quality of care.

(2) EFFECT ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.—Congress finds that the health care and insurance industries are industries affecting interstate commerce and the health care liability litigation systems existing throughout the United States are activities that affect interstate commerce by contributing to the high costs of health care and premiums for health care liability insurance purchased by health care system providers.

(3) EFFECT ON FEDERAL SPENDING.—Congress finds that the health care liability litigation systems existing throughout the United States have a significant effect on the amount, distribution, and use of Federal funds because of—

(A) the large number of individuals who receive health care benefits under programs operated or financed by the Federal Government;

(B) the large number of individuals who benefit because of the exclusion from Federal taxes of the amounts spent to provide them with health insurance benefits; and

(C) the large number of health care providers who provide items or services for which the Federal Government makes payments.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to implement reasonable, comprehensive, and effective health care liability reforms designed to—

(1) improve the availability of health care services in cases in which health care liability actions have been shown to be a factor in the decreased availability of services;

(2) reduce the incidence of "defensive medicine" and lower the cost of health care liability insurance, all of which contribute to the escalation of health care costs;

(3) ensure that persons with meritorious health care injury claims receive fair and adequate compensation, including reasonable noneconomic damages;

(4) improve the fairness and cost-effectiveness of our current health care liability system to resolve disputes over, and provide compensation for, health care liability by reducing uncertainty in the amount of compensation provided to injured individuals; and

(5) provide an increased sharing of information in the health care system which will reduce unintended injury and improve patient care.

SEC. 3. ENCOURAGING SPEEDY RESOLUTION OF CLAIMS.

A health care lawsuit may be commenced no later than 3 years after the date of injury or 1 year after the claimant discovers, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the injury, whichever occurs first. In no event shall the time for commencement of a health care lawsuit exceed 3 years, except that in the case of an alleged injury sustained by a minor before the age of 6, a health care lawsuit may be commenced by or on behalf of the minor until the later of 3 years from the date of injury, or the date on which the minor attains the age of 8.

SEC. 4. COMPENSATING PATIENT INJURY.

(a) UNLIMITED AMOUNT OF DAMAGES FOR ACTUAL ECONOMIC LOSSES IN HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.—In any health care lawsuit, the full amount of a claimant's economic loss may be fully recovered without limitation.

(b) ADDITIONAL NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.—In any health care lawsuit, the amount of noneconomic damages recovered may be as much as $250,000, regardless of the number of parties against whom the action is brought or the number of separate claims or actions brought with respect to the same occurrence.

(c) NO DISCOUNT OF AWARD FOR NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.—In any health care lawsuit, an award for future noneconomic damages shall not be discounted to present value. The jury shall not be informed about the maximum award for noneconomic damages. An award for noneconomic damages in excess of $250,000 shall be reduced either before the entry of judgment, or by amendment of the judgment after entry of judgment, and such reduction shall be made before accounting for any other reduction in damages required by law. If separate awards are rendered for past and future noneconomic damages and the combined awards exceed $250,000, the future noneconomic damages shall be reduced first.

(d) FAIR SHARE RULE.—In any health care lawsuit, each party shall be liable for that party's several share of any damages only and not for the share of any other person. Each party shall be liable only for the amount of damages allocated to such party in direct proportion to such party's percentage of responsibility. A separate judgment shall be rendered against each such party for the amount allocated to such party. For purposes of this section, the trier of fact shall determine the proportion of responsibility of each party for the claimant's harm.

SEC. 5. MAXIMIZING PATIENT RECOVERY.

(a) COURT SUPERVISION OF SHARE OF DAMAGES ACTUALLY PAID TO CLAIMANTS.—In any health care lawsuit, the court shall supervise the arrangements for payment of damages to protect against conflicts of interest that may have the effect of reducing the amount of damages awarded that are actually paid to claimants. In particular, in any health care lawsuit in which the attorney for a party claims a financial stake in the outcome by virtue of a contingent fee, the court shall have the power to restrict the payment of a claimant's damage recovery to such attorney, and to redirect such damages to the claimant based upon the interests of justice and principles of equity. In no event shall the total of all contingent fees for representing all claimants in a health care lawsuit exceed the following limits:

(1) 40 percent of the first $50,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(2) 33⅓ percent of the next $50,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(3) 25 percent of the next $500,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(4) 15 percent of any amount by which the recovery by the claimant(s) is in excess of $600,000.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The limitations in this section shall apply whether the recovery is by judgment, settlement, mediation, arbitration, or any other form of alternative dispute resolution. In a health care lawsuit involving a minor or incompetent person, a court retains the authority to authorize or approve a fee that is less than the maximum permitted under this section.

SEC. 6. ADDITIONAL HEALTH BENEFITS.

In any health care lawsuit, any party may introduce evidence of collateral source benefits. If a party elects to introduce such evidence, any opposing party may introduce evidence of any amount paid or contributed or reasonably likely to be paid or contributed in the future by or on behalf of the opposing party to secure the right to such collateral source benefits. No provider of collateral source benefits shall recover any amount against the claimant or receive any lien or credit against the claimant's recovery or be equitably or legally subrogated to the right of the claimant in a health care lawsuit. This section shall apply to any health care lawsuit that is settled as well as a health care lawsuit that is resolved by a fact finder.

SEC. 7. PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Punitive damages may, if otherwise permitted by applicable State or Federal law, be awarded against any person in a health care lawsuit only if it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that such person acted with malicious intent to injure the claimant, or that such person deliberately failed to avoid unnecessary injury that such person knew the claimant was substantially certain to suffer. In any health care lawsuit where no judgment for compensatory damages is rendered against such person, no punitive damages may be awarded with respect to the claim in such lawsuit. No demand for punitive damages shall be included in a health care lawsuit as initially filed. A court may allow a claimant to file an amended pleading for punitive damages only upon a motion by the claimant and after a finding by the court, upon review of supporting and opposing affidavits or after a hearing, after weighing the evidence, that the claimant has established by a substantial probability that the claimant will prevail on the claim for punitive damages. At the request of any party in a health care lawsuit, the trier of fact shall consider in a separate proceeding—

(1) whether punitive damages are to be awarded and the amount of such award; and

(2) the amount of punitive damages following a determination of punitive liability.

If a separate proceeding is requested, evidence relevant only to the claim for punitive damages, as determined by applicable State law, shall be inadmissible in any proceeding to determine whether compensatory damages are to be awarded.

(b) DETERMINING AMOUNT OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—

(1) FACTORS CONSIDERED.—In determining the amount of punitive damages, the trier of fact shall consider only the following:

(A) the severity of the harm caused by the conduct of such party;

(B) the duration of the conduct or any concealment of it by such party;

(C) the profitability of the conduct to such party;

(D) the number of products sold or medical procedures rendered for compensation, as the case may be, by such party, of the kind causing the harm complained of by the claimant;

(E) any criminal penalties imposed on such party, as a result of the conduct complained of by the claimant; and

(F) the amount of any civil fines assessed against such party as a result of the conduct complained of by the claimant.

(2) MAXIMUM AWARD.—The amount of punitive damages awarded in a health care lawsuit may be up to as much as two times the amount of economic damages awarded or $250,000, whichever is greater. The jury shall not be informed of this limitation.

(c) NO CIVIL MONETARY PENALTIES FOR PRODUCTS THAT COMPLY WITH FDA STANDARDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—No punitive damages may be awarded against the manufacturer or distributor of a medical product based on a claim that such product caused the claimant's harm where—

(A)(i) such medical product was subject to premarket approval or clearance by the Food and Drug Administration with respect to the safety of the formulation or performance of the aspect of such medical product which caused the claimant's harm or the adequacy of the packaging or labeling of such medical product; and

(ii) such medical product was so approved or cleared; or

(B) such medical product is generally recognized among qualified experts as safe and effective pursuant to conditions established by the Food and Drug Administration and applicable Food and Drug Administration regulations, including without limitation those related to packaging and labeling.

(2) LIABILITY OF HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS.—A health care provider who prescribes a drug or device (including blood products) approved by the Food and Drug Administration shall not be named as a party to a product liability lawsuit involving such drug or device and shall not be liable to a claimant in a class action lawsuit against the manufacturer, distributor, or product seller of such drug or device.

(3) PACKAGING.—In a health care lawsuit for harm which is alleged to relate to the adequacy of the packaging or labeling of a drug which is required to have tamper-resistant packaging under regulations of the Secretary of Health and Human Services (including labeling regulations related to such packaging), the manufacturer or product seller of the drug shall not be held liable for punitive damages unless such packaging or labeling is found by the trier of fact by clear and convincing evidence to be substantially out of compliance with such regulations.

(4) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply in any health care lawsuit in which—

(A) a person, before or after premarket approval or clearance of such medical product, knowingly misrepresented to or withheld from the Food and Drug Administration information that is required to be submitted under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 301 et seq.) or section 351 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 262) that is material and is causally related to the harm which the claimant allegedly suffered; or

(B) a person made an illegal payment to an official of the Food and Drug Administration for the purpose of either securing or maintaining approval or clearance of such medical product.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF PAYMENT OF FUTURE DAMAGES TO CLAIMANTS IN HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In any health care lawsuit, if an award of future damages, without reduction to present value, equaling or exceeding $50,000 is made against a party with sufficient insurance or other assets to fund a periodic payment of such a judgment, the court shall, at the request of any party, enter a judgment ordering that the future damages be paid by periodic payments in accordance with the Uniform Periodic Payment of Judgments Act promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—This section applies to all actions which have not been first set for trial or retrial before the effective date of this Act.

(8) HEALTH CARE LIABILITY ACTION.—The term "health care liability action" means a civil action brought in a State or Federal Court or pursuant to an alternative dispute resolution system, against a health care provider, a health care organization, or the manufacturer, distributor, supplier, marketer, promoter, or seller of a medical product, regardless of the theory of liability on which the claim is based, or the number of plaintiffs, defendants, or other parties, or the number of causes of action, in which the claimant alleges a health care liability claim.

(9) HEALTH CARE LIABILITY CLAIM.—The term "health care liability claim" means a demand by any person, whether or not pursuant to ADR, against a health care provider, health care organization, or the manufacturer, distributor, supplier, marketer, promoter, or seller of a medical product, including, but not limited to, third-party claims, cross-claims, counter-claims, or contribution claims, which are based upon the provision of, use of, or payment for (or the failure to provide, use, or pay for) health care services or medical products, regardless of the theory of liability on which the claim is based, or the number of plaintiffs, defendants, or other parties, or the number of causes of action.

SEC. 10. EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.

(a) VACCINE INJURY.—

(1) To the extent that title XXI of the Public Health Service Act establishes a Federal rule of law applicable to a civil action brought for a vaccine-related injury or death—

(A) this Act does not affect the application of the rule of law to such an action; and

(B) any rule of law prescribed by this Act in conflict with a rule of law of such title XXI shall not apply to such action.

(2) If there is an aspect of a civil action brought for a vaccine-related injury or death to which a Federal rule of law under title XXI of the Public Health Service Act does not apply, then this Act or otherwise applicable law (as determined under this Act) will apply to such aspect of such action.

(b) OTHER FEDERAL LAW.—Except as provided in this section, nothing in this Act shall be deemed to affect any defense available to a defendant in a health care lawsuit or action under any other provision of Federal law.

SEC. 11. STATE FLEXIBILITY AND PROTECTION OF STATES' RIGHTS.

(a) HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.—The provisions governing health care lawsuits set forth in this Act preempt, subject to subsections (b) and (c), State law to the extent that State law prevents the application of any provisions of law established by or under this Act. The provisions governing health care lawsuits set forth in this Act supersede chapter 171 of title 28, United States Code, to the extent that such chapter—

(1) provides for a greater amount of damages or contingent fees, a longer period in which a health care lawsuit may be commenced, or a reduced applicability or scope of periodic payment of future damages, than provided in this Act; or

(2) prohibits the introduction of evidence regarding collateral source benefits, or mandates or permits subrogation or a lien on collateral source benefits.

(b) PROTECTION OF STATES' RIGHTS.—Any issue that is not governed by any provision of law established by or under this Act (including State standards of negligence) shall be governed by otherwise applicable State or Federal law. This Act does not preempt or supersede any law that imposes greater protections (such as a shorter statute of limitations) for health care providers and health care organizations from liability, loss, or damages than those provided by this Act.

(c) STATE FLEXIBILITY.—No provision of this Act shall be construed to preempt—

(1) any State statutory limit (whether enacted before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act) on the amount of compensatory or punitive damages (or the total amount of damages) that may be awarded in a health care lawsuit, whether or not such State limit permits the recovery of a specific dollar amount of damages that is greater or lesser than is provided for under this Act, notwithstanding section 4(a); or

(2) any defense available to a party in a health care lawsuit under any other provision of State or Federal law.

SEC. 12. APPLICABILITY; EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall apply to any health care lawsuit brought in a Federal or State court, or subject to an alternative dispute resolution system, that is initiated on or after the date of the enactment of this Act, except that any health care lawsuit arising from an injury occurring prior to the date of the enactment of this Act shall be governed by the applicable statute of limitations provisions in effect at the time the injury occurred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in House Report 107–697 is adopted.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in House Report 107–697 is as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Help Efficient, Accessible, Low-cost, Timely Healthcare (HEALTH) Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—

(1) EFFECT ON HEALTH CARE ACCESS AND COSTS.—Congress finds that our current civil justice system is adversely affecting patient access to health care services, better patient care, and cost-efficient health care, in that the health care liability system is a costly and ineffective mechanism for resolving claims of health care liability and compensating injured patients, and is a deterrent to the sharing of information among health care professionals which impedes efforts to improve patient safety and quality of care.

(2) EFFECT ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.—Congress finds that the health care and insurance industries are industries affecting interstate commerce and the health care liability litigation systems existing throughout the United States are activities that affect interstate commerce by contributing to the high costs of health care and premiums for health care liability insurance purchased by health care system providers.

(3) EFFECT ON FEDERAL SPENDING.—Congress finds that the health care liability litigation systems existing throughout the United States have a significant effect on the amount, distribution, and use of Federal funds because of—

(A) the large number of individuals who receive health care benefits under programs operated or financed by the Federal Government;

(B) the large number of individuals who benefit because of the exclusion from Federal taxes of the amounts spent to provide them with health insurance benefits; and

(C) the large number of health care providers who provide items or services for which the Federal Government makes payments.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to implement reasonable, comprehensive, and effective health care liability reforms designed to—

(1) improve the availability of health care services in cases in which health care liability actions have been shown to be a factor in the decreased availability of services;

(2) reduce the incidence of "defensive medicine" and lower the cost of health care liability insurance, all of which contribute to the escalation of health care costs;

(3) ensure that persons with meritorious health care injury claims receive fair and adequate compensation, including reasonable noneconomic damages;

(4) improve the fairness and cost-effectiveness of our current health care liability system to resolve disputes over, and provide compensation for, health care liability by reducing uncertainty in the amount of compensation provided to injured individuals;

(5) provide an increased sharing of information in the health care system which will reduce unintended injury and improve patient care.

SEC. 3. ENCOURAGING SPEEDY RESOLUTION OF CLAIMS.

The time for the commencement of a health care lawsuit shall be 3 years after the date of manifestation of injury or 1 year after the claimant discovers, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the injury, whichever occurs first. In no event shall the time for commencement of a health care lawsuit exceed 3 years after the date of manifestation of injury unless tolled for any of the following:

(1) Upon proof of fraud;

(2) Intentional concealment; or

(3) The presence of a foreign body, which has no therapeutic or diagnostic purpose or effect, in the person of the injured person.

Actions by a minor shall be commenced within 3 years from the date of the alleged manifestation of injury except that actions by a minor under the full age of 6 years shall be commenced within 3 years of manifestation of injury or prior to the minor's 8th birthday, whichever provides a longer period. Such time limitation shall be tolled for minors for any period during which a parent or guardian and a health care provider or health care organization have committed fraud or collusion in the failure to bring an action on behalf of the injured minor.

SEC. 4. COMPENSATING PATIENT INJURY.

(a) UNLIMITED AMOUNT OF DAMAGES FOR ACTUAL ECONOMIC LOSSES IN HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.—In any health care lawsuit, the full amount of a claimant's economic loss may be fully recovered without limitation.

(b) ADDITIONAL NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.—In any health care lawsuit, the amount of noneconomic damages recovered may be as much as $250,000, regardless of the number of parties against whom the action is brought or the number of separate claims or actions brought with respect to the same occurrence.

(c) NO DISCOUNT OF AWARD FOR NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.—In any health care lawsuit, an award for future noneconomic damages shall not be discounted to present value. The jury shall not be informed about the maximum award for noneconomic damages. An award for noneconomic damages in excess of $250,000 shall be reduced either before the entry of judgment, or by amendment of the judgment after entry of judgment, and such reduction shall be made before accounting for any other reduction in damages required by law. If separate awards are rendered for past and future noneconomic damages and the combined awards exceed $250,000, the future noneconomic damages shall be reduced first.

(d) FAIR SHARE RULE.—In any health care lawsuit, each party shall be liable for that party's several share of any damages only and not for the share of any other person. Each party shall be liable only for the amount of damages allocated to such party in direct proportion to such party's percentage of responsibility. A separate judgment shall be rendered against each such party for the amount allocated to such party. For purposes of this section, the trier of fact shall determine the proportion of responsibility of each party for the claimant's harm.

SEC. 5. MAXIMIZING PATIENT RECOVERY.

(a) COURT SUPERVISION OF SHARE OF DAMAGES ACTUALLY PAID TO CLAIMANTS.—In any health care lawsuit, the court shall supervise the arrangements for payment of damages to protect against conflicts of interest that may have the effect of reducing the amount of damages awarded that are actually paid to claimants. In particular, in any health care lawsuit in which the attorney for a party claims a financial stake in the outcome by virtue of a contingent fee, the court shall have the power to restrict the payment of a claimant's damage recovery to such attorney, and to redirect such damages to the claimant based upon the interests of justice and principles of equity. In no event shall the total of all contingent fees for representing all claimants in a health care lawsuit exceed the following limits:

(1) 40 percent of the first $50,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(2) 33⅓ percent of the next $50,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(3) 25 percent of the next $500,000 recovered by the claimant(s).

(4) 15 percent of any amount by which the recovery by the claimant(s) is in excess of $600,000.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The limitations in this section shall apply whether the recovery is by judgment, settlement, mediation, arbitration, or any other form of alternative dispute resolution. In a health care lawsuit involving a minor or incompetent person, a court retains the authority to authorize or approve a fee that is less than the maximum permitted under this section.

SEC. 6. ADDITIONAL HEALTH BENEFITS.

In any health care lawsuit, any party may introduce evidence of collateral source benefits. If a party elects to introduce such evidence, any opposing party may introduce evidence of any amount paid or contributed or reasonably likely to be paid or contributed in the future by or on behalf of the opposing party to secure the right to such collateral source benefits. No provider of collateral source benefits shall recover any amount against the claimant or receive any lien or credit against the claimant's recovery or be equitably or legally subrogated to the right of the claimant in a health care lawsuit. This section shall apply to any health care lawsuit that is settled as well as a health care lawsuit that is resolved by a fact finder. This section shall not apply to section 1862(b) (42 U.S.C. 1395y(b)) or section 1902(a)(25) (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(25)) of the Social Security Act.

SEC. 7. PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Punitive damages may, if otherwise permitted by applicable State or Federal law, be awarded against any person in a health care lawsuit only if it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that such person acted with malicious intent to injure the claimant, or that such person deliberately failed to avoid unnecessary injury that such person knew the claimant was substantially certain to suffer. In any health care lawsuit where no judgment for compensatory damages is rendered against such person, no punitive damages may be awarded with respect to the claim in such lawsuit. No demand for punitive damages shall be included in a health care lawsuit as initially filed. A court may allow a claimant to file an amended pleading for punitive damages only upon a motion by the claimant and after a finding by the court, upon review of supporting and opposing affidavits or after a hearing, after weighing the evidence, that the claimant has established by a substantial probability that the claimant will prevail on the claim for punitive damages. At the request of any party in a health care lawsuit, the trier of fact shall consider in a separate proceeding—

(1) whether punitive damages are to be awarded and the amount of such award; and

(2) the amount of punitive damages following a determination of punitive liability. If a separate proceeding is requested, evidence relevant only to the claim for punitive damages, as determined by applicable State law, shall be inadmissible in any proceeding to determine whether compensatory damages are to be awarded.

(b) DETERMINING AMOUNT OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—

(1) FACTORS CONSIDERED.—In determining the amount of punitive damages, the trier of fact shall consider only the following:

(A) the severity of the harm caused by the conduct of such party;

(B) the duration of the conduct or any concealment of it by such party;

(C) the profitability of the conduct to such party;

(D) the number of products sold or medical procedures rendered for compensation, as the case may be, by such party, of the kind causing the harm complained of by the claimant;

(E) any criminal penalties imposed on such party, as a result of the conduct complained of by the claimant; and

(F) the amount of any civil fines assessed against such party as a result of the conduct complained of by the claimant.

(2) MAXIMUM AWARD.—The amount of punitive damages awarded in a health care lawsuit may be up to as much as two times the amount of economic damages awarded or $250,000, whichever is greater. The jury shall not be informed of this limitation.

(c) NO CIVIL MONETARY PENALTIES FOR PRODUCTS THAT COMPLY WITH FDA STANDARDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—No punitive damages may be awarded against the manufacturer or distributor of a medical product based on a claim that such product caused the claimant's harm where—

(A)(i) such medical product was subject to premarket approval or clearance by the Food and Drug Administration with respect to the safety of the formulation or performance of the aspect of such medical product which caused the claimant's harm or the adequacy of the packaging or labeling of such medical product; and

(ii) such medical product was so approved or cleared; or

(B) such medical product is generally recognized among qualified experts as safe and effective pursuant to conditions established by the Food and Drug Administration and applicable Food and Drug Administration regulations, including without limitation those related to packaging and labeling, unless the Food and Drug Administration has determined that such medical product was not manufactured or distributed in substantial compliance with applicable Food and Drug Administration statutes and regulations.

(2) LIABILITY OF HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS.—A health care provider who prescribes a drug or device (including blood products) approved by the Food and Drug Administration shall not be named as a party to a product liability lawsuit involving such drug or device and shall not be liable to a claimant in a class action lawsuit against the manufacturer, distributor, or product seller of such drug or device.

(3) PACKAGING.—In a health care lawsuit for harm which is alleged to relate to the adequacy of the packaging or labeling of a drug which is required to have tamper-resistant packaging under regulations of the Secretary of Health and Human Services (including labeling regulations related to such packaging), the manufacturer or product seller of the drug shall not be held liable for punitive damages unless such packaging or labeling is found by the trier of fact by clear and convincing evidence to be substantially out of compliance with such regulations.

(4) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply in any health care lawsuit in which—

(A) a person, before or after premarket approval or clearance of such medical product, knowingly misrepresented to or withheld from the Food and Drug Administration information that is required to be submitted under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 301 et seq.) or section 351 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 262) that is material and is causally related to the harm which the claimant allegedly suffered; or

(B) a person made an illegal payment to an official of the Food and Drug Administration for the purpose of either securing or maintaining approval or clearance of such medical product.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF PAYMENT OF FUTURE DAMAGES TO CLAIMANTS IN HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In any health care lawsuit, if an award of future damages, without reduction to present value, equaling or exceeding $50,000 is made against a party with sufficient insurance or other assets to fund a periodic payment of such a judgment, the court shall, at the request of any party, enter a judgment ordering that the future damages be paid by periodic payments in accordance with the Uniform Periodic Payment of Judgments Act promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—This section applies to all actions which have not been first set for trial or retrial before the effective date of this Act.

SEC. 9. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION SYSTEM; ADR.—The term "alternative dispute resolution system" or "ADR" means a system that provides for the resolution of health care lawsuits in a manner other than through a civil action brought in a State or Federal court.

(2) CLAIMANT.—The term "claimant" means any person who brings a health care lawsuit, including a person who asserts or claims a right to legal or equitable contribution, indemnity or subrogation, arising out of a health care liability claim or action, and any person on whose behalf such a claim is asserted or such an action is brought, whether deceased, incompetent, or a minor.

(3) COLLATERAL SOURCE BENEFITS.—The term "collateral source benefits" means any amount paid or reasonably likely to be paid in the future to or on behalf of the claimant, or any service, product or other benefit provided or reasonably likely to be provided in the future to or on behalf of the claimant, as a result of the injury or wrongful death, pursuant to—

(A) any State or Federal health, sickness, income-disability, accident, or workers' compensation law;

(B) any health, sickness, income-disability, or accident insurance that provides health benefits or income-disability coverage;

(C) any contract or agreement of any group, organization, partnership, or corporation to provide, pay for, or reimburse the cost of medical, hospital, dental, or income disability benefits; and

(7) HEALTH CARE LAWSUIT.—The term "health care lawsuit" means any health care liability claim concerning the provision of health care goods or services affecting interstate commerce, or any health care liability action concerning the provision of health care goods or services affecting interstate commerce, brought in a State or Federal court or pursuant to an alternative dispute resolution system, against a health care provider, a health care organization, or the manufacturer, distributor, supplier, marketer, promoter, or seller of a medical product, regardless of the theory of liability on which the claim is based, or the number of claimants, plaintiffs, defendants, or other parties, or the number of claims or causes of action, in which the claimant alleges a health care liability claim.

(8) HEALTH CARE LIABILITY ACTION.—The term "health care liability action" means a civil action brought in a State or Federal Court or pursuant to an alternative dispute resolution system, against a health care provider, a health care organization, or the manufacturer, distributor, supplier, marketer, promoter, or seller of a medical product, regardless of the theory of liability on which the claim is based, or the number of plaintiffs, defendants, or other parties, or the number of causes of action, in which the claimant alleges a health care liability claim.

(9) HEALTH CARE LIABILITY CLAIM.—The term "health care liability claim" means a demand by any person, whether or not pursuant to ADR, against a health care provider, health care organization, or the manufacturer, distributor, supplier, marketer, promoter, or seller of a medical product, including, but not limited to, third-party claims, cross-claims, counter-claims, or contribution claims, which are based upon the provision of, use of, or payment for (or the failure to provide, use, or pay for) health care services or medical products, regardless of the theory of liability on which the claim is based, or the number of plaintiffs, defendants, or other parties, or the number of causes of action.

(10) HEALTH CARE ORGANIZATION.—The term "health care organization" means any person or entity which is obligated to provide or pay for health benefits under any health plan, including any person or entity acting under a contract or arrangement with a health care organization to provide or administer any health benefit.

(12) HEALTH CARE GOODS OR SERVICES.—The term "health care goods or services" means any goods or services provided by a health care organization, provider, or by any individual working under the supervision of a health care provider, that relates to the diagnosis, prevention, or treatment of any human disease or impairment, or the assessment of the health of human beings.

(13) MALICIOUS INTENT TO INJURE.—The term "malicious intent to injure" means intentionally causing or attempting to cause physical injury other than providing health care goods or services.

(14) MEDICAL PRODUCT.—The term "medical product" means a drug or device intended for humans, and the terms "drug" and "device" have the meanings given such terms in sections 201(g)(1) and 201(h) of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321), respectively, including any component or raw material used therein, but excluding health care services.

(15) NONECONOMIC DAMAGES.—The term "noneconomic damages" means damages for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium (other than loss of domestic service), hedonic damages, injury to reputation, and all other nonpecuniary losses of any kind or nature.

(16) PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—The term "punitive damages" means damages awarded, for the purpose of punishment or deterrence, and not solely for compensatory purposes, against a health care provider, health care organization, or a manufacturer, distributor, or supplier of a medical product. Punitive damages are neither economic nor noneconomic damages.

(17) RECOVERY.—The term "recovery" means the net sum recovered after deducting any disbursements or costs incurred in connection with prosecution or settlement of the claim, including all costs paid or advanced by any person. Costs of health care incurred by the plaintiff and the attorneys' office overhead costs or charges for legal services are not deductible disbursements or costs for such purpose.

(18) STATE.—The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof.

SEC. 10. EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.

(a) VACCINE INJURY.—

(1) To the extent that title XXI of the Public Health Service Act establishes a Federal rule of law applicable to a civil action brought for a vaccine-related injury or death—

(A) this Act does not affect the application of the rule of law to such an action; and

(B) any rule of law prescribed by this Act in conflict with a rule of law of such title XXI shall not apply to such action.

(2) If there is an aspect of a civil action brought for a vaccine-related injury or death to which a Federal rule of law under title XXI of the Public Health Service Act does not apply, then this Act or otherwise applicable law (as determined under this Act) will apply to such aspect of such action.

(b) OTHER FEDERAL LAW.—Except as provided in this section, nothing in this Act shall be deemed to affect any defense available to a defendant in a health care lawsuit or action under any other provision of Federal law.

SEC. 11. STATE FLEXIBILITY AND PROTECTION OF STATES' RIGHTS.

(a) HEALTH CARE LAWSUITS.—The provisions governing health care lawsuits set forth in this Act preempt, subject to subsections (b) and (c), State law to the extent that State law prevents the application of any provisions of law established by or under this Act. The provisions governing health care lawsuits set forth in this Act supersede chapter 171 of title 28, United States Code, to the extent that such chapter—

(1) provides for a greater amount of damages or contingent fees, a longer period in which a health care lawsuit may be commenced, or a reduced applicability or scope of periodic payment of future damages, than provided in this Act; or

(2) prohibits the introduction of evidence regarding collateral source benefits, or mandates or permits subrogation or a lien on collateral source benefits.

(b) PROTECTION OF STATES' RIGHTS.—Any issue that is not governed by any provision of law established by or under this Act (including State standards of negligence) shall be governed by otherwise applicable State or Federal law. This Act does not preempt or supersede any law that imposes greater protections (such as a shorter statute of limitations) for health care providers and health care organizations from liability, loss, or damages than those provided by this Act.

(c) STATE FLEXIBILITY.—No provision of this Act shall be construed to preempt—

(1) any State statutory limit (whether enacted before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act) on the amount of compensatory or punitive damages (or the total amount of damages) that may be awarded in a health care lawsuit, whether or not such State limit permits the recovery of a specific dollar amount of damages that is greater or lesser than is provided for under this Act, notwithstanding section 4(a); or

(2) any defense available to a party in a health care lawsuit under any other provision of State or Federal law.

SEC. 12. APPLICABILITY; EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall apply to any health care lawsuit brought in a Federal or State court, or subject to an alternative dispute resolution system, that is initiated on or after the date of the enactment of this Act, except that any health care lawsuit arising from an injury occurring prior to the date of the enactment of this Act shall be governed by the applicable statute of limitations provisions in effect at the time the injury occurred.

SEC. 13. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the sense of Congress that a health insurer should be liable for damages for harm caused when it makes a decision as to what care is medically necessary and appropriate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) each will control 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) each will control 10 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the bill, H.R. 4600, currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, a national insurance crisis is ruining the Nation's essential health care system. Medical professional liability insurance rates have soared, causing many insurers to either drop coverage or raise premiums to unaffordable levels. Doctors and other health care providers are being forced to abandon patients and practices, particularly in high-risk specialties such as emergency medicine and obstetrics and gynecology. This trend has had a particularly negative impact upon women, low-income neighborhoods and rural areas, and in medical schools large and small.

When California faced a similar crisis over 25 years ago, Democratic Governor Jerry Brown, following the recommendation of the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), then chairman of the California Assembly's Select Committee on Medical Malpractice, enacted the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act, known as MICRA.

MICRA's reforms include a $250,000 cap on noneconomic damages, limits on the contingency fees lawyers can charge, and provisions that prevent double recoveries. According to the Los Angeles Times, "Because of the 1975 tort reform, doctors in California are largely unaffected by increasing insurance rates. But the situation is dire in other States." Exhaustive research by two Stanford University economists has confirmed that direct medical care litigation reforms, including caps on noneconomic damage awards, generally reduce malpractice claims rates, insurance premiums and other stresses upon doctors that may impair the quality of medical care.

The HEALTH Act includes MICRA's reforms, while also creating a fair share rule by which defendants are only liable for the percentage of damages for which they are at fault. Additionally, H.R. 4600 sets reasonable guidelines, but not caps, on punitive damage awards. Under this legislation, a punitive damage award cannot exceed the greater of $250,000, or two times the amount of economic damages that are awarded.

The HEALTH Act will accomplish reform without limiting compensation for 100 percent, or all of plaintiffs' economic losses, meaning any loss which can be quantified and to which a receipt can be attached. These include their medical costs, lost wages, future lost wages, rehabilitation costs, and any other economic out-of-pocket loss suffered as a result of a health care injury.

Additionally, although this legislation places a cap on noneconomic damages, it also allows deserving victims to keep more of their jury awards by limiting the percentage that lawyers can take. This is accomplished according to a sliding scale that caps legal fees down to 15 percent of awards exceeding $600,000. Without such reforms, lawyers can take their standard one-third to 40 percent cut from whatever victims recover. Enactment of this bill will allow victims to keep roughly 75 percent of awards under $600,000 and 85 percent of awards over that amount. Under the HEALTH Act, the larger the demonstrable, real-life economic damages are, the more the victims will get to keep.

A recent survey conducted for the bipartisan legal reform organization Common Good, whose board of advisers includes former Clinton administration Deputy Attorney General Eric Holder and former Democratic Senator Paul Simon of Illinois, reveals the dire need for regulating the current medical tort system in America. According to the survey, which was conducted by the reputable Harris organization:

First, more than three-fourths of physicians feel that concern about malpractice litigation has hurt their ability to provide quality care in recent years; second, 79 percent of physicians report that fear of malpractice claims causes them to order more tests than they would based only on the professional judgment of what is medically needed.

As former Democrat Senator and Presidential candidate George McGovern and former Republican Senator Alan Simpson have written, "Legal fear drives doctors to prescribe medications and order tests, even invasive procedures, that they feel are unnecessary. Reputable studies estimate that this defensive medicine squanders $50 billion a year. The Common Good survey also asked physicians the following question: Generally speak, how much do you think that fear of liability discourages medical professionals from openly discussing and thinking of ways to reduce medical errors?

An astonishing 59 percent of physicians replied "a lot."

Americans want to see their friends and loved ones receive the best and most accessible health care available, but, with greater and greater frequency, doctors are not there to deliver it because they have been priced out of the healing profession by unaffordable professional liability insurance rates.

Sound policy does not favor supporting one person's abstract ability to sue a doctor for unlimited and unquantifiable damages when doing so means that health care will become less accessible and less affordable to all Americans, particularly to women, to the poor and to those who live in rural areas.

The American Bar Association estimates that there are 1 million lawyers in the United States, but all of us, all 287 million Americans, are patients, and as patients and for patients, I urge my colleagues to support the HEALTH Act.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I begin by commending the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) for conducting a very important and substantive debate on the rule governing this measure that is before us.

Now, let us begin with the fact that this medical malpractice reform bill, except for the fact that there are no caps on attorneys, is the same bill, amendment, brought forward by the gentleman from California (Chairman THOMAS) to the Patients' Bill of Rights last July, and it was turned down, for good reason.

The next thing I should point out is that there is a serious constitutional problem that the American Bar Association has written to me and members of the committee about, a letter that I have for those who still have that reverence for that document, that I am sure we all do.

Now, there has been constant reference to the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act of 1975 in California. May I point out to all of those who assume that it has been enormously successful that the Consumers Federation of America in their report, which reinforces another California report, makes two points: That the per capita health expenditures in California have exceeded the national average every year between 1975 and 1993 by an average of at least 9 percent per year; and that the California health care costs have continued to skyrocket at a rate faster than inflation since the passing of the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act.

Inflation, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, rose 186 percent between 1975 and 1993, yet California's health care costs grew by 343 percent during the same period. Moreover, California's health care costs have grown at almost twice the rate of inflation since 1985.

Now, the problem with this bill is that rather than help doctors and victims, this bill really does a great favor to insurance companies, HMOs and the manufacturers of defective medical products and the pharmaceuticals, as usual.

In addition, it also is clear that a legislative solution focused on limiting victims' rights available under our State tort system will do little other than increase the incidence of medical malpractice, already the third leading cause of preventible deaths in the United States of America.

Finally, you should be aware that the drug companies have somehow gotten into this, as well as the producers of the infamous Dalcon Shield, the Cooper 7 IUD, high absorbancy Tampons, linked to toxic shock syndrome, and silicon gel implants, all of whom would have completely avoided billions of dollars that they have paid out in damages had this bill been law.

So, Mr. Speaker, I refer you finally to the Consumers Union Report, which points out in detail all of the basic things that have been reviewed here.

Please let us stick to our guns. This is too important a thing to let something as blatantly political go through in the name of helping the victims of medical malpractice in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) I think was in error when he was saying that all of these people would have avoided billions and billions of dollars of liability. The fact is that this bill does not limit liability for proven economic damages, such as lost wages, lost future wages, rehab expenses, medical expenses and the like by one penny for anybody. The economic damages that are suffered are unlimited under this legislation. What it does limit is noneconomic damages that cannot be quantified.

What the gentleman from Michigan says is that we all should pay more in doctors' fees and the taxpayers should pay more in Medicare expenses simply because we do not want to limit noneconomic damages for maybe one plaintiff or a couple of plaintiffs.

So here is something where the interests of a few completely wipe away the interests of the greater good, particularly those people in rural areas that are looking for OB-GYNs.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

We on the Committee on the Judiciary have been wrestling with this issue for many years and have had many different proposals cross our desks on this very same theme. What brings us to the floor now is that when we were first considering it the problems were terrible. Now the problems are more than terrible, almost unbearable.

Every day in Pennsylvania, just like in your home States, you hear anecdotes about the giving up of a practice by a physician or the constriction of services to be rendered at a hospital or actually the closing of a hospital, all due to the rising cost of insurance premiums and the awards granted on behalf of plaintiffs across the board.

What is so good about the plan we have in front of us is, as the gentleman from Wisconsin was able to articulate, that this puts no caps at all on the economic damages. As a matter of fact, the testimony that we had from the Californians who testified as to the system that is extant in their State was that even though health care costs are rising and that they must consider that in the awards that are granted in California, the rising health care costs, even though they go up, are going up incrementally, and the cap on the noneconomic damages remains the same, thus preserving the very root of this kind of legislation. It is to allow physicians and hospitals to remain in place across the spectrum of medical services. Why? Because their economic damages of their own, caused by the high insurance premiums and high awards visited against them, would be retarded by this legislation. It would not cure the matter, but it would retard their financial difficulties.

If we can retard their financial difficulties, we give them reason to stay in place, to leave their practice thriving in a particular sector in my State and in yours. It would allow hospitals to be able to budget in such a way, with the shrinking cost of insurance that we hope that this brings about, to be able to extend services or remain in place over a long period of time, where otherwise, with the high costs now seen across the Nation, they are incapable of maintaining their own level of services. So this is the time to bring about a great reform.

I remember in 1995 we were on the floor with a different version of this bill and many of us thought we had a great chance of passing it. But, for one reason or another, it did not occur. All I do now is repeat that that was then when the situation was very bad; today it is much worse, and we have a chance to strike a blow at this emergency right now.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, before I yield to my friend from Massachusetts, I think we ought to make sure we are all talking about the same bill.

On page 5 of this bill we eliminate the doctrine of joint and several liability, meaning that if one person does not have enough money, then nobody else is responsible for them paying for the damages.

Number two, the statute of limitations is reduced to 3 years, and that is on page 3. What that means then is if a person with AIDS discovers it in 6 years, they just missed out, because the statute of limitations would now be 3 years.

For my friend from Pennsylvania's information, this bill does cap noneconomic and punitive damages.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), from the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

So the Republicans say that they have identified a big problem: Insurance premiums for physicians are skyrocketing, and we have to do something about it.

What is their solution? Just what the insurance companies ordered for a solution: A cap on noneconomic damages at $250,000; pain and suffering, all that, $250,000. The juries are not even told that the limit is $250,000, so they could come back with a $1 million verdict, but only $250,000 to the victim.

But their bill does not say that the savings goes to physicians. No. They have all the money go to the insurance company executives.

Now, last night I made a request to the Republicans that I be allowed to make an amendment that says that any amount of money that a jury renders above $250,000, let us say $1 million, that the court would then give that money over to a court-appointed trustee and the court-appointed trustee would then ensure that the insurance premiums for the physicians inside that area would be lowered.

The Republicans prohibited that from coming out here because that would guarantee that the physicians would be the beneficiaries, not the insurance industry. And what is the problem? Well, the insurance company executives have a fiduciary relationship to their shareholders, to their wives, to their children, to maximize profits for themselves. That is a legal responsibility.

If we are going to pass this bill and limit the ability for victims to recover, then the only justification should be that physicians' premiums go down, and that is the one big missing link in the Republican bill. There is no requirement that the insurance companies lower the premiums for doctors, and that is what the Democrats are trying to do, to help the patients, to help the doctors. And what is the Republican Party doing once again? They are bringing out the agenda of the insurance industry.

If we have learned anything from the accounting practices across this country, it is that it is impossible to know where those savings would have gone.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) thunders away about the Republican solution to the problem of escalating medical liability insurance premiums. He is entitled to his opinion. But the Democrats have no solution at all. They would like to continue the present system. They would like to see these rates skyrocket. They would like to see physicians close their practices or go into other specialties. They would like to see OB-GYNs be priced out of the market. They would like to see clinics in rural areas closed, and they would like to see the affordability and the accessibility of health care to poor people shrink.

I figured out how much the patient ends up having to pay. In the State of Mississippi, an OB-GYN can be charged as much as $110,000 a year this year for professional liability insurance, based upon 2,000 billable hours per year. Based upon 2,000 billable hours per year, a half an hour visit to that OB-GYN, the first $27.50 of whatever that doctor charges the patient goes for that patient's share of the doctor's professional liability insurance premium, and everything else that the doctor charges ends up being used to pay the doctor's other expenses as well as to allow the doctor to take some money home to support himself or herself and their families. So all of these costs end up getting passed on to the patients, and if you want to complain about the high cost of health insurance, the way to start doing something about it is to pass this bill so that doctors do not have to pay through the nose for professional liability insurance.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART).

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation. Many of my colleagues today have made claims that this bill is bad, as we just heard, that this is just what the insurance companies order. Actually, if my colleagues will look at this map, they will see it is actually just what the doctors ordered.

The States in red, my home State of Pennsylvania, are the States where we are in a crisis. Doctors are leaving my State in droves, leaving patients with nowhere to go for health care. Those in opposition say they dislike caps on damages and limits on lawyers' contingency fees. Let us start with that cap on damages. It is a $250,000 cap, and it is on punitive damages. It has nothing to do with the actual recovery that the injured plaintiff is due. It is the additional damages that are being limited.

Let us talk about the limit on lawyer contingency fees. The lawyer who actually suffered no injury at all is being limited on how much in fees he can take from that plaintiff's award. That is the award that is due to the plaintiff because of the actual injury. The bill helps the injured person retain more of the award that she is due. The lawyer would be limited to, listen, 40 percent of the first $50,000; one-third of the second $50,000; one-fourth of the next $500,000; and 15 percent of any amount over $600,000. Do the math. The lawyer gets plenty of money under this plan. I do not believe we will have a shortage of lawyers taking on cases as a result of this; but if we do not get this, we will continue to have a shortage of doctors who are willing to take on patients. Without this rule, we will continue the mass exodus in these States in red, and the States that are not in red are soon to follow.

This past weekend I visited with a physician friend of mine. Both she and her husband are practicing medicine in my home State of Pennsylvania. She gave me the bad news of her firsthand experience and how she and her husband are interviewing out of State to practice medicine out of State because they can no longer afford the insurance that they need to be able to continue to practice to provide good service to their patients.

In Pennsylvania over the last 4 years, rates have increased 125 percent, according to the "Medical Liability Monitor." The American Medical Association has statistics that are similar. If we do not pass this HEALTH act, we are saying to the people of America we are not concerned about their health. I believe that we are, and I believe that the majority of us will support the HEALTH act, a wonderful bill by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) and a bill that we should all support to make sure that our constituents get the health care they need.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY).

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

We are going to see many crocodile tears shed this afternoon on behalf of physicians and their high premiums. But the Republicans refuse to allow the Democrats to make an amendment that ensures that all of the savings that come from the limits on how much a patient can recover goes to lower insurance premiums. They refuse to allow us to even make the amendment because they are going to allow the insurance industry to pocket this money. That is what this time is all about. It is about the insurance companies, not about the physicians. We support the physicians.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I corrected the other side in connection with their understanding of their bill which may have brought about an overreaction about what Democrats do not want to happen to the health system in America. I apologize for that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to our very distinguished colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), on the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have to say with respect to all my colleagues that I think we have lost sight of what this is all about. When we start debating the merits or demerits of this bill, we miss the point. The point is that in North Carolina if I walk into a physician's office, all of that treatment takes place right there in North Carolina, and historically the tort law and medical negligence law has been determined State by State; and were I in the State legislature of North Carolina, all of this discussion that we are having would probably be a very appropriate debate.

But for people who came to Congress saying that they believed in States' rights and the federalist form of government that we have, this debate is totally misplaced. It would be like us saying, well, we are very dissatisfied with schools all across the country; therefore, we are going to federalize the whole education system in America. That is what this debate reminds me of.

My Republican colleagues, in 1995, told me that they believed in States' rights. And ever since then, they have been trying to federalize the standards on everything that has traditionally been done at the State level, and this is just another one of those examples.

When I raise this point, nobody seems to care. Well, my Constitution says that unless there is some interstate commerce connection, and I have not seen any medical practice take place across State lines since I have been going to doctors; unless there is some kind of Federal nexus here, why are we debating tort reform here, rather than having the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART) go back and tell her State legislators that they need to address this problem? If they are losing doctors in Pennsylvania, then they ought to address the problem in Pennsylvania and solve the problem there, not federalize the issue.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN).

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4600, a bill to protect doctors, other health care providers, drug companies, and manufacturers of medical devices from the consequences of their own negligence. It reduces compensation for severely injured people in order to save money for negligent providers and their insurers.

This is a congressional power grab to take over tort law from the States. Many States, including Maine, have held down malpractice premiums without stripping compensation from severely injured plaintiffs. Maine requires a review of malpractice claims by an independent panel within 90 days of the plaintiff's filing a claim. I served on two of those panels before I left the practice of law, and the result is more cases are settled early without an arbitrary cap on damages.

I believe that we here in the Congress should deal with our issues and leave the State law issues to the States. We do not need to take over State legislative responsibility.

We are now in the fourth week since the August recess, and not one single appropriations bill that we ought to be dealing with has come to the floor of this House; instead, we are spending our time dealing with matters more appropriate for State legislators.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to tell my colleagues about a woman, I will call her Jane, and she is a citizen of the State of Washington. She went in for a routine test, a mammography, a biopsy was done, she was diagnosed as having breast cancer. She had a double radical mastectomy because of that diagnosis. She then developed a blood clot that went into her bowel and she required her bowel to be removed. She then developed another blood clot that caused gangrene in her leg, and they had to cut off her leg.

Some time later, a subsequent review, a quality control assurance review, found that the diagnosis was inaccurate. The pathology report was flat dead wrong. She never had cancer, she never had anything that required significant surgery. She is a woman without breasts, without a bowel, and without a leg due to a failure, either of a physician or of a medical device, both of which would be affected by this legislation.

Now, I do not know what is just to do in Jane's situation, but I do know this: the first people that should be making that decision are 12 of her peer citizens sitting in a jury box looking at the evidence, the second should be the State legislature, and the last should be the U.S. Congress. We should reject this legislation.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER), one of our ranking members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a cruel attempt to protect insurance companies by trampling the rights of consumers.

We are told today the bill is necessary to drive down insurance rates because juries award too much money to plaintiffs. But that is a diversion from the real problem, which is very simple: mismanagement by the insurance companies. Insurance companies make their money by investing the premiums they collect in the stock market. When the market is strong, they keep premiums artificially low, because they can make plenty of money in the markets. When the market turns sour, they must dramatically increase premiums to cover their costs. It is a predictable cycle, and that is why once about every 10 years when the market goes south, we hear of a great crisis which is then blamed on out-of-control lawsuits and the consumer has to get it in the neck.

Mr. Speaker, lawsuits account for the same minuscule fraction of health care costs as they always have. Studies have shown the average jury award has not changed at all in the last decade, so why the sudden crisis? Because the market is in a tailspin and the insurance companies need to recoup their losses because they kept the rates too low during the good years. But why should injured patients pay to bail out the failed management of these companies? And who seriously believes that premiums will go down if this bill is passed?

As Debora Ballen, executive vice president of the American Insurance Association said, "Insurers never promised that tort reform would achieve specific premium savings," just savings to their bottom line, I guess. And, of course, the Republican Committee on Rules refused to allow an amendment on the floor that would say that they have to pass on the savings to the doctors, to the consumers.

In pursuit of this giant bailout, what we have here is a breathtaking assault on the rights of consumers and patients. Take the $250,000 cap on noneconomic damages, a figure that might have been reasonable in 1975 when the MICRA law was passed in California; it is woefully inadequate today. The equivalent today would be $1.5 million.

Again, the Republican Committee on Rules refused to allow an amendment to even say, okay, $250,000, we will put in an inflation amount to adjust it, so it does not decrease to nothing with inflation. If we maintain this cap now, it will be impossible for consumers to hold doctors accountable for malpractice in the future.

Not content merely to cap malpractice suits, this bill also guts, guts State HMO laws, protects big drug companies and medical product manufacturers, makes punitive damages almost impossible to assess, and places an unreasonable statute of limitations on injured patients.

Mr. Speaker, we should not be misled by the bill's supporters. Do not believe for a second that insurance rates will go down as a result of this bill. This cruel bill should be seen for what it is: another gift from the Republican majority to the big insurance companies at the expense of patients, consumers, and, I might add, doctors.

This irresponsible bill should be disapproved.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. COX).

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, we are here because of patients. Patients are not getting care. Trauma centers are closing. Emergency rooms are closing. OB–GYNs are leaving their practice. Women are without health care. That is why we are here.

On June 30 of this year, Methodist Hospital in south Philadelphia, which had been delivering babies since 1892, closed its doors. They closed their maternity ward and they stopped delivering babies. This is going on all over the country.

In Nevada, in all of southern Nevada, now, there is no trauma center. Southern Nevada's only trauma center closed its doors in July. Las Vegas is now the only city of its size without any care for such people in these circumstances. Our intention is to ensure that no more patients are denied the care they deserve.

We have heard there was a Democratic amendment that should have been made in order that would have ensured that savings from this bill, which the Congressional Budget Office estimates at $14 billion, $14 billion more available to go into health care, into hospitals, into Medicare givebacks, into quality of care, that we should have had this amendment that guaranteed that savings went to doctors.

Somebody should ask whether the doctors supported that amendment, because they did not. The way this amendment was written, the premiums would still have been high because the awards still would have had to be paid, this time to a trustee instead of to the trial lawyers, but the premiums would not have come down. That is why doctors did not support the amendment.

Somebody made the claim that the Dalkon shield case, bringing up the old horribles of the past, that damages would not have been awarded in that case had this bill been law. That is completely false. In 1976 Congress changed the law, post-Dalkon shield, to require pre-market approval for devices. The House and Senate reports on that legislation specifically mentioned Dalkon shield as something that would have been kept off the market if we had had pre-market approval in the law.

What this bill says is if a device has been approved by the FDA, then there will not be punitive damages; in other words, if people comply with the pre-market approval requirements, why should the lawyers be able to claim that there was some kind of willful, egregious, and so on kind of injury committed.

In California, we have had this system a long time. I have heard some people say that California's premiums have gone up faster than inflation. Of course they have, they have gone up 150 percent since this law has gone on the books. But at the same time, we have to tell the whole story, malpractice premiums in the rest of the country have gone up 500 percent. This has saved a great deal of money for us in California.

Medical liability insurance premiums in constant dollars have actually fallen in California by more than 40 percent, and injured patients are receiving compensation more quickly in California than in the United States as a whole. Injured patients receive a larger share of the awards.

This is all about patients; it is all about making sure that their doctors can serve them. That is why doctors support this bill. That is why patients support this bill. It is why it is high time that we pass this bill.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, to my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. COX), I say, please check the punitive damages that the Dalkon shield Cooper 7 IUD, the hundreds of millions that they would have not had to pay had this bill been in effect.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. SANDLIN).

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, someone needs to stand up for American physicians. Somebody needs to stand up for the American health care system.

What is the problem? Malpractice premiums have skyrocketed. What is the answer proposed by our friends on the other side? It is H.R. 4600. Let us make no mistake about it, H.R. 4600 is a hoax, it is a sham, and our friends know it. It is a sham on the American medical establishment by the insurance carriers, who want to limit their exposure but will not commit to reducing premiums.

Please read the bill. H.R. 4600 limits the amount that carriers pay for legitimate claims, but it has absolutely no provision requiring reducing premiums; none, zero, zilch, nada, nothing, and they know it. It is a scam.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, in States that have enacted caps, in States that have enacted caps, the malpractice premiums are higher than in States that have no caps. But the carriers do not want to tell us that. Why? That is because their interests are in conflict with the medical community.

I want to ask a question: Do the words "Patients' Bill of Rights" ring a familiar note? What causes the problems? It is not physicians, it is not patients, it is not even the lawyers they are talking about; the problem is the market. St. Paul recently, in announcing it was exiting the market, said they paid too much in claims; but, oh, yes, they forgot to mention they lost $108 million in Enron. Every time the market goes down, they claim a medical liability crisis. How convenient is that?

The truth is that the carriers are asking doctors, hospitals, and patients to pay for their bad investment decisions. It is as simple as that. They know it. We have asked the insurance carriers to put in this bill a requirement to reduce premiums. They will not do it. They will not talk about it. That is because they know they are going to raise the premiums. It is a scam on the entire system.

There are a lot of other problems. At least 31 States have found portions of this bill to be unconstitutional. It does limit economic damages because it gets rid of joint and several liability. They know that. They know it limits economic damages.

Let us just get right back to it. It boils down to this point: It helps the insurance carriers; it does nothing for the physicians and nothing for the patients, and they know it.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) to concluded the debate on our side of the aisle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GUTKNECHT). The gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) is recognized for 2 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member, for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, time is short for an important step for America, and that is, of course, something that probably we have not debated on this floor. We do not make light of the horrific tragedy of 9/11, but what it caused Americans to do is to reinforce their commitment to our values. Part of that is the judiciary system, which allows Americans to go into a courthouse and address their grievances, away from violence and intimidation.

It is interesting that we would come in that backdrop to begin to tell Americans that they cannot go into the courthouse when they have been injured and begin to find relief. Why we are promoting this kind of bill that denies and equalizes justice for all Americans I cannot give an answer.

Many people criticize lawyers. I remember Shakespeare saying, the first thing you should do is to kill all the lawyers. I am one, but I serve the American people as a Representative for the 18th Congressional District in Texas.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell the Members, I supported reform in the State of Texas. I believe the President of the United States supported it. But can Members imagine that the legislation that we have on the floor today goes overboard, goes way beyond the idea of allowing poor people to get into the courthouse and lawyers to represent them when tragedy has befallen them.

For example, a 50-year-old woman who earned about $12,500 annually settled her malpractice claim during trial for $12 million because her surgeon had impaired her spine; a spear, if you will, went through her spine. With this particular health act, she would be severely limited by the $250,000 cap, a woman who makes $12,500.

Let me tell the Members why this is bogus, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the idea that this bill will help prevent hospitals from closing and doctors' offices from closing.

I am their friend. We cannot survive without a medical profession. Doctors will tell us that they are being shut down because of these premiums. They are not angry at lawyers, they are being made to be angry at lawyers.

When we had this bill in Texas, the premium went up from $26,000 to $45,000. This is a bogus bill and we should vote it down because it denies the American people the opportunity to get into the courthouse. This is a bill against poor people.

Mr. Speaker, I oppose H.R. 4600, the so-called "HEALTH" Act of 2002. I do this with somewhat mixed emotions, because I agree with the bill's stated purpose: to Help get Efficient Accessible Low Cost Timely Health care to all Americans. I agree that one of the obstacles to accessible low cost health care is the outrageous liability insurance premiums charged to health care providers. I also feel that some approaches to litigation contribute to the cost of our Nation's health care by encouraging professionals to use tests, procedures, and treatments that may not be necessary. I agree with supporters of this bill that high malpractice insurance premiums charged by insurance companies have led some physicians to abandon high-risk specialties and patients.

Unfortunately, H.R. 4600 does not address any of these problems. The bill does not discourage lawsuits. This bill does not decrease liability insurance premiums, the real problem. The bill does place a cap on noneconomic damage awards, but there is no reason to think that limiting awards to suffering people with legitimate claims will translate into decreased premiums for providers.

In California, where tort reform has been the strictest and has had almost three decades to work, premiums are still 8 percent higher than premiums in States without noneconomic damage caps. Medical malpractice insurers in California pay out less than 50 cents in claims on every dollar they bring in through premiums. Obviously tort reform is lining the coffers of insurance companies and not getting to doctors or their patients.

It is surprising that supporters of this bill are presenting it as a means to decrease premiums, when those in the know, such as the executive vice president of the American Insurance Association, and American Tort Reform Association president, both have stated that limitations like those in this bill will not necessarily decrease premiums.

I am also confused about where this arbitrary cutoff of $250,000 for noneconomic damages comes from. It happens to be the same number used in similar legislation, passed 27 years ago in California, with no adjustment for inflation or changes in costs of living. Due to skyrocketing health care costs, $250,000 will only get an injured person about $40,000 worth of care.

The bill does not cap economic damages—which is good news for those with high incomes. Rich people will be able to stay rich and perhaps that is appropriate. But what about mothers who work at home raising their children, or the elderly on fixed incomes? They will not be able to claim large economic damages due to losses in income. If they are crippled or blinded by a negligent HMO, or pharmaceuticals company, they may get their $250,000—but maybe they will receive 8 or 9 thousand dollars per year. That is a pittance for someone working through the tough times after a catastrophic injury.

Perhaps that would be a fair sacrifice if the funds would go to our hospitals or public health clinics, but to increase revenues of insurance companies? I say no.

Furthermore, since we do not have a bill before us today that would limit liability insurance, or would decrease the number of frivolous lawsuits, perhaps we should leave it to the States to decide how to address these issues. California is not the only State in the Union that is working to tackle these problems; Texas has worked to solve this problem and has put forward a better solution. H.R. 4600 would override such local efforts and compromise the rights of States, and probably not help improve the health of a single American, except maybe a few insurance company CEOs.

I encourage my colleagues to vote against H.R. 4600.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) is dead wrong. This bill will not close the courthouse to anybody who has a legitimate claim. It does not restrict anybody's right to sue. What it does do is it puts some sense in the compensation. It puts some sense in the compensation in a manner that allows affordable and accessible health care to be available nationwide. We will not be pricing doctors out of their practice by high professional liability insurance premiums. We will not force maternity wards and trauma centers to close their doors for the same reason.

The time has come to put some sense in this system. California did that. They do not have a crisis there because their State legislature did that. We now have to step up to the plate and work for the patients, particularly in the States that are listed in red and in yellow on the map that was referred to by the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART).

Pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for the Committee on the Judiciary has expired.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD).

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2¼ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, as usually happens at this time in the debate, the rhetoric gets hotter and we tend to find ourselves at our most cynical attitudes. But let us see if we can do a little better than that in the next 20 minutes.

The fact of the matter is that we do not accuse the Democratic Party of being the lackeys of the trial lawyers, and they should not accuse us of being the lackeys of the health care industry. But what we all should care about is our constituents. We should care about the pregnant woman, we should care about an individual harmed in an automobile accident, we should care about their access to health care.

Also, we should care about them if they cannot find a doctor. We should care about them if the trauma center is closed and cannot save their lives. We should care about them if they are injured by a doctor. It is not either/or.

We have a crisis in this country right now. It is nearly countrywide. The crisis is that the cost of medical malpractice insurance has skyrocketed to the point where obstetricians cannot deliver babies anymore, where neurosurgeons are leaving trauma centers, where trauma centers are closing their doors. We are very close, if we are not there already, to Americans dying because they cannot get emergency care and the quality of our health care system deteriorating across-the-board.

There is a solution. There is a solution here that enables us to care about our constituents when they are struggling to find care or emergency care, and care about them when they are hurt by a physician and they have a legitimate claim. That has been modeled in California.

I have heard my constituents argue erroneously that capping noneconomic damages will not affect premium rates. That is dead wrong. Let us settle that. There is the chart. The source here is the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

This chart tells the whole story. While California's rates have stayed flat for the last 25 years, the rest of the country's rates have soared. This is the solution. We all ought to work on it together, get it over to the Senate, and save America's health care system.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1415

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I support medical malpractice reform but I oppose this bill. H.R. 4600 lays the blame for rising medical malpractice premiums solely on individuals whom a court and jury determine have been injured by medical malpractice. Apparently Congress knows better than judges, juries and patients; but we do not know better than insurers.

This bill does not have a single provision acknowledging the insurance industry's accountability for skyrocketing premiums. Insurers have tripled their investment in the stock market over the past 10 years. Of course, now they are trying to recoup their losses.

Democrats have tried to negotiate with the majority to even look at this issue. But the majority rejected every attempt to force the insurance industry to assume any responsibility for its dramatic premium increases. There are avenues we could take to stabilize medical malpractice premiums, loss ratio requirements, reinsurance pools, transparency to help us see exactly why insurers are raising their rates. But no, in this billing the insurance industry is held harmless. It is the patients' fault.

California has the most stringent liability caps in the country. Premiums are higher in California than the average for the rest of the country. Premiums have grown faster in California than the average for the rest of the country. Still somehow the solution to the medical malpractice crisis is to cap jury awards. And by the way, to cap them in a way that promises wealthier patients larger rewards than other patients. This bill apparently says those who are more wealthy suffer more than those who are not.

H.R. 4600 will also shield HMOs that fail to provide the needed care. It would shield drug companies whose medicine has toxic side effects. It would shield manufacturers of defective medical equipment. In this bill, businesses are never at fault. Patients are greedy. Jurors are misguided. It is the patients' fault. That is the problem.

At a time when the public is calling for greater corporate accountability, this bill turns on the public itself and holds injured patients, not the insurance industry, accountable. I ask for a "no" vote.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the bill and on behalf of the Committee on Energy and Commerce recommend it to my colleagues in the House.

When injured patients in this country have to wait on average 5 years before a medical injury case is complete, our system is failing. When an injured patient loses up to 58 percent of the awards to attorneys and the courts, something is wrong. And when 60 percent of malpractice claims against doctors are dropped or dismissed, you can imagine the unnecessary costs to the system that all of us pay into.

Now, I want to do something we do not do around here enough. I want to admit to being wrong once in my life. I was in the legislature of Louisiana. I voted wrong. I voted against these reforms as a young State legislator. They were passed over my objections and they worked.

Doctors and hospitals in Mississippi are streaming into Louisiana because they do not have those protections in Mississippi and people in Mississippi are losing access to quality health care. Let me tell you, I do not care whether you have insurance or not. You can have all the insurance in the world; if there is no doctor to serve you, if there is no emergency room to go to, if there is no hospital to take care of you, you are in trouble. This bill makes sure we have doctors and hospitals and emergency rooms in America.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4600, legislation to ensure that patients have access to high quality health care.

When injured patients have to wait, on average, 5 years before a medical injury case is complete, our judicial system has failed. When injured patients lose 58 percent of their compensation to attorneys and the courts, our judicial system has failed. When 60 percent of malpractice claims against doctors are dropped or dismissed, but the fear of litigation still forces doctors with 25 years or more of experience to retire early, our judicial system has failed.

What my home State has in place and what California have benefited from for over 27 years are commonsense guidelines for health care lawsuits. These guidelines ensure that injured patients receive greater compensation and that frivolous lawsuits—that extort health care professionals and drive doctors from the practice of medicine—are limited.

The reforms in this bill will work. According to the Congressional Budget Office, "H.R. 4600 would lower the cost of malpractice insurance for physicians, hospitals, and other health care providers and organizations. That reduction in insurance costs would, in turn lead to lower charges for health care services and procedures, and ultimately, to a decrease in rates for health insurance premiums." Even better, "CBO estimates that, under this bill, premiums for medical malpractice insurance ultimately would be an average of 25 percent to 30 percent below what they would be under current law."

That means that Congress really has an opportunity to pass legislation that will have a direct impact on patient access to care. With these reforms, patients will have greater access to health insurance. With these reforms, doctors will stay in business and not be forced to move to another State, or even worse, drop a specialty practice altogether. With these reforms, patients will have greater access to providers so they will actually receive "health care."

The issue at hand today is fundamental to all of the deliberations we make with regard to health care policy. We all recognize that health care costs money, and that high health care costs are a barrier to health care. But, even if a patient has health insurance, what is that insurance coverage worth if there are few doctors available to treat you?

This bill before us will have a tremendous impact on patients' lives. I encourage all of my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, to support the legislation.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my colleague, the gentlewoman from northeast Ohio (Mrs. JONES).

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for yielding me time.

You know what, I am really tired of people not telling the truth on the floor of the House. Hospitals are not going to stay open any longer because of this bill. People are not going to get any better health care because of this bill.

What is going to give them better health care is if this Congress will go ahead and give people universal health care. The fact is that H.R. 4600 introduced under the guise of fixing the problem of rising costs of malpractice insurance does not say anywhere that insurance companies will be required to reduce premiums. Nowhere does it assure that any savings that the insurance companies get will be passed along to the doctors.

The shame of it all is it is taking away the ability of judges who served, like me, the ability to determine when punitive damages ought to be awarded. It is taking away the ability of people who are injured to have the ability to bring their claim in court. The reality is that this bill does none of the things that have been claimed by the other side.

Now, the hospitals are going to be open in Cleveland, Detroit, New York as a result of this; and nobody is going to get better health care. I say to my colleagues vote against this legislation. It does nothing to help our patients.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD).

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, unlimited liability is an unacceptable drain on our health care system today. It is about access to care. It is about unruly costs from defensive medicine. We have got to make a change before it begins to truly affect our patients any more than it already has.

Now, I understand that people who have been injured by medical malpractice deserve redress. I also know people on the other side of the issue believe you can never match a value to a human life. But when is it enough? Is it enough when a sick patient cannot find a doctor because too many doctors have closed down their practices over rising malpractice premiums? Is it enough when an emergency trauma center closes its doors? Is it enough when nurses and support personnel in that trauma center are put out of work, Mr. Speaker?

There has got to be a figure out there somewhere that is enough. Saying that no figure is enough and that we can never place a limit, some reasonable limits on noneconomic awards, is to condemn the American patients to lesser care as this reckless liability system takes its toll on our health care system today.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), my friend on the committee.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, 1 minute. There is not a lot I can say in 1 minute, but let me say the following: the Republicans seem to think that Washington has all the answers right here, and we ought to take it away from the States to make their own decisions, and I think that is a wrong approach.

They would impose a bill to be in place for all of this country when there are a lot of differences and a lot of different approaches to issues like tort liabilities, licensures of professionals and how to handle those matters. But supporters of this bill claim it is modeled after the California Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act, but the liability limits in this bill go far beyond medical malpractice. They extend to any lawsuits relating to any health care or medical product including the manufacturers and distributors of drugs and medical devices. This is far beyond the liability limits adopted in California or, as far as I am aware, any other State. So I oppose this bill.

I know that they are trying to do something about the medical malpractice problem, but I do not think it answers the problem; and I think it makes it one-size-fits-all, and it is not the best approach.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in strong support of H.R. 4600, the HEALTH act. Since other speakers, Mr. Speaker, have effectively described the extent of our problem and the need for a solution, I want to emphasize one feature of the bill that is very important to me, and this is actually somewhat in response to what the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) has just shared with us.

While H.R. 4600 does cap noneconomic damages, which I believe will help bring stability and predictability to the medical liability insurance market, it also does protect States' rights, since any State cap on noneconomic punitive damages, up or down, will supersede the Federal limits. And that is why I feel this bill strikes the right balance between the need for Federal action and the States' traditional role of the primary regulator of insurance markets.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I can stabilize our out-of-control medical liability system without harming the ability of patients to recover adequate compensation when they have been harmed. We can do this by passing H.R. 4600 today.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DOYLE).

(Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4600. We do have a problem with physicians and hospitals paying too much for malpractice insurance, but H.R. 4600 is not the answer. The cap on H.R. 4600 is based on a 1975 California law that when adjusted for inflation would have a value of slightly more than $40,000 today. This 1975 base cap penalizes the most vulnerable victims of medical malpractice: children, homemakers, the elderly and minorities, society members who have limited incomes and thus will benefit less from future economic earnings.

Nearly 12 percent of Americans currently live in poverty and would depend on noneconomic damages to live on if injured.

In my home State of Pennsylvania the people have decided against caps by including a prohibition on caps in our State constitution. Like them, I do not believe a cap on damages will do anything to reduce insurance premiums or ensure the quality of health care. But I realize the issue of a cap is a good starting point for discussion. Members like myself want to compromise and work on real solutions for the problems. Let us vote against this bill and start to work on a compromise that truly will reduce premiums.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GANSKE).

Mr. GANSKE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee has just endorsed the Medicare provision for low-reimbursement States like Iowa that we passed in our House prescription drug bill.

What does that have to do with this bill? Well, Iowa ranks dead last on Medicare reimbursements. When we have increased premiums for malpractice and our physicians and other practitioners are already dead last in terms of Medicare reimbursements, the increase in the malpractice premiums means that many patients may not have a doctor in the State of Iowa. What is the situation in Iowa? Well, when St. Paul went out of business, some physicians in Iowa were able to pick up coverage from Wisconsin; but it would be my prediction that in the next 12 to 18 months, unless there is some fix in terms of the malpractice premium situation, Iowa is going to be facing the same type of crisis that many of the States that have been talked about already today will be facing. So these are two inter-related issues. I am very pleased to support this bill.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GUTKNECHT). The Chair would admonish all Members that references to legislative positions of Senators must be confined to their factual sponsorship of bills, resolutions or amendments.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN).

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to H.R. 4600. At first blush this bill sounds great. That is why some medical groups are supporting it. We definitely need to do something about skyrocketing malpractice costs that are driving good doctors out of their offices and away from their patients, but this is not the way.

As a physician myself, I have thought about this bill until I realized it exempted manufacturers of drugs, products and HMOs from liability. Once again, the doctors are the only ones liable. Everyone else, those who put the products in our hands, those who dictate what we do, would be off the hook.

This bill does nothing to guarantee that medical malpractice premiums will actually be reduced. In California, which the Republicans cite, doctors' premiums have grown 3.5 percent from 1991 to 2000 compared with the national increase of 1.9 percent. This is not the kind of tort reform we need. This is a terrible bill, and I urge my colleagues to oppose it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would advise that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) has 3-3/4 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER).

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4600 because it strikes an appropriate balance between the needs of patients who have been harmed to seek redress and the needs of all patients to have access to health care.

I note my colleague from the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), was concerned about whether premiums would go down or not. I would welcome him to read the Congressional Budget Office's report that was ordered by the Committee on the Judiciary. CBO estimates that under this bill premiums for medical malpractice ultimately would go down on an average of 25 to 30 percent. So I would welcome the gentleman to read that.

I also particularly support section 11 that provides flexibility to the States. I think that is smart to do that. Indiana has a very good law that has been in place for over 3 decades. It is comprehensive medical malpractice reform. The system works well. It has a medical review panel.

It also limits recovery from lawyers. The total recovery is capped. Attorney's fees are capped. We have a compensation fund managed by the State, and injured patients receive compensation in a timely fashion. I would like to thank the chairman for permitting this flexibility in the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman and ranking member, soon to be chairman, my friend, for yielding me the time.

There is a malpractice insurance crisis in our country. The woman who delivered my two daughters no longer delivers babies these days because of that crisis, and I understand it. I also understand the way to end that problem is not to enact the greatest transfer of income in history from victims of medical malpractice to insurance companies, and that is what this underlying legislation does.

What it says is that people who have been the victims of medical mistake, medical malpractice and medical error will see an arbitrary ceiling on what they can recover when something has happened to them. What the bill does not say is that the savings that would no doubt accrue to the benefit of insurance companies must accrue to the benefit of the physicians who paid in malpractice premiums.

The iron rule of insurance law in America is when insurance companies get the money they keep it. They do not share it with the doctors. They do not share it with the patients. They keep it. This is an insurance company relief act at a time when our physicians and patients need relief.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. PICKERING).

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this act. In my home State we now have a crisis. Our legislature cannot reach agreement. It cannot enforce or enact any type of boundary or set of limits that will give us some protection and stability and predictability and certainty for our medical community. We have acute shortages of nurses, of OB/GYNs, of neurosurgeons. Our trauma care, if there is a car accident, this is becoming a matter of life and death in Mississippi.

We needed to do something here so that we can help in Medicare and Medicaid and for our veterans so that we can help have the nursing and the physician professions stay in business and stay in a very noble calling to heal the sick and to make well those who are hurt and injured.

If we do not do this, we will see health care in places like Mississippi diminish. It will not be affordable. It will not be accessible. I know from personal experience.

My mother just had open heart surgery. My sister just had her eighth child. On one day we had new life in our family. On the next day my mother got a new heart. We must have the medical care and we need this act to contain the costs and to keep those who heal in business.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining and who actually is going to close?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GUTKNECHT). The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) has 3 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) has 1-3/4 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will close.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. FLETCHER).

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) for the work he has done on this. What this bill is really about, it is about affordable, accessible, available and quality health care. Whatever else is said really makes very little difference if we cannot have health care access in all of America.

Some are saying this may limit the particular damages individuals injured may get, but in fact, the truth of this bill, the damages that a patient incurs are not limited in this bill, and it has proved very effective. The economic damages are unlimited. The punitive damages are up to twice the economic damages, which makes those unlimited virtually.

Let me say this. I do not begrudge personal lawyers having seven digit incomes. That is not the issue here. The issue is the siphoning of money out of the health care system that goes somewhere else, money that could be used to deliver health care.

The other issue is accessibility. There are some in rural America, if we do not pass legislation like this, either on the Federal level in many States, that are going to have to drive an extra mile to get looked at. That means that a patient is going to be injured, a child is going to be lost or another individual will not receive the health care.

I think it is imperative that we pass this legislation. I want to thank the leadership on this.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield our final 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado (Ms. DEGETTE), who has been a leader for patient's rights.

Ms. DEGETTE. Mr. Speaker, as a former State legislator, I am continually amazed how this Congress seems to think that we are the "über" State legislature and that we should solve all the problems that we in our cynicism do not think the States can solve. The truth is regulation of medicine is a State issue and regulation of medical malpractice is a State issue. Every State has a malpractice statute, and right now the majority of the States are reviewing those statutes to see if they are adequately addressing this issue. I think we should leave it up to the States, and that is one reason I oppose this bad, bad bill.

I know there is a malpractice insurance crisis in this country. I talk to my doctors just like everybody else, but I want to ask my colleagues this, why should the patients suffer twice because we want to reward the insurance companies? The patients are being asked to sacrifice their rights under this legislation. The doctors are still going to have to pay high insurance premiums because nothing in this legislation stops the insurance companies from continuing to rack up the rates, and the ones that are going to suffer are the patients.

In California, they have had a statute for many, many years. The malpractice insurance rates are higher than the States that do not have these kind of caps, and why? We are putting no limitations on these out-of-control insurance rates. In the meantime, here is what this terrible bill does to the patients, to people who are actually injured by medical malpractice.

The first one is the $250,000 cap on noneconomic damages. As I said in committee, I think people misunderstand what noneconomic damages are. They are not punitive damages. They are very real damages that patients suffer. They are things like loss of a leg, disfigurement, pain and suffering and the loss of fertility. Under common law, noneconomic damages would not be capped, but when we cap them at $250,000, victims who do not work outside the home like women, children, others with very low economic damages will not be able to be adequately compensated.

There is a case in Colorado where a child fell on a stick and his doctor did not adequately diagnose it, and that child, if he were limited to $250,000, his mother had to quit her job. He has been limited to a wheelchair. His chance to succeed as a citizen in our society is gone, and we are not going to adequately compensate him for that all because the insurance companies want to charge excessive rates. That is wrong. That is wrong for that kid, that is wrong for his family, and that is wrong for every single patient who suffers at the hands of malpractice.

The second problem with this bill, well, there are many problems, but the second I want to talk about is the elimination of joint and several liability. Under common law, defendants are jointly and severally liable. When we eliminate it, victims will not receive compensation.

Please defeat this bad bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker and most of the opponents of this bill have acknowledged that we have a crisis, a crisis that has to be resolved, and unfortunately, they have not articulated an alternative to our proposal, only their criticisms of it.

The fact of the matter is that this bill tips the scales back so that they are in balance. This bill allows 100 percent of economic damages, millions and millions of dollars of damages available to plaintiffs for their health care and their lost wages and many, many other economic damages. It puts a cap as a floor of $250,000 for noneconomic, noncalculable economic damages and allows every State in the union that wants to raise that to wherever they see fit.

This is the opportunity now to decide whether this House will stand up to the crisis and solve it or turn its head and let it fester for another 20 years.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, the American Medical Association has declared Georgia one of twelve states with a medical malpractice crisis. About four in every ten hospitals in Georgia are now facing liability insurance premiums that have increased by more than 50 percent, and one of every four of those facilities has been hit hard with increases that exceed 200 percent. The St. Paul Company was the second largest health care underwriter in Georgia. When it ceased writing medical malpractice insurance policies last December, around 42,000 physicians nationwide had to scramble for coverage and protection. Some still have not found new insurance. Radiologists, OB/GYN specialists, and surgeons are among the groups hardest hit by these rising rates.

Many of Georgia's 178 hospitals already are struggling financially from staffing shortages and financial pressures. Some hospitals in Georgia will either have to look at closing or offer fewer services to patients who are in desperate need of care. The problems in Georgia highlight a national challenge for both hospitals and physicians. Physicians are threatening to relocate or retire in the wake of dramatic increases in malpractice insurance premiums. Patients cannot afford to lose care because doctors cannot afford premiums. This is outrageous and a sad commentary on the state of our health care system.

Litigation costs have premiums which are forcing doctors to scale back services, retire early, and reduce care to the poor. Like physicians, hospitals are having a difficult time finding medical malpractice insurance because with the skyrocketing cost of litigation several providers have ceased writing coverage altogether.

I would like to share some examples to demonstrate the severity of this problem in Georgia:

There is an 80 bed hospital in Alma, Georgia, which is in the 8th Congressional district, that was forced to take out a bank loan to cover a medical malpractice insurance premium that more than tripled in one year (rising from $118,000 to $396,000). Memorial Hospital and Manor in Bainbridge, Georgia was faced with a staggering 600 percent increase on its existing policy (increasing from $140,000 to $970,000).

According to WebMD Medical News, Dr. Sand Reed in Thomasville, Georgia, an OB/GYN, said her medical malpractice insurance increased 30 percent just this year. She is considering giving up delivering babies. She should not be forced to make these choices and her patients will suffer when they lose her expertise and experience in this area.

According to the Atlanta Journal Constitution, Ty Cobb Health, a consortium of three rural Northeast Georgia Hospitals and nursing homes, received a bill by fax this summer just 24 hours before a check was due. Not only did the insurance company increase his deductible ten fold, but the premium jumped from $553,000 to $3.15 million—a 469 percent increase. They eventually got an extension but can no longer plan for expansions or renovations of their emergency room.

In Fitzgerald, Georgia, Dr. Jim Luckie, has quit delivering babies because his premium was so high. His liability insurance expired in April and it took him six weeks to get a new policy. When his insurance premium more than doubled, the family practitioner decided to discontinue the OB portion of his medical practice.

Dr. Edmund Wright, also of Fitzgerald, is a family practitioner who performed Caesarean sections and has had to give up that part of his practice. His premiums quadrupled to $80,000 this year and would have been $110,000 had he continued the surgical delivery procedure, which insurance companies consider "high risk."

In 2000, Georgia physicians paid more than $92 million to cover injury awards. That amount was 11th highest in the nation despite Georgia ranking 38th in total number of physicians in the U.S. It's clear Georgia is in a medical malpractice crisis.

Substantial medical malpractice reform is critical. The current system is destroying the doctor-patient relationship. I have talked extensively with the members and leadership of the Medical Association of Georgia, and have met with hospital and physician groups, as well as with patients and it is clear that we need to reform our current system for the sake of our patients, physicians, and hospitals. We need a system that allows any patient the right to pursue any cause where injury is the result of negligence. At the same time, we need a system that provides reasonable protection to hospitals and physicians.

Without the important reforms included in H.R. 4600, physicians and hospitals will continue to struggle to keep their doors open. I urge my colleagues to fight for all who deserve and need quality, affordable healthcare and to vote for this important legislation.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, as an OB–GYN with over 30 years in private practice, I understand better than perhaps any other member of Congress the burden imposed on both medical practitioners and patients by excessive malpractice judgments and the corresponding explosion in malpractice insurance premiums. Malpractice insurance has skyrocketed to the point where doctors are unable to practice in some areas or see certain types of patients because they cannot afford the insurance premiums. This crisis has particularly hit my area of practice, leaving some pregnant woman unable to find a qualified obstetrician in their city. Therefore, I am pleased to see Congress address this problem.

However this bill raises several questions of constitutionality, as well as whether it treats those victimized by large corporations and medical devices fairly. In addition, it places de facto price controls on the amounts injured parties can receive in a lawsuit and rewrites every contingency fee contract in the country. Yet, among all the new assumptions of federal power, this bill does nothing to address the power of insurance companies over the medical profession. Thus, even if the reforms of H.R. 4600 become law, there will be nothing to stop the insurance companies from continuing to charge exorbitant rates.

Of course, I am not suggesting Congress place price controls on the insurance industry. Instead, Congress should reexamine those federal laws such as ERISA and the HMO Act of 1973, which have allowed insurers to achieve such a prominent role in the medical profession. As I will detail below, Congress should also take steps to encourage contractual means of resolving malpractice disputes. Such an approach may not be beneficial to the insurance companies or the trial lawyers, but will certainly benefit the patients and physicians which both sides in this debate claim to represent.

H.R. 4600 does contain some positive elements. For example, the language limiting joint and several liability to the percentage of damage someone actually caused, is a reform I have long championed. However, Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4600 exceeds Congress' constitutional authority by preempting state law. Congressional dissatisfaction with the malpractice laws in some states provides no justification for Congress to impose uniform standards on all 50 states. The 10th amendment does not authorize federal action in areas otherwise reserved to the states simply because some members of Congress are unhappy with the way the states have handled the problem. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, by imposing uniform laws on the states, Congress is preventing the states from creating innovative solutions to the malpractice problems.

The current governor of my own state of Texas has introduced a far reaching medical litigation reform plan that the Texas state legislature will consider in January. However, if H.R. 4600 becomes law, Texans will be deprived of the opportunity to address the malpractice crisis in the way that meets their needs. Ironically, H.R. 4600 actually increases the risk of frivolous litigation in Texas by lengthening the statute of limitations and changing the definition of comparative negligence.

I am also disturbed by the language that limits liability for those harmed by FDA-approved products. This language, in effect, establishes FDA approval as the gold standard for measuring the safety and soundness of medical devices. However, if FDA approval guaranteed safety, then the FDA would not regularly issue recalls of approved products later found to endanger human health and/or safety.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4600 also punishes victims of government mandates by limiting the ability of those who have suffered adverse reactions from vaccines to collect damages. Many of those affected by these provisions are children forced by federal mandates to receive vaccines. Oftentimes, parents reluctantly submit to these mandates in order to ensure their children can attend public school. H.R. 4600 rubs salt in the wounds of those parents whose children may have been harmed by government policies forcing children to receive unsafe vaccines.

Rather than further expanding unconstitutional mandates and harming those with a legitimate claim to collect compensation, Congress should be looking for ways to encourage physicians and patients to resolve questions of liability via private, binding contracts. The root cause of the malpractice crisis (and all of the problems with the health care system) is the shift away from treating the doctor-patient relationship as a contractual one to viewing it as one governed by regulations imposed by insurance company functionaries, politicians, government bureaucrats, and trial lawyers. There is no reason why questions of the assessment of liability and compensation cannot be determined by a private contractual agreement between physicians and patients.

I am working on legislation to provide tax incentives to individuals who agree to purchase malpractice insurance, which will automatically provide coverage for any injuries sustained in treatment. This will insure that those harmed by spiraling medical errors receive timely and full compensation. My plan spares both patients and doctors the costs of a lengthy, drawn-out trial and respects Congress' constitutional limitations.

Congress could also help physicians lower insurance rates by passing legislation that removes the antitrust restrictions preventing physicians from forming professional organizations for the purpose of negotiating contracts with insurance companies and HMOs. These laws give insurance companies and HMOs, who are often protected from excessive malpractice claims by ERISA, the ability to force doctors to sign contracts exposing them to excessive insurance premiums and limiting their exercise of professional judgment. The lack of a level playing field also enables insurance companies to raise premiums at will. In fact, it seems odd that malpractice premiums have skyrocketed at a time when insurance companies need to find other sources of revenue to compensate for their recent losses in the stock market.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while I support the efforts of the sponsors of H.R. 4600 to address the crisis in health care caused by excessive malpractice litigation and insurance premiums, I cannot support this bill. H.R. 4600 exceeds Congress' constitutional limitations and denies full compensation to those harmed by the unintentional effects of federal vaccine mandates. Instead of furthering unconstitutional authority, my colleagues should focus on addressing the root causes of the malpractice crisis by supporting efforts to restore the primacy of contract to the doctor-patient relationships.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, we're facing a growing crisis in our health care system.

In a number of states, there's a continuing exodus of doctors and talented specialists that's drawing down the quality of health care available to many Americans.

The reason for it is simple. The plaintiff's bar has been working for years and years to undermine, weaken, and strip away the legal protections for practicing physicians.

Their reckless pursuit of ever-growing legal judgments is placing affordable insurance coverage out of reach for doctors in far too many states.

The raw greed motivating plaintiff's lawyers is driving good doctors out of states like Florida, Illinois, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas, and West Virginia, to pick only a few.

These states are in crisis. And if anyone doubts if, they can test my assertion by trying to schedule an appointment with a neurosurgeon in one of these states. You'd better not need help in a hurry.

Doctors are confronting an awful choice: Abandon the communities and patients they trained to heal or be broken over the unacceptable costs of rising medical insurance premiums.

All of this raises a dangerous question. The medical liability insurance crisis creates liabilities for us beyond the practical problems of routine care.

What happens in states with over-burdened medical systems if there's a terror attack that produces mass casualties? What happens to the people when doctors have been driven across the border to neighboring states?

Mr. Speaker, we need real common-sense reforms and we need them today. The HEALTH Act delivers that relief and I ask Members to support it.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, we must act now to address the malpractice insurance crisis facing our nation. Medical providers across the country are turning away new patients or simply closing their doors because they can no longer afford the skyrocketing malpractice insurance premiums. This is particularly true in high-risk specialties such as obstetrics/gynecology and emergency medicine.

An American Hospital Association survey released this June found that more than 1,300 health care institutions have been affected by increasing malpractice costs. It further reported that 20 percent of the association's 5,000 member hospitals and other health care organizations had cut back on services and 6 percent had eliminated some units.

And the AMA today designated 19 states as "Medical Liability Crisis State." Fortunately, my home state of Michigan is not on that list, but if things continue as they are, all of our home states will be on that list.

This is unacceptable. Patients do not have time to wait for care or travel long distances to find a provider when they are in emergency situations. We cannot allow people to die because emergency rooms cannot afford to insure the necessary specialists. Women should also be able to receive prenatal care without worrying that their doctors might not be able to continue providing care throughout their entire pregnancy.

Moreover, fear of litigation leads many doctors to prescribe medicines and order tests that they feel are unnecessary. Studies estimate that this defensive medicine costs billions of dollars a year, enough to provide medical care to millions of uninsured Americans.

I believe we must work to eliminate medical errors and patients should be able to seek redress when medical mistakes are made but our health care system should serve patients, not lawyers. I have strong concerns with any endless, frivolous, and costly personal injury-like litigation. Today's system is skewed toward enterprising plaintiff's attorneys but the focus should be toward expanding health care access.

The causes of the liability crisis are complex but legislation we are considering today is a significant step in ensuring health care providers will be able to continue serving patients. The HEALTH Act would help stabilize liability premiums as well as help patients get awards and settlements faster and ensure that patients, not lawyers, receive the majority of the awards.

This is common-sense legislation modeled after California's twenty-five year-old, highly successful litigation reforms. I encourage my colleagues to support this bill because Americans do not have the time to wait for assurance that health care practitioners can maintain their practices and continue to serve patients.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, it is clear that a crisis exists relating to the costs of medical malpractice liability insurance premiums. This bill is not a solution, and I will not vote for it. The problem deserves an effective solution based on a real causal evaluation, which this bill lacks. Even insurers and their lobbyists reject the notion that tort reform would achieve any specific premium reduction.

I am particularly concerned that the model for this bill, California's Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA), does not appear to have made any improvement at all in the battle against high malpractice insurance premiums. MICRA included a $250,000 cap on non-economic damages as well as arbitration and attorney fee provisions, yet doctors still pay premiums that are higher than the national average.

Furthermore, the caps on damages in this bill are arbitrary, and based on a scale established in 1975. In Oregon, the Supreme Court has repeatedly ruled that even looser caps are a clear violation of state law, and Oregon voters have resisted efforts to change this. This bill would overturn their decisions, as well as patients' rights laws in 11 other states.

Since Congress is very unlikely to enact this tort reform, we ought to look into the effect that poor investments, the legislative framework, and other insurance industry-side elements might have in this crisis. Until we achieve a greater level of transparency in the accounting practices of insurers who hold the strings to these premiums, we will be unable to truly provide the relief that the medical system needs. I am committed to working with all parties to solve the malpractice premium crisis.

Ms. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, today in my district, doctors are being forced out of practice because of the skyrocketing cost of medical malpractice insurance. In fact, a very close friend of mine who is a practicing physician in Fort Worth, Doctor Susan Blue, has recently been notified that her insurance carrier will terminate her policy on December first of this year. Since 1990, Doctor Blue has had nine malpractice claims filed against her. However, most of the claims were frivolous and without merit, and her insurance company only paid out on one of these claims. And in that instance, $5,000 was paid to simply avoid spending tens of thousands of dollars in defense.

Unfortunately, because Doctor Blue has been unable to find malpractice insurance, she may be forced to retire in December—after 29 years of practicing quality medicine.

I wish I could say that Doctor Blue's story is an isolated incident. But we all know it's not. Every member of Congress here today has a Doctor Blue in their district. Every member of Congress has experienced doctors that are, right now, deciding whether or not to retire because of the high cost of malpractice insurance. As a nation, we cannot afford to lose one more doctor.

With one less doctor, patients wait longer, diseases progress further, and health insurance costs continue to spin out of control.

Let's hold on to the skilled community physicians and ensure patients have the doctor choice that they deserve and desire.

Today I will be voting for doctors like Susan Blue, and I will support common sense malpractice reform. I will be supporting H.R. 4600.

Mr. EHRLICH. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the House today is debating public policy options to help contain the growth of medical care costs in our nation. Patients across the country continue to see increases in their insurance premiums and health costs, and it is critical for Congress to find solutions to make health care more affordable for physicians to practice and patients to access.

Proponents of H.R. 4600, the Help Efficient, Accessible, Low Cost, Timely Health Care (HEALTH) Act, argue that this bill, which would create national tort reform, would contain or lower medical malpractice insurance costs for physicians and by extension lower health costs for consumers. I understand the many arguments in favor of this legislation, including the need to limit excessive medical insurance costs which physicians face in many states and often pass on to their patients. Also, like my fellow House members, I too feel a need to help my constituents back home.

I agree that our society has become excessively litigious and that reasonable tort reform can be enacted to reduce medical malpractice insurance premiums, keep doctors in areas of medical need, and help patients. Supporters of this legislation argue that many states are incapable of enacting tort reform because of the restrictions of their state constitutions or other barriers. Supporters also argue that a federal remedy is reasonable because this bill allows for state limits on damages to supersede the federal caps. I understand that the majority of my party, our leadership, and the President support this bill.

I believe, however, the proper venue for this debate should not be the U.S. Congress but rather the many state legislatures whose constitutions forbid tort reform or where there is no political will to limit damages from medical malpractice. This is a state matter—not a federal one.

States can and do enact reasonable, successful tort reform. In Maryland, for example, our tort reform law has generally worked well. As a state delegate who served on the Judiciary Committee in Annapolis and as a Member of Congress, I strongly support Maryland's tort law, which differs significantly from H.R. 4600 on a number of important matters, including caps on noneconomic damages, attorneys' fees caps, statutes of limitation on claims, and joint and several liability. One of the notable features of the Maryland law is the cap on noneconomic damages at $620,000 this year, with a built-in adjuster for inflation of $15,000 annually. I believe this cap allows for working-class victims of medical malpractice to reap reasonable damages. Creating an inflation adjuster allows for the removal of politics from tort laws which would otherwise call for frequent political intervention to update damage caps or risk the erosion of their value to compensated victims.

Mr. Speaker, I opposed similar caps on damages during the Patients Bill of Rights debate on the floor of the House in 2001 because I have come to the conclusion that states can regulate tort reform best—if they only choose to do so. I understand that many states have experienced problems with increasing costs of medical liability insurance for physicians. I respectfully believe, however, that the proper area for that debate is not in Washington, DC but in state capitals where tort systems clearly need to be addressed and regulated as they have been in the past.

Accordingly, I oppose H.R. 4600.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4600, the Health Act.

Skyrocketing insurance premiums are debilitating our nation's health care delivery system.

In April I visited hospitals in the 8th District of North Carolina to talk about workforce issues such as the nursing shortage. At every stop, the number one concern of these talented health professionals was resoundingly the dramatically escalating cost of liability insurance.

Last year, NorthEast Medical in Concord, North Carolina paid approximately $600,000 for professional liability/general liability insurance for the hospital. This year they will pay approximately $1.7–1.9 million for the same coverage. They have one of the best loss rates in North Carolina. Other hospitals that aren't so fortunate are paying even more.

Scoltland Memorial, a rural hospital with only 124 acute beds, 50 bed nursing home, and minimal claims history, has seen an increase of over $545,000 this year with most of their insurance quotes over $1 million. Many of the potential insurers left in the industry are not willing to cover nursing homes or only at an even greater premium.

First Health Richmond, another rural hospital, paid $836,810 in 2001 for liability premiums. But this past year, they paid over $2 million! This hospital submitted 14 requests for bids, and only one company was even able to offer a quote. Lack of competitive insurers means even higher costs for our hospitals.

However, the problem is not isolated to hospitals.

Many obstetricians/gynecologists have stopped delivering babies. Physicians are retiring or moving because they no longer can afford to serve their communities or are simply unable to even purchase insurance. Annual increases in malpractice insurance for doctors of 30–70 percent are common today.

Just this month, three sub-specialist groups have informed Union Regional Medical Center in Union County, North Carolina that they will have to discontinue serving the hospital's patients because of huge increases in liability coverage, or threats from their carrier of such.

Smaller community hospitals, like most of those in my district need these sub-specialists from our larger cities such as Charlotte and Fayetteville. Their availability adds to the quality of health services available in our communities.

In 1994, the average medical malpractice jury award was $1.14 million. In 2000, just 6 short years, the average award rose to $3.4 million.

We must reign in run-away jury verdicts and the greed of trial lawyers who search for deep pockets. Taxpayers and seniors are the leading victims of a systemic trial lawyer-driven litigation explosion that siphons federal dollars out of the nation's healthcare system, threatens seniors' access to quality health care, and costs taxpayers billions of dollars. The system is broken, and we need to fix it.

Without federal legislation, the exodus of providers from the practice of medicine will continue, and patients will find it increasingly difficult to obtain needed health care.

This crisis is a threat for all Americans. We must safeguard patients' access to care through common sense reforms. Vote "yes" on H.R. 4600.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to H.R. 4600, legislation that would undermine the right of patients and their families to seek appropriate compensation and penalties when they, or a loved one, are harmed or even killed by an incompetent health care provider.

At best, this bill is a wrong-headed approach to the problem of rising malpractice health insurance costs. At worst, it is a bill designed to protect bad doctors and other health care providers from being held accountable for their actions. Under any scenario, the bill is harmful to consumers and should be defeated.

The Republican Leadership has once again brought us a bill that favors their special interests at the expense of quality health care. Doctors, hospitals, HMOs, health insurance companies, nursing homes, and other health care providers would all love to see their liability risk reduced. This bill meets that need. Unfortunately, it does so solely on the backs of America's patients.

Supporters of this bill would have you believe that medical malpractice lawsuits are driving health care costs through the roof. In fact, for every $100 spent on medical care in 2000, only 56 cents could be attributed to medical malpractice costs—that's one half of one percent. So, supporters are spreading false hope that reducing the cost of medical malpractice would reduce the cost of health care in our country by any measurable amount. It won't.

What supporters of this bill do not want you to understand is how bad this bill would be for consumers. The provisions of this bill would prohibit juries and courts from providing awards they believe are appropriate relative to the harm done.

H.R. 4600 caps non-economic damages. By setting an arbitrary cap on this portion of an award, the table is tilted against seniors, women, children, and people with disabilities. Medical malpractice awards break down into several categories. Economic damages are awarded based on how one's future income is impacted by the harm caused by medical malpractice. There are no caps on this part of the award. But by capping non-economic damages, this bill would result in someone, without tremendous earning potential—a housewife or a senior for example—finding their award much lower than that of a young, successful businessman for identical injuries. Is that fair? I don't think so.

The limits on punitive damages are severe. Punitive damages are seldom awarded in malpractice cases, but their threat is an important deterrent. And, in cases of reckless conduct that cause severe harm, it is irresponsible to forbid such awards.

The bill prohibits the requirement of a lump sum payment to an injured party which allows the defendants to continue to reap interest benefits while holding the award. And, this prohibition on lump sum awards could mean that injured victims who can no longer work do not have the funds available to meet their needs. Why should the decision of how to award the penalty be taken from the court which is in the best position to make that determination since they know the details of the particular case?

Republicans claim to be advocates for states rights. Yet, this bill directly overrides the abilities of states to create and enforce medical malpractice laws that meet the needs of their residents.

The issue of rising malpractice insurance costs is a very legitimate concern for America's health care providers. I would happily work with colleagues to develop legislation to help change that. For example, we could look at better ways of spreading the risk of medical malpractice insurance across a wider spectrum of doctors. Another option that has been discussed is to experience rate malpractice insurance so that providers' premiums better reflect their own professional experience. These are just a few examples of steps that could be taken. But, the important difference between those proposals and the one before us today is that those changes don't harm patients.

Medical malpractice costs are an easy target. My Republican colleagues like to simplify it as a fight between America's doctors and our nation's trial lawyers. That is a false portrayal. Our medical malpractice system is a vital consumer protection. The bill before us drastically weakens the effectiveness of our nation's medical malpractice laws. I urge my colleagues to join me in voting against this wrong-headed and harmful approach to reducing the cost of malpractice premiums. It's the wrong solution for America's patients and their families.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a national insurance crisis is ravaging the nation's essential health care system Medical professional liability insurance rates have skyrocketed, causing major insurers to drop coverage or raise premiums to unaffordable levels.

Doctors and other health care providers have been forced to abandon patients and practices, particularly in high-risk specialties such as emergency medicine, neurology, and obstetrics and gynecology. Low-income neighborhoods and rural areas are being particularly hard hit.

H.R. 4600 is, modeled after California's quarter-century old and highly successful health care litigation reforms (MICRA). MICRA was signed into law by Governor Jerry Brown, and has proved immensely successful in increasing access to affordable medical care. Overall, according to data of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, the rate of increase in medical professional liability premiums in California since MICRA was enacted in 1976 has been a very modest 167 percent, whereas the rest of the United States have experienced a 505 percent rate of increase.

Economists have concluded that direct medical care litigation reforms—including caps on non-economic damage awards—generally reduce the growth of malpractice claims rates and insurance premiums, and reduce other stresses on doctors that may impair the quality of medical care.

By incorporating MICRA's time-tested reforms at the Federal level, the HEALTH Act will make medical malpractice insurance affordable again, encourage health care practitioners to maintain their practices, and reduce health care costs for patients. MICRA remains the only proven legislative solution to the current crisis, yet many state courts in states other than California have nullified legislative reforms. Congressional action is required.

The current, unregulated medical tort system can force doctors to practice defensive medicine. It also discourages improvements in the delivery of medical care by deterring doctors from freely discussing errors or potential errors due to a fear of litigation. The HEALTH Act will also save billions of dollars a year in taxpayer dollars by significantly reducing the incidence of wasteful defensive medicine in federally-funded programs.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4600 which safeguards patients' access to medical care by implementing common sense reforms.

Skyrocketing liability insurance has forced some physicians, hospitals, and other health care providers to cut back or end practicing medicine. Our best and brightest doctors are curtailing their medical practice or leaving the profession altogether because of the ballooning cost of medical malpractice insurance caused by an onslaught of frivolous, yet damaging, lawsuits.

At the most basic level, this is an access to care issue. As the former ranking member of the D.C. Appropriations Subcommittee, I saw first-hand the lack of access to decent health care for the disadvantaged and under-served population.

The District of Columbia is the only state or territory that has not made any changes to its civil liability system resulting in D.C. ranking number one in the country in terms of the average size of payments that juries award in malpractice suits.

One of the nation's premier pediatric hospitals located in the District of Columbia, Children's Hospital, over the last two years has had the total cost for malpractice insurance increase by 200 percent for less coverage. That is an additional $3 million a year going to insurance costs instead of going to treat sick patients. Howard University Hospital has been its malpractice insurance increase by 300 percent this year alone.

In Anacostia, OB–GYNs are terminating their practice because of the astronomical cost of medical malpractice insurance. Women are being denied access to critical prenatal care, gynecological services, and preventative treatment.

Congress must pass this common-sense legislation and put a stop to the costs of the runaway litigation system paid by all Americans, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this legislation.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, we have a crisis on our hands. Last year, there were more than $1.2 billion in medical malpractice suit payouts. That's a thousand dollars for every man, woman, and child in the Keystone State. That's a huge drain on our economy. Worse than that, it's hurting patients.

In my Congressional district, one hospital recently closed its trauma center and another canceled plans to build a center city clinic to serve the poor. A third hospital is about to close its maternity ward and fourth hospital nearby is on the verge of cutting back on emergency room services.

Insurance companies literally can't charge enough for their policies to stay in business, so they're leaving the Commonwealth. And that means doctors and hospitals can't get insurance. Doctors are leaving the profession or leaving the state.

One doctor in my district says there were thirty companies offering malpractice policies when he started his practice 30 years ago. Now there is only one, and he's not sure they'll give him a policy.

This is a crisis, Mr. Speaker. And Pennsylvania is not the only state in the Union that's in trouble.

It's time for Congress to act. And we need to act now.

I urge my colleagues to pass this bill.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues here today, I am concerned about the rising cost of malpractice insurance. It is a very real problem for doctors and patients and something we should address. But, I have serious reservations about this bill, H.R. 4600. And the closed rule under which it is being considered is an outrage—confirming that this bill is a political ploy that will not help doctors and patients.

High insurance rates have left doctors with few options. Those who can afford it will pay the increased costs, but those who cannot will either be forced to assume significant personal liability, leave high risk specialities, or leave the profession altogether. But, this legislation doesn't guarantee any reduction or abatement in increases that doctors are facing for their malpractice premiums. Instead, it focuses on drastic reforms of the judicial system that extend beyond malpractice, hurt injured consumers' access to redress, and provide a windfall to insurance companies.

What has caused the increase in malpractice premiums is not easily identified. Many factors completely unrelated to jury verdicts and the civil justice system affect insurance rates: pricing of malpractice insurance; practices of accounting for income and expenses while planning for downturns; investment choices. Yet, this legislation addresses none of these issues. In fact, neither of the two Committees of jurisdiction ever explored these issues and their relation to malpractice premiums. Instead, we are voting today on a bill that won't do anything to lower doctors' premiums but will disproportionately hurt women, low-income families, and seniors.

The legislation severely restricts non-economic damage awards. Yet, evidence shows no relation between caps and lower malpractice premiums. Four out of the top five most expensive states for medical malpractice premiums cap damages in medical malpractice cases. Michigan doctors pay far above the national average for medical malpractice insurance, in spite of Michigan's $280,000 cap on non-economic damages. Such limits sever only to enrich insurance companies at the expense of the most vulnerable, women, children, the elderly and low income families.

The legislation also sets a nearly impossible standard for awarding punitive damages and then limits such damages based on the level of economic loss, again unfairly penalizing those with lower earnings. An egregious act that severely injures or disfigures Ken Lay, former CEO of Enron, could be punished more severely than if that same act had hurt a child, a stay-at-home mother, or an elderly woman in a nursing home.

The legislation also goes well beyond the realm of medical malpractice and provides immunity from punitive damages to manufacturers of drugs and devices that are approved or cleared by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) as well as those that are not FDA approved but are "generally recognized as safe and effective." This is like arguing that because someone drives at the speed limit, they can not be negligent or reckless. It is clearly possible to obey the speed limit, yet still act in a negligent or reckless manner. The bill that was brought to the floor purports to address this criticism, but the change is mostly cosmetic. The FDA statue and regulations, like FDA approval, should not be a shield for liability from injury caused by egregious acts.

The legislation also sets a stringent federal statute of limitations on state tort cases. In no event shall the time for commencement of a lawsuit exceed three years. Here again, last minute changes were made to the bill that are cosmetic rather than meaningful. The time should toll from discovery, not manifestation. Such a definition only invites more, not less, litigation. This issue is a well settled one with plenty of examples in case law and statute, and would be quite easy to fix correctly. The majority chose otherwise, leaving many injured patients whose claims would fall subject to this bill shut off from recourse.

One more item I should mention is the sense of the Congress on holding insurance companies liable for damages when their medical decisions cause harm. This provision is all bark and no bite. Democrats and a handful of moderate Republicans have tried for more than five years to enact a Patients' Bill of Rights that would allow injured patients to hold HMOs accountable under state law. Time and time again, however, such legislation has been blocked by Republicans who ultimately wish to shield insurance companies from liability. This last minutes cosmetic change cannot hide that fact.

In sum, instead of help for doctors with their malpractice premiums and fair compensation for injured patients, this bill puts more money in the pockets of insurance companies, and combines broad liability protections for industry with restrictions on patients who are harmed. The rising cost of malpractice insurance is a real problem requiring careful, balanced, and targeted legislation. Sadly, efforts to address this problem have become the vehicle for all manner of anti-patient provisions. I urge my colleagues to reject H.R. 4600.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4600.

Like my colleagues, I am concerned about medical malpractice premiums and their effect on the availability of physicians, especially obstetricians and specialty physicians to practice in certain states. I am not at this time convinced, however, that H.R. 4600 is the complete answer to the medical malpractice insurance premium problem. The concentration of excessively high premiums in certain states shows that this is a regional, not national problems.

I believe that Congress should address the medical malpractice insurance system as a whole. The pricing and accounting practices of medical malpractice insurers may have contributed to this problem. There are indications that imprecise accounting practices have inflated the bottom line of companies and price wars in the early 1990s led insurers to sell malpractice coverage at rates that were inadequate to cover anticipated claims. Recent stock market declines have further exacerbated the financial difficulties of these companies, which have raised premiums or gone out of business in response.

I believe that a solution to the problem of rapidly rising medical malpractice insurance premiums must address all of the factors that contribute to premium cost. Earlier this year, I sent a letter with several of my colleagues asking that the General Accounting Office conduct a study on the effect of market conditions and insurance company practices on medical malpractice insurance premiums. I am introducing into the RECORD a copy of that letter as well as a July 3, 2002, article from the Wall Street Journal.

I expect to have preliminary results from the GAO in December. Once we know the full scope of the problem, I hope that we can work together to find a comprehensive solution to this problem.

WASHINGTON, DC,
July 2, 2002.

Hon. DAVID M. WALKER,
Comptroller General of the United States, General Accounting Office, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. WALKER: We are writing to request your assistance in evaluating the extent to which current market conditions and insurance company practices are contributing to an increase in medical malpractice premiums.

It has been reported that insurance companies have been raising the medical malpractice premiums which doctors must pay in certain regions of the country. Congress has begun to investigate this issue, and many in Congress have already proposed legislation. However, thus far the focus of debate in Washington has been limited. As Congress attempts to balance the rights of patients with the interests of doctors and insurers, we believe that a thorough analysis of insurance industry practices is necessary. Medical malpractice is an important issue that must be examined thoroughly and deliberately from all perspectives.

In this regard, we ask that you examine the financial statements and information submitted to regulators by insurance companies that offer medical malpractice insurance, as well as any other information maintained by regulators that may be relevant to this issue. In particular, we would like to know how reductions in the investment income of insurers may be adversely affecting the financial outlook of these companies, thus increasing physician premiums to compensate for any declines. To the extent feasible, you should also analyze the underwriting history of medical malpractice insurance to determine whether premiums have historically experienced similar increases and also determine whether current market conditions are in some way unique.

We would also like you to examine the competitiveness of markets, particularly in those areas experiencing the sharpest premium increase. For example, has the lack of competition in the medical malpractice insurance market adversely affected physician premiums? In addition, we are interested in having a better understanding of how malpractice settlements and judgements compare to premiums earned for medical malpractice lines of insurance. In particular, we would like to know how incurred but not yet reported holdings have affected the reserve practices of medical malpractice insurers.

As your examination proceeds, please provide us with a status report no later than September 3, 2002. We thank you for your assistance and look forward to your ultimate findings on this important issue for patients and doctors.

Sincerely,

John Conyers, Jr., John J. LaFalce, Joseph M. Hoeffel, Nick J. Rahall II, Alan B. Mollohan, John D. Dingell, Max Sandlin, Ronnie Shows, Dennis Moore, Marion Berry.

INSURERS' PRICE WARS CONTRIBUTED TO DOCTORS FACING SOARING COSTS

(By Rachel Zimmerman and Christopher Oster)

As medical-malpractice premiums skyrocket in about a dozen states across the country, obstetricians and doctors in other risky specialties, such as neurosurgery, are moving, quitting or retiring. Insurers and many doctors blame the problem on rising jury awards in liability lawsuits.

"The real sickness is people sue at the drop of a hat, judgments are going up and up and up, and the people getting rich out of this are the plaintiffs' attorneys," says David Golden of the National Association of Independent Insurers, a trade group. The American Medical Association says Florida, Nevada, New York, Pennsylvania and eight other states face a "crisis" because "the legal system produces multimillion-dollar jury awards on a regular basis."

But while malpractice litigation has a big effect on premiums, insurers' pricing and accounting practices have played an equally important role. Following a cycle that recurs in many parts of the business, a price war that began in the early 1990s led insurers to sell malpractice coverage to obstetrician-gynecologists at rates that proved inadequate to cover claims.

PRICE SLASHING

Some of these carriers had rushed into malpractice coverage because an accounting practice widely used in the industry made the area seem more profitable in the early 1990s than it really was. A decade of shortsighted price slashing led to industry losses of nearly $3 billion last year.

"I don't like to hear insurance-company executives say it's the tort [injury-law] system—it's self-inflicted," says Donald J. Zuk, chief executive of Sepie Holdings Inc., a leading malpractice insurer in California.

What's more, the litigation statistics most insurers trumpet are incomplete. The statistics come from Jury Verdict Research, a Horsham, Pa., information service, which reports that since 1994, jury awards for medical-malpractice cases have jumped 175%, to a median of $1 million in 2000. During that seven-year period, the median award for negligence in childbirth was $2,050,000—the highest for all types of medical-malpractice cases, Jury Verdict Research says. (In any group of figures, half fall above the median, and half fall below.)

GAPS IN DATABASE

But Jury Verdict Research says its 2,951-case malpractice database has large gaps. It collects award information unsystematically, and it can't say how many cases it misses. It says it can't calculate the percentage change in the median for childbirth-negligence cases. More important, the database excludes trial victories by doctors and hospitals—verdicts that are worth zero dollars. That's a lot to ignore. Doctors and hospitals win about 62% of the time, Jury Verdict Research says. A separate database on settlements is less comprehensive.

A spokesman for Jury Verdict Research, Gary Bagin, confirms these and other holes in its statistics. He says the numbers nevertheless accurately reflect trends. The company, which sells its data to all comers, has reported jury information this way since 1961. "If we changed now, people looking back historically couldn't compare apples to apples," Mr. Bagin says.

Some doctors are beginning to acknowledge that the conventional focus on jury awards deflects attention from the insurance industry's behavior. The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists for the first time is conceding that carriers' business practices have contributed to the current problem, says Alice Kirkman, a spokeswoman for the professional group. "We are admitting it's a much more complex problem than we have previously talked about," she says.

SCRAMBLING FOR DOCTORS

The upshot is beyond dispute: Pregnant women across the country are scrambling for medical attention. Kimberly Maugaoteg of Las Vegas is 13 weeks pregnant and hasn't seen an obstetrician. When she learned she was expecting, the 33-year old mother of two called the doctor who delivered her second child but was told he wasn't taking any new pregnant patients. Dr. Shelby Wilbourn plans to leave Nevada because of soaring medical-malpractice insurance rates there. Ms. Maugaotega says she called 28 obstetricians but couldn't find one who would take her.

Frustrated, she called the office of Nevada Gov. Kenny Guinn. A staff member gave her yet another name. She made an appointment to see that doctor today but says she is skeptical about the quality of care she will receive.

In the Las Vegas area, doctors say some 90 obstetricians have stopped accepting new patients since St. Paul Cos., formerly the country's leading provider of malpractice coverage, quit the business in December. St. Paul had insured more than half of Nevada's 240 obstetricians. Carriers still offering coverage in the state have raised rates by 100% to 400% physicians say.

Dr. Wilbourn says his annual malpractice premium was due to jump to $108,000 next month, from $33,000. The 41-year-old solo practitioner says the increase would come straight out of his take-home pay of between $150,000 and $200,000 a year. In response, he is moving to Maine this summer.

Dr. Wilbourn mourns having "to pick up and leave the patients I cared for and the practice I built up over 12 year." But in Maine, he has found a $200,000-a-year position with an insurance premium of only $9,800 for the first year, although the rate rises significantly after that. Premiums in Maine are relatively low because a dominant doctor-owned insurance cooperative there hasn't pushed to maximize rates, the heavily rural population isn't notably litigious and its court system employs an expert panel to screen out some suits, says Insurance Commissioner Allessandro Iuppa.

Until the 1970s, few doctors faced big-dollar suits. Malpractice coverage was a small specialty. As courts expanded liability rules, malpractice suits became more common. Dozens of doctor-owned insurance cooperatives, or "bedpan mutuals," formed in response. Most stuck to their home states.

St. Paul, a mid-sized national carrier named for its base in Minnesota, saw an opportunity. An insurer of Main Street businesses, St. Paul became the leader in the malpractice field. By 1985, it had a 20% share of the national market. Overall, the company had revenue of $8.9 billion last year, with about 10% of its premium dollars coming from malpractice coverage.

The frequency and size of doctors' malpractice claims rose steadily in the early 1980s, industry officials say. St. Paul and its competitors raised rates sharply during the 1980s.

Expecting malpractice awards to continue rising rapidly, St. Paul increased its reserves. But the company miscalculated, says Kevin Rehnberg, a senior vice president. Claim frequency and size leveled off in the late 1980s, as more than 30 states enacted curbs on malpractice awards, Mr. Rehnberg says. The combination of this so-called tort reform and the industry's rate increases turned malpractice insurance into a very lucrative specialty.

A standard industry accounting device used by St. Paul and, on a smaller scale, by its rivals, made the field look even more attractive. Realizing that it had set aside too much money for malpractice claims, St. Paul "released" $1.1 billion in reserves between 1992 and 1997. The money flowed through its income statement and boosted its bottom line.

St. Paul stated clearly in its annual reports that excess reserves had enlarged its net income. But that part of the message didn't get through to some insurers—especially bedpan mutuals—dazzled by St. Paul's bottom line, according to industry officials.

In the 1990s, some bedpan mutuals began competing for business beyond their original territories. New Jersey's Medical Inter-Insurance Exchange, California's Southern California Physicians Insurance Exchange (now known as Scpie Holdings), and Pennsylvania Hospital Insurance Co., or Phico, fanned out across the country. Some publicly traded insurers also jumped into the business.

With St. Paul seeming to offer a model for big, quick profits, "no one wanted to sit still in their own backyard," says Scpie's Mr. Zuk. "The boards of directors said, 'We've got to grow.'" Scpie expanded into Connecticut, Florida and Texas, among other states, starting in 1997.

As they entered new areas, smaller carriers often tried to attract customers by undercutting St. Paul. The price slashing became contagious, and premiums fell in many states. The mutuals "went in and aggravated the situation by saying, 'Look at all the money St. Paul is making,'" says Tom Gose, President of MAG Mutual Insurance Co., which operates mainly in Georgia. "They came in late to the dance and undercut everyone."

The newer competitors soon discovered, however, that "the so-called profitability of the '90s was the result of those years in the mid-80s when the actuaries were predicting the terrible trends," says Donald J. Fager, president of Medical Liability Mutual Insurance Co., a bedpan mutual started in 1975 in New York. Except for two mergers in the past two years, his company mostly has held to its original single-state focus.

The competition intensified, even though some insurers "knew rates were inadequate from 1995 to 2000" to cover malpractice claims, says Bob Sanders, an actuary with Milliman USA, a Seattle consultancy serving insurance companies.

ALLEGED FRAUD

In at least one case, aggressive pricing allegedly crossed the line into fraud. Pennsylvania regulators last year filed a civil suit in state court in Harrisburg against certain executives and board members of Phico. The state alleges the defendants misled the company's board on the adequacy of Phico's premium rates and funds set aside to pay claims. On the way to becoming the nation's seventh-largest malpractice insurer, the company had suffered mounting losses on policies for medical offices and nursing homes as far away as Miami.

Pennsylvania regulators took over Phico last August. The company filed for bankruptcy-court protection from is creditors in December. A trial date hasn't been set for the state fraud suit. Phico executives and directors have denied wrongdoing.

In the late 1990s, the size of payouts for malpractice awards increased, carriers say. By 2000, many companies were losing money on malpractice coverage. Industrywide, carriers paid out $1.36 in claims and expenses for every premium dollar they collected, says Mr. Golden, the trade-group official.

The losses were exacerbated by carriers' declining investment returns. Some insurers had come to expect that big gains in the 1990s from their bond and stock portfolios would continue, industry officials say. When the bull market stalled in 2000, investment gains that had patched over inadequate premium rates disappeared.

Some bedpan mutuals went home. Scpie stopped writing coverage in any state other than California. "We lost money, and we retreated," says the company's Mr. Zuk.

New Jersey's Medical Inter-Insurance Exchange, now known as MIIX, had expanded into 24 states by the time it had a loss of $164 million in the fourth quarter of 2001. The company says it is now refusing to renew policies for 7,000 physicians outside of New Jersey. It plans to reformulate as a new company operating only in that state.

St. Paul's malpractice business sank into the red. Last December, newly hired Chief Executive Jay Fishman, a former Citigroup Inc. executive, announced the company would drop the coverage line. St. Paul reported a $980 million loss on the business for 2001.

As carriers retrench, competition has slumped and prices in some states have shot up. Lauren Kline, 6½ months pregnant, changed obstetricians when her long-time Philadelphia doctor moved out of state because of rate increases. Now, her new doctor, Robert Friedman, may have to give up delivering babies at his suburban Philadelphia practice. His insurance expires at the end of the month, and he says he is having difficulty finding a carrier that will sell him a policy at any price.

Last year, Dr. Friedman says he paid $50,000 for coverage. If he gets a policy for next year, it will cost $90,000, he predicts, based on his broker's estimate. "I can't pass a single bit of that off to my patients," because managed-care companies don't allow it, he says.

Dr. Friedman says he is considering dropping the obstetrics part of his practice. Generally, delivering babies is seen as posing greater risks than most gynecological treatment. As a result insurers offer less-expensive policies to doctors who don't do deliveries.

Mr. Golden of the insurers' association argues that whatever role industry practices may play, the current turmoil stems from lawsuits. The association says that from 1995 through 2000, total industry payouts to cover losses and legal expenses jumped 52%, to $6.9 billion. "That says there are more really huge verdicts," Mr. Golden says. Even in the majority of cases in which doctors and hospitals win—the zero-dollar verdicts—there are still legal expenses that insurers have to pick up, he adds.

Industry critics point to different sets of statistics. Bob Hunter, director for insurance at Consumer Federation of America, an advocacy group in Washington, prefers numbers generated by A.M. Best Co. The insurance-rating agency estimates that once all malpractice claims from 1991 through 2000 are resolved—which will take until about 2010—the average payout per claim will have risen 47%, to $42,473. That projection includes legal expenses and suits in which doctors or hospital prevail.

While the statistical debate rages, pregnant women adjust to new limits and inconveniences. Kelly Biesecker, 35, spent many extra hours on the highway this spring, driving from her home in Villanova, Pa., to Delran, N.J., so she could continue to use her obstetrician. Dr. Richard Krauss says he moved the obstetrics part of his practice from Philadelphia because malpractice rates had skyrocketed in Pennsylvania. Ms.

Biesecker, who gave birth to a healthy boy on June 5, says Dr. Krauss was the doctor she trusted to guard her health and the health of her baby: "You stick with that guy no matter what the distance."

Dr. Krauss, 53, left Philadelphia last year only after his malpractice premium rose to $54,000, from $38,000, and then was canceled by a carrier getting out of the business, he says. After getting quotes of about $80,000 on a new policy, he moved. New Jersey hasn't been a panacea, however. His policy there expires July 1, and the carrier refuses to renew it. The doctor says he hopes to go to work for a hospital that will pay for his coverage.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I've heard many arguments against H.R. 4600, but there is one that I've not heard mentioned yet today. I suspect that the drafters did not intend the bill to have this effect, but as drafted the HEALTH Act endangers the effectiveness of the most successful anti-fraud tool that the government has at its disposal—the False Claims Act.

In 1986, Congress passed and President Reagan signed legislation strengthening the False Claims Act, a law originally signed by President Lincoln in 1863. The amendments passed in 1986 have made it possible for the government to recover close to $9 billion that would otherwise have been lost to health care fraud and abuse.

The definitions of "health care lawsuit" and "health care liability action" in this bill are very broad. Broad enough to encompass fraud cases brought under the False Claims Act. If a False Claims Act case was determined to fall under the HEALTH Act, it would be devastating to the effectiveness of this anti-fraud tool. Under False Claims the government can recover up to treble damages. In a decision 2 years ago, the Supreme Court determined that these recoveries constitute punitive damages. The Health Act would cap punitive damages at $250,000 or twice the amount of economic damages, whichever is greater.

Let's use as an example the 1996 case against Laboratory Corporation of America, a fraud case based upon false claims for medically unnecessary "add-on" tests submitted to Medicare, Medicaid, and CHAMPUS. The government recovery in this case was $182 million. These are not small cases. The treble damages serve as a deterrent—a very effective deterrent. By some estimates the deterrent effect of the False Claims Act amendments was between 150 and 300 billion dollars during their first ten years of existence. By blocking punitive damages in these cases, the bill could make the False Claims Act useless to the government as a tool against fraud.

In a report released last year, Taxpayers Against Fraud estimated that using the False Claims Act, the government was recovering $8 for each tax dollar spent fighting health care fraud. There are very few government efforts that can claim this level of efficacy.

I encourage my colleagues to reject this bill and permit the government to continue to protect itself from health care fraud.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4600, which makes health care delivery more accessible and cost-effective in Virginia and throughout America by curbing medical malpractice abuse.

In recent years, Americans have witnessed a dramatic rise in the costs of malpractice insurance for doctors and hospitals. This cost is ultimately passed along to patients. Skyrocketing insurance premiums are debilitating America's health care system. Liability insurers are either leaving the market or raising rates to astronomically high levels. This has led physicians, hospitals and other health care providers to severely limit their practices or to leave the practice of medicine all together. Women, low-income neighborhoods and rural areas are among the hardest hit.

Fearing bankruptcy or the possibility of endless litigation, some doctors have turned to "defensive medicine"—which consists of wasteful prescription of medically unnecessary medicine and the performance of unnecessary tests with the intent of limiting liability exposures. These "defensive medicine" practices ultimately cost taxpayers billions of dollars. In addition, fearing litigation, some doctors may hesitate to discuss a potential misdiagnosis or medical error, thereby compounding the harm done to patients. A recent survey released by the Department of Health and Human Services revealed that over 76 percent of physicians are concerned that malpractice litigation has hurt their ability to provide quality care to patients.

This bill safeguards patient's access to care by limiting the number of years a plaintiff has to file a healthcare liability action. This ensures that claims are brought while evidence and witnesses are available. The legislation allocates damages fairly in proportion to a party's degree of fault, allows patients to recover economic damages such as future medical expenses and loss of future earnings, while establishing a cap of $250,000 on non-economic damages, such as pain and suffering. The bill also places reasonable limits on punitive damages.

American health care is still the envy of the world, but unless we act now to curb rapidly rising health care costs, we threaten the future availability of high quality affordable health care. One way to cut costs and improve quality is by curbing excessive lawsuits. This bill is a big step in the right direction to improving patient safety and doctor accessibility.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the cost of malpractice insurance has steadily risen, which has caused many insurers to drop coverage or raise premiums. Doctors and others have been forced to abandon patients, particularly in high-risk specialties such as emergency medicine and obstetrics and gynecology.

H.R. 4600, the HEALTH Act, will cap non-economic damages at $250,000, and limit the contingency fees lawyers can charge. This will reduce the number of medical malpractice claims and make medical malpractice insurance affordable again. Patients will receive better and less expensive health care.

By improving the medical malpractice system, the HEALTH Act will enhance the quality of care for all patients.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the HEALTH Act of 2002 (H.R. 4600), which will improve health care quality and help ensure the availability of health care services and coverage.

The failure of the medical liability system is compromising patient access to care. Liability insurers are leaving the market or raising rates to astronomical levels. In turn, more physicians and other health care providers are severely limiting their practices or are simply unable to afford to practice medicine. Physicians in Texas as well as Florida, Mississippi, Nevada, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Washington, West Virginia and other states are already in crisis.

Skyrocketing medical malpractice insurance premiums are debilitating the nation's health care delivery system in communities across the country. Physicians in Texas have experienced a 51 percent increase in malpractice claims between 1990 and 2000, and according to the Texas Medical Association, increases in physician malpractice insurance rates in 2002 ranged from 30 percent to 200 percent.

Increasing numbers of physicians, hospitals, and other providers are curtailing their services, relocating to other states, or simply ceasing to offer medical services altogether. For example, obstetricians/gynecologists and surgeons in these states routinely pay more than $100,000 a year for $1,000,000 coverage. Some are paying more than $200,000. A physician facing these premiums is more likely to practice defensive medicine, order extra tests and use only procedures that limit risk. For some, it goes to the heart of their practice. For instance, many OB/GYN physicians have stopped delivering babies. The problem also has spread to emergency rooms where the crisis takes on life-or-death proportions.

Especially in rural areas, health care services are likely to be unevenly distributed. Many rural residents do not even have access to a local doctor, primary care provider, or hospital. Increases in medical malpractice insurance have resulted in a further loss of patient access to health care. Without access to local health care professionals, rural residents are frequently forced to leave their communities to receive necessary treatments. Not only is this a burden to rural residents, who are often older or lack reliable transportation, but it drains vital health care dollars from the local economy—further straining the financial well-being of rural communities.

Without federal legislation, the exodus of physicians from the practice of medicine will continue, especially in high-risk specialities, and patients will find it increasingly difficult to obtain health care.

It is for these reasons that I joined my fellow colleagues as an original cosponsor of the HEALTH Act, which safeguards patients' access to care, promotes speedy resolution of claims, fairly allocates responsibility, compensates patient injury, maximizes patient recovery, and puts reasonable limits, not caps, on punitive damages. This bill alone will not resolve our health care costs or access challenges but it is one part of the solution.

I urge my colleagues, especially those who represent rural America, to support H.R. 4600, stabilizing the nation's shaky medical liability system.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4600, the Help Efficient, Accessible, Low-cost, and Timely Healthcare Act, and ask my colleagues to support this common sense measure.

This legislation, modeled after California's 25 year old reforms, contains a tested package of reforms that will help lower medical liability premiums across the country is important for both physicians and patients.

In my great state of Pennsylvania, five commercial carriers that insured more than half of the hospitals and health systems have left the market or are not renewing policies for this year. Pennsylvania hospitals and physicians continue to face skyrocketing premiums. The cost of primary coverage has increased as much as 450% for some hospitals, and on average by 70 percent for all hospitals.

Further, the medical liability crisis is hindering the ability of our academic medical schools to recruit and retain students. According to the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, one in ten obstetricians have already stopped delivering babies due to skyrocketing premiums. A shortage in radiologists willing to read mammograms has increased the wait time for screening mammograms at most major hospitals from two to three months. The current system is forcing our doctors to quit, encouraging them to seek other employment and jeopardizing the health care of our women.

In rural Pennsylvania this issue hits home. Many doctors are relocating to big cities where they can be part of a larger practice, specifically because they can't afford the insurance premiums on their own. In rural areas we have to travel farther and farther for quality health care—this dramatically affects our quality of life. Who wants to move to an area where they can't get health care?

It becomes more worrisome when it is an emergency. it is common knowledge that the sooner you get to the doctor the better chance you have in surviving a serious medical emergency. In rural areas, emergency medical personnel have to travel to the patient, diagnose the problem and then transport them to the nearest facility that can treat them. The further they have to travel the less likely they will survive.

Mr. Speaker, by passing H.R. 4600, we will take significant steps toward stabilizing the medical liability system by both safeguarding patients' access to care while helping to address skyrocketing health care costs. Congress needs to work for the betterment of the whole nation and pass this common-sense well tested package of reforms.

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4600. This bill's proponents say the legislation helps curb the costs of healthcare and helps doctors stay in business by reducing their insurance rates. However, they are wrong. I would like to illustrate why they are wrong and why I will oppose this legislation.

First, the $250,000 cap on non-economic damages will impede the right of patients and victims of gross negligence. Under this legislation, victims would not be allowed to sue for pain and suffering. That is wrong. Consider the cases of the patient who has the wrong leg amputated or who finds surgeon's initials carved into her skin or the recent example in Massachusetts where a surgeon left in the middle of surgery to go cash a check at the bank. Who would dare look these victims in the eye and say they should not be allowed to sue for anything beyond what this cap allows. Under current law, the onus is on the victims to prove they are deserving of a particular award. If they succeed in making their case, then they deserve to be awarded the appropriate amount by a jury of their peers in accordance with the law. This legislation leaves victims isolated without assistance and without the tools to protect themselves and their families.

Second, the bill takes power away from jurors and judges. Our constitution provides for trial by jury to ensure fair trials for all. Now the Republican majority believes that the Constitution is wrong and people are not trustworthy; that power should be in the hands of the insurance companies not the American public. This bill is a one-size-fits-all approach to ruling on legislation. It says that even if jurors, who have conscientiously listened to every fact presented by both sides, want to award a plaintiff an amount beyond the cap, they are unable to do so. This bill says that judges, who are trained to listen to the specifics of a case and to understand the specifics of the law, cannot award damages as they see fit. This bill ties the hands of those who are expected to know the most about the law and about individual cases.

Third, the bill, which was drafted under the auspices of trying to lower malpractice insurance costs, offers no guarantees that medical malpractice costs will fall. Proponents claim the bill's intent is to reduce malpractice insurance rates, yet malpractice insurers can easily choose to price gauge. A June 24, 2002 Wall Street Journal article discusses the direct impact of insurers' "pricing and accounting practices" on increased malpractice rates. If we want to limit the burden on doctors, we need to limit their insurance rates, not limit victims' rights.

Finally, this bill places caps on suits due to negligent doctors who shouldn't be practicing, dangerous HMOs that should be shut down, and faulty pharmaceuticals and faulty devices that should be off the market. Unfortunately there are bad pharmaceuticals and bad devices in this country. Consider the Dalcon Shield, the inter-uterine device that used to be on the market. This device caused many women to develop serious uterine infections or worse, and the company knew it was faulty. Their negligence was punished by crushing lawsuits that caused the corporation to go bankrupt—and they should have gone bankrupt because they were killing women. This bill would allow manufacturers of devices like the Dalcon Shield to pay off small awards by their insurance company to their victims and continue to kill.

Additionally, this bill exempts all HMOs from litigation for denials of care. So many of my Congressional colleagues talk about wanting to protect Americans against HMOs, yet here we are discussing a bill that would do precisely the opposite. This bill is protection for HMOs. This bill saves HMOs from paying victims whatever amount the judicial systems finds is just. Patients need and deserve stronger protections against their HMOs than this bill permits.

This bill simply takes power away from judges, jurors, and victims while guaranteeing no relief for hospitals and physicians. My constituents have been waiting for Congress to pass a serious Patients Bill of Rights, protect patients and their families, and lower medical costs. This bill will accomplish none of these goals.

Therefore, I will be opposing this vote and urge all Members who care about their constituents and about health care costs to oppose this bill as well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 553, the previous question is ordered on the bill, as amended.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. CONYERS

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONYERS moves to recommit the bill H.R. 4600 to the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Energy and Commerce with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

In section 11—

(1) in the first sentence of subsection (a), strike "subsections (b) and (c)" and insert "subsections (b), (c), and (d)"; and

(2) add at the end the following new subsection:

(d) PATIENTS' BILL OF RIGHTS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, if a State has in effect a law that provides for the liability of health maintenance organizations (as defined in section 2791(b)(3) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300gg–91(b)(3))) with respect to patients, or sets forth circumstances under which actions may be brought with respect to such liability, this Act does not preempt or supersede such law or in any way affect such liability, circumstances, or actions.

Mr. CONYERS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS) join me in the motion to recommit, and I offer this motion on behalf of myself and him.

As currently drafted, this bill guts HMO reform laws that States have already passed because it creates broad new caps on damages when HMOs deny coverage to patients, and so what we do is to add a safe harbor provision to specify that these State patient's bills of rights laws are not preempted by this bill. Nothing more.

It goes without saying that these limits are far less friendly to consumers injured by HMOs than the patient protection laws already enacted by the States, and I would love to refer to the former Governor of Texas George W. Bush, who had a similar view in mind. They enacted an HMO law in Texas, and that law, still on the books, has a higher cap on punitive damages than this bill and no caps on noneconomic damages for suits against HMOs.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

There is a serious disagreement about the underlying bill and whether or not it poses the right solution to the malpractice crisis. Aside from that, there should be no dispute over what this bill should and should not do with respect to State laws that many of our States have passed to protect patients against abuses by the managed care industry. This bill should have no effect on those underlying State laws.

If this motion to recommit is not adopted, I believe the best analysis is that this bill would have the effect of repealing or substantially neutralizing and weakening those State law protections. The purpose of the motion to recommit is to make it explicit in the statute that this bill, if enacted into law, would not preempt State patient protections laws.

So, for example, there are States that have laws that say that if a person went to their primary care provider and she suggested that a person needed a series of tests regarding possible malignancy and the managed care company refused to pay for the tests regarding the possible malignancy and they developed a malignancy, developed cancer, got sick as a result of it, under these State patient protection laws there are certain remedies that that patient and her family would now have, the ability to get a review before the decision was made by an external objective body and the ability, if the decision were not reversed, the ability to recover damages resulting from the arbitrary medical malpractice by the managed care company.

This has been a principle embraced by Republicans and Democrats in State legislatures around the country. In fact, as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) mentioned, the President of the United States embraced such a bill when he was chief executive of the State of Texas.

The good work that the Texas legislature has done, and other legislatures have done around the country, would be imperiled and put at risk if this motion to recommit is not adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the underlying bill; but even those who agree with the underlying bill, I believe, did not set out with the intention of repealing State patient protection statutes. I know that the majority has added a sense of Congress provision to the underlying bill that says it is not really our intention.

Frankly, there is a better way for us to express our intention than simply expressing the sense of Congress. It is to write a statute or to write a provision in the statute that says that State patient protection provisions are not repealed as a result of the adoption of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think Members should support the motion to recommit whether they are for the underlying bill, or whether they are joining those of us who oppose the underlying bill. If Members respect and support the right of their State legislature to enact State laws that would protect Members' constituents against abuses by managed care companies and State laws, Members should vote for the motion to recommit. I would urge Republicans and Democrats to vote for the motion to recommit.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I claim the time in opposition to the motion to recommit.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very craftily drafted motion. The effect of its adoption will be to increase health care costs and further restrict availability of health care to people all around the country.

First, it will increase health care costs in that patients of HMOs and the employers that sponsor the HMO-type coverage will not be able to benefit from what the Congressional Budget Office estimates will be a reduction of somewhere between 25-30 percent of professional liability insurance. So there will be higher professional liability insurance premiums paid by the doctors who practice in the HMOs which will be passed on to their patients and which will be passed on to their employers.

This is an incentive for doctors to leave practicing with HMOs. And as we know, HMOs generally save money. Every Member who gets these statements from our insurance company that says "This is not a bill" on it, there are negotiated savings that would not be there if the doctor left the HMO as a result of this motion to recommit passing, and thus qualifying for the lower insurance premiums available, or where the protections of this bill would be available to doctors practicing outside of HMOs.

By increasing the cost of HMOs, more and more employers will decide that it is too expensive for them to continue to provide health insurance coverage. So the protections to patients will go down as fewer and fewer employers can afford the coverage through the HMOs.

But I think also the availability of quality health care will go down whether one is in an HMO or not in an HMO because the market works. If health care becomes more expensive, then there will be less health care that will be available. I do not think anybody who supports this motion to recommit can ever come to the floor of this House of Representatives with a straight face and sincerely complain about increased health care costs because that is exactly what the motion to recommit will accomplish should it pass.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD).

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this motion to recommit is, I fear, a wolf in sheep's clothing. The fact of the matter is while it purports to be a small carveout for the Patient Bill of Rights as they apply to HMOs, the fact of the matter is it would insulate and take away the protections for all of the physicians who work for HMOs, and I believe for the hospitals that contract with HMOs. It is very much a gutting amendment.

The fact of the matter is that we in this House have to decide which side we are on here. We are either on the side of providing adequate care to our patients, to our constituents, making sure that our physicians can stay in practice, stop retiring early, keeping the trauma centers open; or we are on the side of doing nothing, which is about what this bill would do with a motion to recommit with instructions.

The Congressional Budget Office has said that this bill will reduce premiums by 25-30 percent. Despite all of the railings against it, the fact of the matter is when we limit liability, as California has seen and the statistics are crystal clear there, when we limit noneconomic damages, the rates go down. The rates go down because there is competition in the system, and the insurance companies will have to lower their premiums in order to compete with others in the same market.

The fact of the matter is, until we do that, we will remain on this head-long path towards crisis, in which case the traumas centers will close, the obstetrician offices will close, and patients, our constituents, will have third world health care if we do not pass this bill today.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the minimum time for any electronic vote on the question of passage.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 193, nays 225, not voting 14, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2215, 21ST CENTURY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 552, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 2215) to authorize appropriations for the Department of Justice for fiscal year 2002, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GILLMOR). Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

☐ 1530

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GILLMOR). The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT) each will control 30 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the conference report on H.R. 2215 currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I have a lengthy statement which I plan on putting in the RECORD, as it is important to this conference report. I know that the Members wish to make plans so that they can get out of here before the last plane leaves, and I would hope that everybody who seeks time will speed it up so that the Members will be accommodated.

This conference report represents the first Department of Justice authorization that will be signed into law since 1979. The Department has gone for 23 years without an authorization. This legislation will help the Congress to do better oversight over the Department of Justice and will allow the Department of Justice to do better oversight over itself through improvements in the Inspector General's Office.

There are a number of additional judgeships that have been created, largely in the southwestern part of the country, to handle cases that arise from problems along the border. There is an improvement in how the Department administers its grant programs through the Office of Justice programs; and I think probably most importantly, the improvements in the juvenile justice system at the Federal level, jointly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Education and the Workforce, at long last, will be finding its way into law.

All of the conferees signed this legislation. It has significant bipartisan support. I would commend it to the Members' favorable vote.

Mr. Speaker, over the last two decades, there have been several unsuccessful attempts by the Committees on the Judiciary of both Houses of Congress to authorize the Department of Justice. If enacted, H.R. 2215 represents the first such authorization of the Department in nearly a quarter century. It reflects the broad bipartisan support of both Houses, and was signed by all of those appointed to the Conference. While some might argue that congressional authorization of federal departments within its jurisdiction is a mere formality, the authorization of executive agencies fulfills Congress' fundamental constitutional obligation to maintain an active and continuing role in organizing the priorities and overseeing the operation of the executive branch. This process also ensures that the authorizing committees' institutional knowledge about the federal agencies they oversee can be imparted in the course of regulation reauthorization.

The Department of Justice is one of the most important agencies in the Federal Government and the world's premier law enforcement organization. With an annual budget exceeding 20 billion dollars and a workforce of over 100,000 employees, the Department of Justice is an institution whose mission and values reflect the American people's staunch commitment to fairness and justice.

The importance of the Department of Justice has only increased since the tragic events of September 11th, 2001. Last year, I was pleased to introduce and lead congressional passage of the PATRIOT Act, which has strengthened America's security by providing law enforcement with a range of tools to fight and win the war against terrorism.

As Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I have continued to help provide the Department with the legislative resources to carry out its crucial mandate. At the same time, I have worked to ensure that the Department's structure, management, and priorities are tailored to best promote the purposes for which it was established.

The 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act advances this important goal. The title of this measure reflects its broad and ambitious sweep: to focus the priorities of the Department to tackle the challenges of the 21st century. At the same time, its title alone does not fully capture the several individual legislative initiatives contained in its text. Many of these initiatives were reported by the House Judiciary Committee and passed the House of Representatives, only to be diverted from the President's desk by the delay and inaction of the other body.

H.R. 2215 fully authorizes the appropriations requested by the President for fiscal years 2002 and 2003. It strengthens oversight of the Department of Justice by bolstering the authority of the Department's Inspector General. It also mandates that one senior official in the Inspector General's office be dedicated to the oversight of the FBI. It also requires the Inspector General to submit an FBI oversight plan to Congress within 30 days of enactment.

It also directs the Department to submit a report detailing the operation of the Office of Justice programs, requires the submission of information concerning litigation activities at the Department, and protects civil liberties by requiring the submission of a report on the Department's use of the electronic surveillance system formerly known as "Project Carnivore."

H.R. 2215 strengthens the statutory authority of the Attorney General to conduct his official responsibilities, enhances the administration of justice by incorporating long-needed judicial improvements and strengthens judicial disciplinary procedures. It also creates additional judgeships to address the chronic overburdening of America's federal courts, particularly in border states such as Texas, California, and New Mexico, as well as Florida, Nevada, and Alabama.

H.R. 2215 also ensures effective market competition by making important improvements to federal antitrust statues, and establishes a Commission to review the adequacy of existing antitrust laws. It promotes America's economic competitiveness by strengthening protections for intellectual property, modernizing the application process at the Patent and Trademark Office, and ensuring that holders of U.S. trademarks are accorded the full protection of international law.

In addition, H.R. 2215 strengthens the integrity of the criminal justice system in several ways. It increases penalties for those who tamper with federal witnesses or harm federal judges and law enforcement personnel, authorizes danger pay for federal agents in harm's way overseas, and contains important provisions to reduce illegal drug use. The Report also makes important refinements to address INS administrative processing delays faced by legal immigrants.

Of critical importance, this legislation contains a sweeping and ambitious program to protect at-risk kids. It provides continued support for Boys and Girls Clubs, enhances juvenile criminal accountability, and provides states with block grants to curb youth crime. It represents comprehensive bipartisan legislation the House Committees on Judiciary and Education and Workforce have been working on for several years, and I am proud of its inclusion in the Conference Report. Finally, this bill promotes continued support for federal, state, and local coordination of preparedness against terrorist attacks.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the American people will not have to wait another 23 years for this body to again reauthorize the Department of Justice. Rather, I hope that passage of H.R. 2215 will lead to a period of reinvigorated congressional oversight of the executive branch. Working in concert to identify solutions to the growing challenges faced by federal law enforcement, Congress and The Administration will better provide for the safety and security of American people. H.R. 2215 makes a critical, long-overdue step in this direction, and I urge your support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF), who has been very helpful in putting this bipartisan package together.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I applaud the bipartisan leadership for their tireless work in bringing this bill to the floor today.

In particular, I am very appreciative that one of my bills, the Law Enforcement Tribute Act, has been included in the reauthorization conference report. The Law Enforcement Tribute Act authorizes funding for grants to States and localities to aid in honoring those men and women of the United States who were killed or disabled while serving as law enforcement or public safety officers.

To ensure this funding would allow for the development of many tributes around the country, there is a limit that no award may be greater than $150,000; and the bill further requires a match by the State or locality requesting the funding. The bill authorizes $3 million a year for 5 years to be administered through the Department of Justice and would provide enough funding for 20 projects each year.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain briefly why this bill is so important. In one of the communities I represent alone, Glendale, California, four police officers and one sheriff's deputy have been killed in the line of duty. Many others have suffered injuries and illnesses that have contributed to early deaths. The ultimate sacrifice they have made deserves this recognition.

One of those fallen heroes was Charles Lazzaretto, a Glendale police officer killed in the line of duty only 4 years ago. Another involves Janice Starnes of Martinsville, Indiana, whose husband, Dan, was killed in the line of duty in July of 2001, just months after they celebrated their 25th anniversary. Earlier this year, Janice wrote a check for $100 to start a memorial for her husband and two other officers also killed in the line of duty. In a letter that we received from her, she writes: "He was the best friend to our sons. Dan paid the ultimate sacrifice. He has always been my hero, and now others can be honored by this memorial. I want to live long enough to see this memorial completed."

Well, so do all of us in the Congress of the United States.

I want to thank the original cosponsor, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAVIS); our subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH); and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT), the ranking member of the subcommittee, for their work; and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), the chairman of the committee; and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member of the full committee, for all of their assistance. To the many organizations of law enforcement who have supported it, I thank them; and I urge the support of my colleagues.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE).

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

This conference report contains intellectual property provisions which are very significant, such as PTO reauthorization; the patent reexamination reform proposal; intellectual property technical amendments; the TEACH Act, regarding the distance education program; and the Madrid protocol implementation concerning the international registration of trademarks.

Our subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. Speaker, has worked a long time on these matters, and in the case of the Madrid protocol for 8 years. This is much-needed reform that will benefit the intellectual property owners of the intellectual property community, and the American public as well.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Wisconsin (Ms. BALDWIN).

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report. I want to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), our chairman; and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), our ranking member; and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT), the ranking member of the subcommittee, for their efforts to pass the first DOJ authorization bill in 2 decades. I have enjoyed working with them as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary and as a member of the conference committee to bring this legislation to the floor.

This is an excellent piece of legislation that deals with a large number of important issues. I would like to focus on two of them today.

I am very pleased that we were able to create a permanent Violence Against Women Office and make the director of that office a Senate-confirmed appointee. These provisions will strengthen the existing office, enhancing the Department of Justice's capacity to address the continuing problems of domestic violence and sexual assault.

Domestic violence and sexual assault are still scourges on our Nation. The statistics are chilling. Nearly one in three women will experience either domestic violence or a sexual assault in her lifetime. These horrible crimes damage lives and tear families apart. The Violence Against Women Act is a proven part of the solution to these problems, and a permanent office with a strong director will help us continue to move forward to end this problem forever.

I want to thank the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), my colleague, for introducing the original legislation; and I also want to appreciate the work of the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) and the gentlewoman from Colorado (Ms. DEGETTE), and also appreciate the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member, for their efforts to move this issue forward. I thank the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), for the work that he did to make sure that we found appropriate legislative language that meets the great need for a strong Violence Against Women Office.

Mr. Speaker, this bill also includes an important, although somewhat obscure, provision that will help promote education. The bill includes the Technology Education and Copyright Harmonization Act, also known as the TEACH Act. The TEACH Act extends the current exemption of educational use of copyrighted materials to distance learning. This will allow our schools, colleges, and universities to expand educational opportunities through new technology. Copyright holders and our educational institutions worked hard to develop this compromise language. I am pleased we were able to introduce it and include it in this bill, and I urge my colleagues to vote for this conference report.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield a quick 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for yielding me this time.

This legislation contains several bills originated by the Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism and Homeland Security. The Juvenile Offender Accountability Act, the Law Enforcement Tribute Act, and the Body Armor Act will help make America safer.

Additionally, this legislation increases penalties for threatening Federal judges and other Federal officials, and for threatening witnesses, victims and informants.

An immigration provision I sponsored benefits the high-tech sector. It allows high-tech workers with H1-B visas who apply for an extension beyond their normal 6 years to extend their stay in the U.S. while their application is pending.

This legislation provides for three additional judgeships in Texas, two permanent district judges in the western district and one temporary district judge in the eastern district.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, Section 11030 A of the conference report will permit H–1B aliens who have labor certification applications caught in lengthy agency backlogs to extend their status beyond the 6th year limitation or, if they have already exceeded such limitation, to have a new H–1B petition approved so they can apply for an H–1B visa to return from abroad or otherwise re-obtain H–1B status.

Either a labor certification application or a petition must be filed at least 365 days prior to the end of the 6th year in order for the alien to be eligible under this section. The slight modification to existing law made by this section is necessary to avoid the disruption of important projects caused by the sudden loss of valued employees.

This corrects a problem created in the American Competitiveness in the 21st Century Act (Pub. L. 106–313)(AC21). The provision, as it was orginially written, allowed for extensions of H–1B status beyond the usual 6 years, but required that a labor certification be filed more than 365 days before the end of the 6th year and that an immigrant petition, the next step in the long line to permanent residency, be filed before the end of the 6 year as well.

When it passed AC 21, Congress intended to protect foreign nationals and the companies who sponsor them from the inequities of government bureaucracy inefficiency. This specific provision was put in place to recognize the lengthy delays at INS in adjusticalting petitions, rather than DOL. But since that time, DOL has slowed down its own processing, and the provision as it was orginially written has become useless for many otherwise qualified applicants.

This correction allows for those in H–1B status to get extensions beyond the six years when a labor certification was filed before the end of the fifth year, without regard to the ability to file an immigrant petition within the next year. The conferees intends that those who are about the exceed their six years in H–1B status should not be subject to the additional requirement of having to file the immigrant petition by the end of the sixth year, which is simply impossible when DOL has not finished its part in the process.

This recognizes that these individuals are already well-valued by their companies, have significant ties to the U.S. and whose employers have to prove that they are not taking jobs from U.S. workers.

It also is meant to permit those who have exceeded their six year limitation to return to H–1B status. The conferees intend for this provision to allow those who already exceeded the 6-year limitation to have a new H–1B petition approved and obtain a visa to return from abroad or otherwise re-obtain H–1B status.

In addition, the compromise reached with the Senate on Title IV of Division B of this legislation relating to the Violence Against Women Office (VAWO) gives the Attorney General discretion about where to place the VAWO in the organizational structure and chain of command of the Department of Justice as did the version contained in the House passed bill.

This compromise does not contain language found in section 402(b)(1) of the Senate bill which stated that the VAWO "shall not be part of any division or component of the Department of Justice." The conference report permits the Attorney General the flexibility to manage the Department's responsibilities in the area of violence against women.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), who is the ranking member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, which did a tremendous job on part of the juvenile justice provisions in the legislation.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise in strong support of the conference report. I believe that it offers a balanced approach to reducing juvenile crime and promotes both prevention and accountability. States will have an obligation to protect children in the juvenile justice system. Runaways and truants cannot be contained in secured facilities; juveniles cannot be held in adult facilities. The States have to find a systematic method of addressing a disproportionate number of incarcerated minority youth.

It also includes for the first time a measure aimed at preventing the abuse of juveniles in residential camps, many of whom are in federally funded, but State supervised, foster care. These camps have operated away from the public scrutiny for too long, and the result is that children have suffered serious injuries and, in several circumstances, children have died. This provision requires that residential camps be licensed in the State in which they are located and also meet the licensing standards of States which send juveniles for placements.

I also want to take time to thank so many people who participated in these components of this legislation. I want to thank Bob Sweet and Krisann Pearce of the majority staff on the committee; Judy Borger with the staff of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD); and Ruth Friedman and Cheryl Johnson and Denise Forte of our staff on the minority side. On the Senate side I want to thank Tim Lynch and Beryl Howell with Senator LEAHY, and Jeff Miller with Senator KOHL, and Leah Belaire with Senator HATCH.

Mr. Speaker, I also would like to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT) for all the work that he did on behalf of this legislation to make it fair and equitable. It is a good piece of legislation.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate our colleagues on the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), the chairman of the committee, and his colleagues for their very good work on this DOJ authorization bill.

I am very pleased that the chairman has included the provisions of juvenile justice that we have been trying to pass in this House for 6 years. We have had countless numbers of hearings, countless numbers of markups; we have been to the floor three times, and finally, this 6-year project is finished.

I just want to thank the two people most responsible on our committee, and that would be the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT), who have really worked hard to help pull this together. I also want to thank the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA), for his fine work; one of our committee staff, Bob Sweet, who just did incredible work, working with Members and staff on both sides of the aisle to bring about what I would describe as a very good agreement and something that has alluded us for a long time.

Lastly, let me thank two other people, my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), the ranking member of my committee. We have a very good relationship, and we have been able to work through many of these difficult issues. Lastly, let me thank again Chairman SENSENBRENNER for his willingness to include this issue, this juvenile justice bill in this DOJ conference report.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER).

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise today in support of H.R. 2215, the Department of Justice Authorization Conference Report.

I am pleased that the conferees included my bill H.R. 28, the Violence Against Women's Office Act, which was approved by the House last year and would make the Violence Against Women Office a permanent and independent force in the Department of Justice.

Created in 1995, this office has been absolutely critical in heightening awareness within the Federal Government and the entire Nation about domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking. The office formulates policy and administers more than $270 million annually in grants to State governments, as well as to local community organizations, police, prosecutors and courts to address violence against women. In addition, it assists these organizations with education and training to ensure the highest quality services to victims and the full administration of justice.

The importance of this office cannot be overestimated. In fact, in a survey conducted by the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, reports of domestic violence have dropped 21 percent since the inception of this office. Much remains to be done, however, as nearly 25 percent of women also reported they had been physically and/or sexually assaulted by a current or former intimate partner at home some time in their lifetime. These statistics illustrate the importance of the Violence Against Women Office to the health, safety, and the very survival of women all over America.

The conference report creates an independent Violence Against Women's Office within the Department of Justice, rather than making the office simply a subsidiary part of the Office of Justice programs. The policy independence of the Violence Against Women Office is critical in carrying out its unique mission with regard to both its policy and grant administration efforts to prevent violence against women.

The office's work with grantees on very sensitive issues is vital and will be best addressed through a separate and independent office. This valuable resource has been specifically authorized by statute, and will be a permanent part of the government's anti-violence efforts.

Ending violence against women is an ongoing struggle, and one of the best tools is the Violence Against Women Office. I want to give my thanks to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT), the ranking member, and to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) for bringing this good bill to the floor today. I give it my support.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK), who contributed significantly to this legislation.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of this conference report, which contains a bill that I have worked on for several years, the James Guelff and Chris McCurley Body Armor Act of 2002. I introduced this bill with Asa Hutchinson and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT), and thanks to their strong support of this issue and the hard work of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Chairman SENSENBRENNER), the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), and Senator FEINSTEIN, this bill will finally be enacted into law.

We are providing invaluable assistance to our Nation's law enforcement at a time when their mission is even more important. Violent felons will be prohibited from owning body armor, and serious crimes committed while wearing body armor will be punished more severely.

Criminals wear body armor in the commission of crimes so they can outgun our law enforcement officers and facilitate their criminal intent. This must be stopped. We cannot allow criminals to have an advantage over the men and women that put their lives on the line every day to protect society. The days of the Wild West are over, and gunfights have no place in our society.

I want to thank the Nation's law enforcement that has rallied behind our bill. The Fraternal Order of Police, the National Association of Police Organizations, the National Troopers Coalition, and the International Union of Police Associations have provided invaluable support to the bill, as have numerous police departments across the Nation, including Los Angeles and New York.

But I think the greatest thanks goes to Lee Guelff, who has worked tirelessly on this cause in the name of his brother. Lee has done much and sacrificed more, and today's action serves as a tribute to his efforts. Lee's advocacy has resulted in the passage of similar provisions in numerous State legislatures, including my own State of Michigan.

James Guelff, Chris McCurley, and many other law enforcement officers have been tragically killed by criminals wearing body armor. After the events of September 11, our law enforcement officials have been called upon to go even further in protecting this great Nation, so I am pleased that by passing the James Guelff and Chris McCurley Body Armor Act of 2002, we are standing up for them as they rise every day to protect us.

Mr. Speaker, I thank all the people associated with this committee for including our bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 2215, the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act. I want to commend my colleagues, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Chairman SENSENBRENNER) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), particularly for their leadership in ensuring that we have worked in a bipartisan, cooperative method in developing this conference report.

It is because of that kind of leadership that we have for the first time in over 20 years a bill to authorize the programs and funding in the Department of Justice.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is based on the provisions that both sides of the aisle in both Chambers can agree on, rather than provisions which divide us based on the disagreements. This is especially true in the juvenile justice provisions in the bill.

For years, juvenile justice programs and funding have been characterized in both Chambers by contention and differences. In this bill are two juvenile justice provisions, one developed in the Committee on the Judiciary and one developed in the Committee on Education and the Workforce. Both bills were developed through bipartisan cooperation and agreement, in stark contrast to the contention and rancor which has deadlocked both Chambers on the issue of juvenile justice in recent years.

I want to give special credit for the hard work on this bill to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism, and Homeland Security, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD), who has worked for years on juvenile justice issues.

Juvenile justice bills in the past have been based on the advice of political pollsters and consultants. These bills, however, were developed based on advice of juvenile justice researchers, administrators, judges, psychologists, educators, and other experts in the field.

The Committee on the Judiciary bill provides for accountability of the juvenile to the law, as well as accountability of the juvenile justice system to the juvenile and the public through a program of graduated sanctions and services.

States and localities are provided with resources to ensure that offenses by juveniles are responded to with an appropriate degree of punishment and/or services, as the individual case requires, graduated and increasing in the level of punishment or services with any subsequent offenses until the problems bringing about such offenses are resolved.

The education bill authorizes the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act for the first time in almost 6 years. We have maintained the core requirements of the act that serve to protect juveniles from abuse and that direct resources towards reducing overrepresentation of minorities in the system.

This reauthorization also provides resources through a delinquency prevention block grant designed to identify at-risk children and to address difficulties which may lead to juvenile offenses before such offenses occur through proven juvenile delinquency prevention programs.

The juvenile justice provision of the report also contains a provision to ensure that the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention has continued responsibility for the oversight and planning for the research, evaluation, and statistical functions of the office, in addition to grant and contracting authority for these functions.

The research and evaluation arm of that office has been critical to the development of effective juvenile delinquency prevention programs, and this reauthorization reaffirms its important role within the office.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, the juvenile justice provisions of this bill will provide the necessary resources to effectively reduce juvenile delinquency and hold juveniles accountable for any offenses they commit.

I am also pleased to see several other items in the bill which are the result of bipartisan cooperation. We converted a temporary judgeship in the Eastern District of Virginia to a permanent one, which is of critical importance to the area that I represent.

I am also pleased to have worked to include in the bill the bill introduced by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK), providing our brave law enforcement officers with bulletproof vests, and another bill introduced by the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF) to provide suitable tributes to those who have paid the ultimate sacrifice protecting the public from criminals.

Mr. Speaker, there are provisions in the bill which some would prefer would not be there, and other provisions were left out which some would have preferred were in the bill, but the bill represents a well-reasoned, bipartisan effort to fund important programs in the Department of Justice.

I would like to commend the Members on both sides of the aisle, and our respective staffs in both Chambers, for their hard work and accomplishments, as well. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I support this measure because, parochially speaking, it does a great deal for some of the projects in which we are so interested in Pennsylvania.

For instance, at Fort Indiantown Gap, this calls for full funding of an anti-drug/antiterrorist school and training program that is extant in that institution, that military base. That alone would justify my vote for this.

But then we include, on top of that, the fact that there is language that will help the State Borough Association implement a plan of Pennsylvania-wide security measures and infrastructure protection that is vital to our State, as it is to every other State in similar circumstances.

Thirdly, under the INS, there is strong language to help us implement the CIVAS program through the designated school officials' training program that will make the visa applications of students better monitored.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee of Conference on H.R. 2215, the Department of Justice Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 2002 and 2003, I strongly support adoption of the conference report.

I am particularly pleased that the conference report authorizes $10,732,000 and an additional six full-time employees in fiscal year 2003 for the Community Relations Service (CRS). of the Department of Justice. CRS is an extraordinarily important office whose many accomplishments have been too little noticed. It has the statutory responsibility to assist communities around the United States, and particularly minority communities, in preventing violence and resolving conflicts arising from racial and ethnic tensions and to develop the capacity of such communities to address these conflicts without external assistance. They do a wonderful job and we are fortunate to have them. The increased authorization provided by this section and the additional full-time employees will support the expansion of the Community Relations Service's efforts to address heightened tension and potential for conflict in many communities in the wake of the September 11, 2001 attacks on the United States.

I am also pleased that the conference report creates a Violence Against Women Office with the Department of Justice. The Office will be headed by a Director who reports directly to the Attorney General and has final authority over all grants, cooperative agreements and contracts awarded by the Office.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the conference committee wisely decided not to include a Senate provision would have exempted federal government lawyers from the responsibility to follow the same ethnical rules that bind other lawyers. The Senate provision was not only unnecessary, but would have been counterproductive to the goal of truly professional law enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this important legislation.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to Section 312 of the Conference Report accompanying H.R. 2215, as well as to support passage of this important legislation.

On the 21st of May this year, I wrote to Congressman SENSENBRENNER and Ranking Member CONYERS to express my concern for the dire shortages of federal judges in the State of New Mexico, and to request that the Committee authorize an additional judgeship for the District of New Mexico in the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act.

Today, I want to thank Chairman SENSENBRENNER, Ranking Member CONYERS and the members of the Conference Committee for including appropriations for an additional temporary judgeship for the State of New Mexico in Section 312 of the Report.

New Mexico is the 3rd busiest judicial district in the nation behind southern California and western Texas. In 1996, the Judiciary Council recommended that New Mexico receive one new permanent judgeship and one temporary judgeship. Two years later, the council reiterated that recommendation. Then, in 2000, the Judicial Conference recommended that New Mexico receive two permanent judgeships and one temporary judgeship.

Since the Conference's first recommendation six years ago, the caseload in the federal courts in New York has been on the rise, seemingly growing exponentially each year. Accordingly, the judgeship appropriated in Section 312 will help alleviate the pressure felt within this increasingly overloaded judiciary system, and provide the people of New Mexico more efficient accessibly to federal courts.

Once again, I think my collegues for considering my request.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the DOJ authorization bill because it does enhance the Violence Against Women Office and increase assistance to our law enforcement officers.

I also applaud the provision of the bill that directs the Attorney General to conduct a study to assess the number of untested rape examination kits that currently exist nationwide.

However, I know we could have done more. It would be nice to know how many rape kits are outstanding. But it is much more important that we fund the DNA analysis of the kits and solve crimes, rather than simply counting how many kits remain on the shelf.

We know there are outstanding kits, anywhere from 150,000 to 500,000 of them, and we need money to test them. Asking for a study doesn't put any rapists behind bars.

Now, you may ask, what else could we possibly do about this?

Well, we could have put money for testing into the DOJ authorization bill. In fact, I asked the distinguished Chairman to do just that. He told me the study was the best he could do.

Well, I know we can do better. In fact, the Senate already has. The Senate already had hearings, already had a markup, and already passed a bill under unaminous consent. Now, the House has the opportunity to take up S. 2513, the DNA Sexual Assault Justice Act. We could have put this bipartisan bill into the conference report, but we didn't.

The Senate bill included $500,000 for a study, but it didn't stop there. The Senate bill also includes $15 million a year for DNA testing for convicted felons, $75 million a year to test rape kits, and $150 million over five years to train nurses how to better collect evidence. That is a lot better and would make much more of an impact than an unfunded study.

Now, some may say, we just didn't have time to address this problem. Well, I introduced a bill to solve this problem back in March of this year. It has never had a hearing. It has never been considered by the Judiciary Committee. It has been ignored, just like all the untested rape kits across America. So, we had plenty of time to address this issue, the Republican leadership simply chose not to.

This is a serious effort to combat crime, locate and apprehend rapists, and use powerful evidence to put them behind bars. We all know that DNA evidence is essential to solving crimes. It can lead to punishment of the guilty and the freeing of the innocent. The Department of Justice released a statement yesterday that mentioned the "unprecedented success in linking serial violent crimes by registering more than 80 matches against the FBI's National DNA Index System (NDIS) last month." The Department also states that "two of these matches resulted in the arrest in Pennsylvania of the perpetrator of two rapes." The DOJ reports that the DNA evidence solved 24 previously unsolved cases, and that nine matches involved connecting together previously unrelated crime scenes.

We must commit the necessary resources now to empower law enforcement to analyze all of the DNA evidence they collect, so that they can solve cases and bring justice to American families.

We already have a non-controversial bill that we could make law very quickly (we could even do it today), and it would be an immediate benefit to people all across America, especially victims of rape and sexual assault.

It is time for Congress to lend a hand to our law enforcement officers and provide them with the funds needed to solve these crimes and put rapists behind bars.

Since some Members were unwilling to include the Senate rape kit bill in this authorization bill, I now urge the leadership to bring the Senate bill up for a vote as soon as possible. I have a letter here signed by more than a dozen Members of Congress urging Majority Leader ARMEY to take up the Senate bill, and I ask unanimous consent that this letter be included as part of the RECORD. I also ask unanimous consent to include the Statement by the U.S. Department of Justice that I mentioned earlier.

STATEMENT OF U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

The FBI Laboratory today lauded state and local laboratories unprecedented success in linking serial violent crimes by registering more than 80 matches against the FBI's National DNA Index System (NDIS) last month. Additionally, the FBI's federal convicted offender program recorded its first NDIS match during the final week in August. The federal match was between the federal convicted offender database and a DNA profile from a case involving a sexual assault of a juvenile in Tampa, Florida contributed by the Florida Department of Law Enforcement. Two weeks later, as a result of this match, an arrest was made in this case.

The final week of August was one of the most successful weeks ever in the four years that NDIS has been operational. During that week, 33 matches were made, 17 by Oklhoma in that state's upload of DNA profiles into NDIS. To illustrate the power and reach of NDIS. Oklahoma's DNA matches were made with cases in the FBI Laboratory, Kansas, Colorado, Missouri, Texas, California, Arizona, and Maine. Examples of other matches included the FBI Laboratory matching a profile from New York; and Virginia posting matches with Washington state and Oregon.

Of the 33 matches made in the last week of August, 24 matched convicted offender DNA profiles already contained in the national database with DNA profiles from unknown individuals obtained at crime scenes or from rape kits, thus solving these previously unsolved cases. Two of these matches resulted in the arrest in Pennsylvania of the perpetrator of two rapes. The other nine matches involved connecting together previously unrelated crime scenes.

The FBI implemented NDIS is October, 1998 to allow state laboratories the ability to electronically compare and exchange DNA profiles with one another in an effort to link serial violent offenses. Today 44 states, the FBI and U.S. Army Lab participate in the NDIS program NDIS contains nearly 1.4 million offender DNA samples and 47,000 DNA profiles developed from crime scenes and rape kills. In the four years of NDIS, there have been approximately 5,000 DNA profile matches across 36 states and the District of Columbia. In December, 2000 legislation was passed which authorized collection and inclusion of DNA samples of certain federal offenders into NDIS. Full implementation of the federal convicted offender program began in July, 2002. In only the second upload of federal data, the first federal match was made.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, September 26, 2002.

Hon. DICK ARMEY,
Majority Leader, House of Representatives, the Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR LEADER ARMEY: We are writing to urge you to bring up the Senate passed bill, S. 2513, the DNA Sexual Assault Justice Act, without delay.

This bill passed the Senate by unanimous consent on September 12th. Similar legislation has been introduced in the House and has gathered the support of a substantial number of supporters. We believe this bill could be passed into law quickly and would be an immediate benefit to people all across America, especially victims of rape and sexual assault.

ABC's 20/20 reports that hundreds of thousands of rape kits sit unprocessed in police storage units across the country. There could be anywhere from 150,000 to 500,000 kits that remain untested. That means that DNA evidence from rape kits is going untested and crimes are going unsolved. This is totally unacceptable. It is time for Congress to lend a hand to our law enforcement officers and provide them with the funds needed to solve these crimes and to put rapists behind bars.

This is a serious effort to combat crime, locate and apprehend rapists, and use powerful evidence to put them behind bars. We all know that DNA evidence is essential to solving crimes. It can lead to punishment of the guilty and the freeing of the innocent. We must commit the necessary resources now to empower law enforcement to analyze all of the DNA evidence they collect, so that they can solve cases and bring justice to American families.

As the number of bills on this issue as well as the number of supporters indicate, there is strong public interest in this issue. We hope that you will schedule S. 2513 for House floor consideration as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

Jerrold Nadler, John Conyers, Jr., Bernard Sanders, Gary Ackerman, Rod Blagojevich, Danny Davis, Carolyn Maloney, Robert Andrews, Lane Evans, Rush Holt, Corrine Brown, Maurice Hinchey, Tammy Baldwin, Brad Carson, James Langevin, Sam Farr, Juanita Millender-McDonald, Ron Kind, Eleanor Holmes Norton, Julia Carson.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, this Conference Report does not include a permanent Judgeship for the State of Nebraska. Since 1998 Nebraska has exceeded the weighted standard of 430 filings per judge, and in 2001, that number grew to 482 filings. Without this permanent Judgeship, over the next year filings are expected to rise to over 600 per Judge. Currently, the caseload in Nebraska is the 9th heaviest in the Nation, and is only expected to increase. Nebraska has a higher drug prosecution rate than any other federal court in the 7th and 8th circuit; 65 percent of our drug cases are methamphetamine prosecutions, compared to a national average of 14.5 percent. The continued absence of this Judgeship hurts the citizens of Nebraska and brings an already over-worked court system to near standstill.

This permanent Judgeship was included in the House-passed Department of Justice Authorization bill, and I would like to thank Chairman SENSENBRENNER and Ranking Member CONYERS for their assistance in this effort. However, I learned last night that the Nebraska's permanent judgeship designation had been stripped from the conference report. I have no idea why this language was stripped out, and it upsets me that I've been unable to obtain a definitive answer. I'm left to believe that this designation was eliminated due to political concerns, and it was not a decision based upon merit or need.

Nebraska has had a temporary Judgeship since 1990 and will expire in November 2003. What occurred in conference is unfair to the State of Nebraska, and will negatively impact an already strained court system.

Nebraska Temporary/Permanent Judgeship Issue, April 8, 2002

(Currently three permanent and one temporary judgeship)

1. Need for permanent judgeship in Nebraska is critical:

A. Temporary judgeship created in 1990.

B. Expires first judge to leave after November 20, 2003.

C. Based on 430 weighted standard, Nebraska eligible for even a fifth judge, but not asking for that.

D. Since 1998, District of Nebraska exceeded 430 weighted filing per judge.

E. 2001—weighted case load was 482 per judge, with a 95 percent confidence level of 525–440 cases.

F. 2001 busiest year in last 6 years with 1500 new filings and 1242 pending cases.

G. Weighted filings in 200 —482, highest in last six years, compared to 377 in 1996.

H. Without this judgeship, weighted filings expected to exceed 600 per judge.

2. Criminal filings very heavy:

A. Very heavy for last 12 years and continues to increase.

B. 17th heaviest in nation in 1998, 12th in nation in 1999, and 9th in nation in 2001 (ranks 9th out of 94 districts).

C. Caseload per judge is double that of 1996: 118 per judge vs. 58 per judge.

D. Average caseload is 50 percent greater in criminal cases than average federal judge.

E. Heavier criminal case load than judges in New York City, Chicago, or Los Angeles.

F. Highest drug prosecutions than any other federal court in the 7th and 8th Circuits.

G. Nebraska's drug docket is 66 percent, while national average is less than 40 percent.

H. 64 percent of drug cases is methamphetamine, compared to national average of 14.5 percent.

I. Nebraska ranked 2nd in the number of high level drug trafficking defendants indicated and convicted in the Central Region (includes 12 states).

J. Criminal caseload is expanding; crack cocaine defendants doubled over last year, and meth defendants increased 88 percent.

3. Senior judges:

A. Two senior judges, and each carry about 100 cases.

B. Will not be able to continue to carry a caseload that heavy.

C. Both judges are over 75, and one has indicated he wishes to cut his caseload by 50 percent in 2002.

D. No additional help from senior judges available.

E. Note that one active judge has serious cancer, but no senior judges available in future to help with that caseload.

4. Magistrate judges:

A. Three magistrate judges, two in Omaha and one in Lincoln.

B. All three are fully utilized in criminal cases, preliminary civil dispositions, ADR management, and consent trials.

5. Visiting Judges:

A. Forced to request assistance of visiting judges in 2001 to handle the heavy volume of criminal/civil cases.

B. Will not address severe problem.

6. Current legislation:

A. H.R. 2215 does not include a recommendation that Nebraska temporary judgeship be converted into a permanent one, although recommendations for other states (Central District of Illinois, Southern District of Illinois, and Northern District of Ohio) are addressed.

B. Nebraska must be included in that legislation.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, today the House is considering the conference report on H.R. 2215, the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act which includes provisions that make several existing temporary Federal judgeships permanent. Unfortunately, Nebraska was not included on the list.

This Member greatly appreciates the attempts by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) to make this critically important improvement for the people of Nebraska. Despite the gentleman's best efforts, the conferees from the other body would not agree to include Nebraska on this list. As such, this Member is very concerned and disappointed that the Nebraska judgeship was not included in the final conference report.

The Nebraska temporary judgeship was created in 1990, and will expire with the first vacancy after November 2003. The caseload for the Federal District Court in Nebraska has steadily increased since that time, rising well above the Judicial Conference weighted standard of 430. In fact, in 2001, there were 1500 new filings and 1242 pending cases, with a weighted filing of 482. Without this judgeship, the weighted filings are expected to exceed 600 per judge. In addition, Nebraska currently has two District Court judges who have taken senior status and are expected to retire in the near future, further increasing the caseload on Nebraska judges.

Mr. Speaker, clearly, this is an important issue to this Member and to the state of Nebraska. It is impossible for this Member to understand the reason this important change was not included in this conference report. The opportunity was available and yet inexplicably not taken by the conferees from the other body. However, because of the many important provisions in this bill, this Member will vote "aye" even while expressing his extraordinary disappointment and regret that the permanent Nebraska judgeship was not included in the conference report. If there was a problem on another issue or judgeship in the House offer, Nebraskans did not deserve to lose this opportunity for the much-needed permanent judgeship designation.

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, today, along with my fellow conferees, I'm pleased to deliver a comprehensive conference report and ask for other members' support. We have worked diligently to address a wide variety of issues. From crime prevention programs, to drug education and treatment, a fix in the H1-B visa system and the inclusion of the Judicial Improvements Act, this conference report is a complete package. I'd like to take the opportunity to highlight these provisions and thank several individuals who made the inclusion in this conference report possible.

First, the conference report includes a provision that permits consumers who visit wineries to ship a limited quantity of wine back to their homes. This language is needed because post-September 11, as the Federal Aviation Administration and Congress supported strong airline security measures, it became difficult, if not impossible, to carry-on bottles of wine after a visit to a winery. This provision is not only pro-consumer, but it is also very important to California's $12 billion wine industry. I would like to thank Chairman SENSENBRENNER for his support on this provision.

In addition to the direct shipment of wine, we are also including legislative language that will allow motor vehicle dealers, who sign franchise contracts with manufacturers, to have the opportunity to either accept or reject mandatory binding arbitration after a legal dispute arises. Currently, the mandatory arbitration requirements are either "take it or leave it" provisions in the contracts, forcing auto dealers to waive important legal safeguards. I would personally like to thank Chairman SENSENBRENNER and Congressman GEKAS for their support on this issue.

Finally, I am very pleased that this conference report includes five additional federal judgeships for the Southern District of California, as well as one temporary judgeship for the Central District of California. The numbers speak for themselves; the Southern California District is the most overwhelmed in the country and greatly needs these additional judgeships. In the year 2000, the weighted caseload for the Southern District of California was 978 cases per judge. That was more than double the national average of 430. Most alarming is the number of felony cases, which tripled between 1994 and 1999 without additional judgeships. These additional judgeships will ensure that the very integrity of our judicial process will be protected. For that, I'd like to thank all of the conferees for their support.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, we all know by now that this is an historic moment—Congress has not reauthorized the Department of Justice in over 20 years; instead, we have left the responsibility to the appropriators to decide which Department programs should be authorized and their maximum funding level.

This conference report, arrived at after months of bipartisan, bicameral negotiations, expresses the views of the authorizing committees about how these programs should operate. I'd like to thank Conference and Senate Judiciary Chairman LEAHY, House Judiciary Chairman SENSENBRENNER, and Senate Judiciary Ranking Member HATCH for working with us on this legislation.

Aside from the authorizing language and technical corrections to the antitrust, criminal, and intellectual property laws, important compromises were reached between the House and Senate on other non-controversial provisions so they could be included in this report. Included are:

A provisions supported by Representative MARY BONO and myself to ensure that parties to motor vehicle franchise contracts cannot be subject to mandatory arbitration without their consent;

A provision supported by Representative TAMMY BALDWIN, Representative LOUISE SLAUGHTER, and myself to establish an independent Violence Against Women Office within the Department of Justice. This provision raises the profile of the Office by having its Director report directly to the Attorney General instead of through other subordinates. This demonstrates our commitment to rooting out, deterring, and preventing violence against women;

A provision that expands vocational and remedial opportunities to smooth the reentry of inmates post-incarceration;

A provision offered by Representative BARNEY FRANK that allows grandparents to apply for citizenship for a child in the event that the parents are deceased;

A provision offered by Representative ADAM SCHIFF to create a fund that disburses Federal grants for states and localities to construct memorials to officers killed or disabled while protecting the public;

A provision drafted by Representative LAMAR SMITH and Representative BOBBY SCOTT that authorizes grants for states and local governments to improve their juvenile justice programs; and

The Madrid Protocol Implementation Act, which will allow one-stop shopping for international trademark registration. This bill has passed the House on several occasions and finally will be enacted into law.

At the same time, the Republicans were not able to accept a permanent extension of chapter 12 (family farmer bankruptcy) or higher compensation for workers who are laid-off as a result of a corporate bankruptcy. I hope we can address these issues before adjourning this session.

I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this conference report.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, today the House is considering the conference report for H.R. 2215, the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act. While this conference report authorizes appropriations for the Justice Department, it also establishes federal judgeships. Despite the efforts of Chairman SENSENBRENNER, this legislation fails to make permanent Nebraska's temporary judgeship, which is set to expire November 20, 2003.

Caseloads for U.S. district judges in Nebraska have climbed steadily largely because of an increasing number of criminal cases, particularly those related to drug trafficking. In fact, criminal cases have more than doubled since 1995. Like many other states in the Midwest, Nebraska has been plagued in recent years by an influx of methamphetamine (meth), and criminal cases involving meth represent 66 percent of Nebraska's drug docket, compared to the national average of 14.5 percent.

The influx of meth in Nebraska will continue to cause the criminal caseload to increase. In the last year alone, the number of meth defendants increased by 88 percent. Interstate 80, which runs the length of the state of Nebraska, is one of the primary transit routes used for drug trafficking across the central United States. This has contributed to Nebraska being ranked second in the number of high-level drug trafficking defendants indicted and convicted in the Central Region, which includes 12 states.

This substantial increase in Nebraska's criminal trials leaves Nebraska's federal judges with extremely heavy caseloads. In fact, Nebraska's judges carry a heavier criminal caseload than judges in New York City, Chicago, and Los Angeles. This fourth judgeship is critically important to Nebraska, and without it, criminal cases will move more slowly and handling civil cases will become increasingly burdensome.

Mr. Speaker, while I am grateful for the efforts of Chairman SENSENBRENNER on this issue, I am very disappointed this conference report does not address Nebraska's serious need for a permanent judgeship. Without this fourth judgeship, Nebraska's criminal justice system will be in real trouble.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Conference Report for H.R. 2215, "The 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act." I thank Chairman JAMES SENSENBRENNER, the House and Senate Conferees and the Judiciary Committee staff for their leadership on this bill.

Within this Conference Report, in section 312, the Southern District of California will receive five judgeships. This authorization will bring immense relief to this district. As you may know, Southern California has the dubious distinction of having the highest judge to caseload ratio in the nation. I have met with four of the sitting judges in this district and have seen first hand the problems they face on a daily basis. In 1998, the Southern District, which has 8 judgeships, had a weighted caseload of 1,006 cases per judge, annually.

I want to give you a comparison of the caseload to judges from different regions of the United States to show you how overloaded the judges in the Southern District of California are:

New York has 28 judgeships and each one handles 468 cases annually, LA has 27 judgeships/481 caseload, Chicago—22 judgeships/381 caseload, Houston—18 judgeships/588 caseload, Philadelphia—22 judgeship/381 caseload.

Congress has not authorized any new judgeships for the Southern District since 1990, and with this district being a border corridor, I do not expect the level of criminal activity to diminish in the near future. Passing this bill is necessary to ease the burden on the sitting judges of the Southern District.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GILLMOR). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 400, nays 4, not voting 28, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 422 I was inadvertently detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, on the morning of September 26, 2002, due to an official meeting at the White House, I was unable to place votes on three items:

If I had been present, I would have voted "yea" on H.R. 2215, "no" on the Journal, and "yea" on the motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 3295.

MAKING IN ORDER AT ANY TIME CONSIDERATION OF H.J. RES. 111, CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 2003

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order at any time without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 111) making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 2003, and for other purposes; the joint resolution shall be considered as read for amendment; the joint resolution shall be debatable for 2 hours, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations; and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HANSEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object so that I may enter into a colloquy with the very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The resolution that we have before us that the very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules is bringing up under this unanimous-consent request is based on what might be referred to as "a rate not to exceed the current rate" for fiscal year 2002. Is it the gentleman's understanding that this would effectively carry forward appropriations from last year's supplementals that were designated as emergencies?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. The gentleman is correct. The bill carries forward all amounts that were appropriated in fiscal year 2002, including amounts that were designated as an emergency. However, as in all previous continuing resolutions, the Office of Management and Budget has the flexibility under this CR to not extend funding for one-time items.

Mr. NUSSLE. Will the very distinguished gentleman work with me on the next continuing resolution that we understand will be necessary to ensure that one-time, nonrecurring emergency designated expenditures are not included in the base used to calculate the current rate of operations?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. If the gentleman will yield further, it is not my intention that any true one-time nonrecurring expenditures from last year's supplementals be included in the base of any continuing resolution. It is my understanding that under any short-term CR, the Office of Management and Budget can avoid funding one-time items.

Mr. NUSSLE. This short-term CR would, if it were to last for an entire year, provide, according to the Congressional Budget Office, $744.3 billion in budget authority which in fact would not exceed the appropriate level in the budget resolution because defense is assumed to continue at last year's level. However, if it were annualized and the defense and military construction bills were enacted at even the House-passed levels, it would exceed the budget level by $8.2 billion. Of course, that assumes that these emergencies would continue. Will the gentleman assure the House and work with me in assuring the House that any further future continuing resolutions will come in under, on an annualized basis, the $749 billion in new budget authority assuming the enactment of the defense and MILCON bills at the levels requested by the President?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. If the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman's estimate is correct only if you assume that one-time spending continues. No one else has included such items in their estimates, including OMB. So it is my intent that any CR provide the most limited funding possible under a current rate. If the defense and military construction bills are enacted and the 11 remaining bills are funded at a current rate and OMB exercises its authority as it has in the past to not extend one-time funding, the total annualized funding under a CR would be below $749 billion. I would also remind the House that it is imperative that we pass the remaining fiscal year 2003 bills.

Mr. NUSSLE. If I may reclaim my time, Mr. Speaker, I compliment the gentleman on his work to do just that, and I thank the hard work of the Committee on Appropriations in trying to accomplish that goal and will stand by the gentleman to work with him to accomplish that goal.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. I would like to respond in kind to my friend from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. DREIER. If the gentleman will yield under his reservation, I would like to congratulate both the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations; and it is an honor to stand between the two very distinguished chairmen of these committees, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under my reservation I simply want to confess my bafflement. We are one working day from the end of the fiscal year. We had expected to have this proposal on the floor yesterday; and we have been held up for more than a day, as I understand it, by the misgivings of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Budget about the resolution that the Committee on Appropriations had intended to bring to the floor yesterday.

I simply want to reiterate what the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said, that we are very close to the end of the string on this fiscal year and we cannot afford any more delays. I would also point out, I find it somewhat ironic that the Committee on the Budget, as represented by the Chair, has been raising these concerns, legitimate concerns, I might say, about the complicated and sometimes uncertain nature of continuing resolutions. We all know that continuing resolutions are imperfect instruments for extending the authority of the government to function because they have many anomalies and they do not take into account many of the other legitimate anomalies that occur in funding requirements.

Just yesterday, for instance, the Secretary of Transportation was in my office discussing his need for one such adjustment in order to be able to provide what that agency felt was necessary under some of the homeland security provisions. But I simply want to say that the Committee on Appropriations has tried to produce the regular bills which would have made unnecessary a continuing resolution, but it has been the unrealistic budget resolution produced by the Committee on the Budget chaired by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa that is at the root of the problem to begin with, because he has chosen, along with some of his colleagues in the majority caucus, to try to enforce rigidly that resolution to the point where it has been impossible to bring bills to the floor that would achieve enough votes in the majority caucus to pass, much less the minority caucus.

We are stuck here, for instance, still unable to bring up the Labor-Health-Education bill because people are insisting that we stick to the budget resolution and the allocation provided under it to the Labor-Health-Education bill. And because that bill has been bogged down by an internal war in the majority party caucus, we have not been able to bring the other bills forward to finish the basic work that we have.

So I find it somewhat ironic that at the last day, virtually the last day that we have to send this to the Senate before both bodies leave for the weekend, that the committee that has caused the problems in the first place is still producing the doubts about this instrument which was made necessary by their own lack of realism in the first place. I think that needs to be made quite clear.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. NUSSLE. I know the gentleman will most likely have the last word on this, so I will make my comments brief; but I have a slightly different take on who might be responsible here. The rules of the House may not permit me to be quite as specific as I might like, but there are two bodies that have to have a budget, have to complete a process in order to be successful. This body passed a budget. The gentleman may not agree with it. It may be difficult. These are difficult times. But at least the House of Representatives has completed its work on a budget and did so back before the deadline of April 15. If there was a better budget, a better proposal, a better outline and a better plan, we have yet to see it. It has yet to materialize in either the gentleman's caucus or the other body, as it is referred to. That may happen, but until then I would at least suggest that there may be more responsibility to go around than where he pointed the responsibility in his comments here just a moment ago.

I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman for his comments. Let me simply respond by saying I think that is a red herring. The fact is that it is not the fault of the other body that this House has only produced five of the 13 appropriation bills. The other body is not even supposed to consider appropriation bills until they are reported and handled in this body. So, I think it is quaint indeed to blame the body which is supposed to act after we act for the fact that we have not acted in the first instance.

The fact is that this House has produced final action on only five of 13 appropriation bills. We have the responsibility to finish all 13 of them. This is the worst record that the House has had in finishing its appropriations work of the last 15 years. The last time we had such a serious problem was the year after the Reagan tax cuts were passed and the Congress was trying to find ways, after those tax cuts resulted in huge additions to the deficit, to take additional money out of appropriations bills. So we got hung up in 1981.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield for a procedural comment, I made a request that there be 2 hours of debate once there is agreement in the House to this unanimous consent request that I have just propounded. This is a fascinating exchange that is taking place between the chairman of the Committee on the Budget and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations. I would like to think if we could accept this unanimous consent request to have 2 hours of debate, we could continue it under that procedure.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, so would I. But let me simply say we have been held up by the actions of the Committee on the Budget and the internal war in the Republican caucus for 8 months. We have been held up for the last 26 hours by the gentleman from Iowa and his concerns. With all due respect, I make no apology for taking 5 minutes to express my unhappiness about it.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I am not asking anyone to apologize. I am just suggesting we start the 2 hours of debate and continue this exchange.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, it has been my experience that not everybody following the debate fully understands the rules. The gentleman from Wisconsin knows them well, both the rules of the House and the rules of the Committee on Appropriations.

Is there any rule, law, statute, constitutional principle that in any way hinders this House from taking up appropriations bills whenever it wants because somebody else has not done anything?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, of course not. That is the problem. This House has ducked its responsibility for 8 months, and is now looking for a way to get out of town without having voted on the specifics.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HANSEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER)?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.J. Res. 111, and that I may include tabular and extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) each will control 1 hour.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG).

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation before the House, H.J. Res. 111, is a continuing resolution, a CR, for fiscal year 2003, and it extends our spending profiles for four big days.

At midnight this coming Monday, the fiscal year ends. None of the appropriations bills has been sent to the President's desk, regardless of who is at fault. We have heard some discussion on that. We will probably hear more about that. But we need this legislation to continue operations of the Federal Government for the first 4 days of the new fiscal year.

As everyone is aware, the Committee on Appropriations continues to work on the fiscal year 2003 appropriations bills, despite the fact that we have no common budget with the other body. The collapse occurred because we had a breakdown in the budget process, not the appropriations process. The budget process stalled because the other body did not adopt a budget resolution. The House did. But because both Houses did not, we had no opportunity to come to conference and reach the same 302(a) number, the 302(a) number being the top number that we would both use in our appropriations process.

Anyway, despite all of that, we continued to produce bills, and we have a number of bills in the queue ready to go when we are given the approval to bring them to the House floor.

I will comment again that without a common 302(a) number, the top number, it is nearly impossible to have a common 302(b) number for the respective subcommittees of the House and the Senate appropriations committees. It is unfortunate that this is the case, because one of the fundamental responsibilities of Congress is the power of the purse. I emphasis "responsibility." The guiding principles of checks and balances that the founders of our great Nation embodied in our Constitution is lost when the Congress does not complete its work with regard to government spending.

If I might indulge my colleagues in the House for just a moment by reading from Article I of the Constitution, it very simply says, "No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time."

That is in our Constitution. Unless we do this, we are failing to uphold our basic constitutional responsibilities.

It is unfortunate that our budget process broke down at a critical time for our country when we are currently at war against terror and when the security of our homeland is at risk. I do not believe the people who wrote the Budget Act ever intended that budget debates would get in the way of our national security interests.

The House has passed five of the 13 appropriations bills. We are currently in conference with the Senate on two of those bills, the defense and military construction bills. We are waiting to appoint conferees on the legislative branch bill.

The Committee on Appropriations has reported four other bills that are awaiting floor action, and that is the appropriations bill for agriculture, energy and water, foreign operations and the District of Columbia. On Tuesday of next week we will conclude consideration of the transportation appropriations bill, and next week we also plan to report the VA–HUD bill from the Committee on Appropriations.

But until we get to the point where we can develop a common set of numbers between the House and the Senate for us to work with, it is important that the operations of our government agencies continue without any disruption, and that is what this legislation is about today.

Let me briefly describe the terms and conditions of the CR. It will continue all ongoing activities at current rates, including supplementals, under the same terms and conditions as fiscal year 2002. We have codified the term "rate for operations not exceeding the current rate" as defined in OMB Bulletin No. 01–10. As in past CRs, it does not allow new starts, and it allows for adjustment for one-time expenditures that occurred in fiscal year 2002. It restricts obligations on high initial spend-out programs so the annualized funding levels in this bill will not impinge on our final budget deliberations.

It includes eight funding or authorizing anomalies, of which six allow for the continuation of existing programs and fee collections that would otherwise expire. The remaining two provisions will ensure that executive agencies use the Government Printing Office when procuring government printing, as specified under current law and to ensure that funding for all of the uniformed services to support the accrual contribution for Medicare-eligible retiree health care is available.

After some of the discussion, Mr. Speaker, this may come as a surprise to some, but I believe the CR is noncontroversial, and I urge the House to move this legislation to the Senate quickly so that our government will continue to operate smoothly and efficiently and so that we can continue our work to finish our regular appropriations bills when we are able to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST).

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I expect this short-term continuing resolution will pass the House by an overwhelming bipartisan majority. But make no mistake. When it does, it will represent an overwhelming bipartisan indictment of the failures of this Republican House of Representatives.

The fiscal year ends next week, and this Republican-controlled House has passed only five of the 13 appropriation bills. The gentleman who just spoke, the chairman of the committee, is an honorable man and his committee has been doing its work. His own leadership has prevented him from bringing the appropriation bills to the floor even though those bills have been reported out of his committee. Republican leaders have stopped even trying to do their work. They have given up on doing the most basic job Congress is elected to do, fund important initiatives in education, health care, and other key American priorities.

It is a shocking abdication of leadership, Mr. Speaker. America is suffering through the weakest economy in 50 years. Unemployment and the poverty rate are up while the stock market and retirement security is down. For too many Americans, the drop in the stock market has turned 401(k) plans into 201(k) plans, but while millions of Americans are busy looking for jobs, House Republicans refuse to do their jobs, the jobs they are getting paid to do.

What accounts for this shameful failure to lead, Mr. Speaker? Simply put, Republicans have put America in a huge deficit ditch, one that poses a grave threat to Social Security and other priorities like education, prescription drugs, and homeland security, and now they refuse to pick up the shovels and dig their way out of it. We can see it most clearly on education. With much fanfare last year, Democrats and Republicans passed the No Child Left Behind Act, but now Republicans refuse to provide schools with the resources they need to carry out the reforms Congress mandated last year.

That is why the appropriations process is stuck in the House, Mr. Speaker. The majority of the House Republican Conference wants to gut resources for education and other priorities in the bill funding the Departments of Labor, Education, and Health and Human Services. But a few moderate Republicans are afraid to take that vote on the eve of the election.

Over the past week, Mr. Speaker, Republican leaders have turned the House floor into little more than a PR vehicle for the Republican Party. They have wasted time and taxpayers' dollars on numerous, meaningless resolutions. Mr. Speaker, Americans are facing real challenges right now. The economy is weak, prescription drug prices are still sky high, the budget is in deficit, and many Republicans want to privatize Social Security. It is time to quit playing politics. It is time to get back to doing the American people's business.

Free the Committee on Appropriations. Let them bring their bills to the floor. What is the leadership on that side afraid of?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve my time for just another couple of minutes if the gentleman could proceed.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 14 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a serious time for the country. In 2 years' time we have seen a record surplus go to record deficits, almost 2 million people more out of work today than there were a year ago, a year and a half ago. Economic growth is more anemic than at any time in 20 years. Corporate marauders have swindled investors and ruined workers' pension plans. The stock market has lost more than $4 trillion in value, and the price of health care and prescription drugs is skyrocketing. And almost nothing is being done about that by the American people's government.

We also are conducting a war against terrorism, and now we are considering taking on a new war against Iraq. In the midst of all of that, because of an unreal and incredibly mismanaged budget, this Congress has passed only one of 13 appropriation bills, and that means that 90 percent of our domestic budget is likely by the end of next week still to be unfunded.

Even the defense budget is not funded at this point; we hope it will be funded next week.

Under these circumstances we need to work together; we need a cooperative spirit. The last time we went to war against Iraq, President Bush, Sr., consulted broadly, he respected differences of opinion, he set the tone for cooperation between the U.S. and our allies, between the U.S. and the U.N., between the executive and legislative branches of government, between the Democrats and Republicans who serve in this Congress. The result was that we had a spirited debate which I had the privilege to chair at that time; and after the vote, we all came together, united in purpose and in spirit.

But this time the situation is sadly different, and this President is taking a much different approach at a time when we need to keep discussion on a high plane. We have seen the report in The Washington Post yesterday which questioned the concern of the Senate Democrats about national security. The kind of rhetoric that we saw emanating from the President on seven occasions is divisive when it should be unifying, it personalizes issues that ought to be substantive, and it weakens this country's ability to find consensus at a time when we need it badly.

Now, the White House issued a limp apology yesterday and said "Oh, the President did not mean it; he was not talking about the Iraq debate, he was talking about homeland security." I would point out that when this President questions someone else's concern for national security because of their positions on homeland security issues, this is the same President who told me nose-to-nose in the White House that the bipartisan package that the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) and I were producing to buttress our homeland security programs after September 11 would be vetoed if we spent one dime more than the President had himself requested for homeland security.

This is the President who resisted our efforts to provide more money to the FBI so that we could end the disgraceful situation under which 50 percent of the FBI's computers could not even send a picture of a terrorist or a suspected terrorist to another FBI computer around the country.

This is the same President who resisted our efforts to add more funding for Canadian border security, when I stood in this well holding a traffic cone, saying that on many of the stations on the Canadian border, after they were closed at night, the only deterrent we had to terrorists crossing the border was a traffic cone. I am sure they were scared stiff of that.

This is the same President who resisted our efforts to strengthen funding for the Nunn-Lugar program to secure nuclear material in the former Soviet Union before it fell into terrorist hands.

This is the same President who resisted our efforts to add money above his budget request to protect our nuclear plants and to protect other sensitive Federal installations from terrorist attack.

Now, I have served with seven Presidents. I have never seen any President during all of that time, except Richard Nixon—the only President I ever saw use that kind of innuendo, questioning someone else's dedication to the security interests of this country was President Nixon.

The reason I am so passionate about this issue is because I get my dander up when people question any other public servant's commitment to this country's security interest. Because I come from the State of Joe McCarthy, and I saw how he denigrated the political debate in this country, and I think that no one ought to emulate that. Unfortunately, I think we have seen remarks that came pretty close.

I would also point out, it was not the other body of this Congress, if the President wants to know, it was not the other body that blocked funds that his own Secretary of Energy requested to protect the shipment of nuclear warheads down U.S. highways from terrorist attacks. Huge bipartisan majorities of this House and the other body approved those funds, but the President said no. It was not the other body of this Congress that blocked funds to bring the Federal Bureau of Investigation into the information age. Huge bipartisan majorities in both Houses of Congress approved those funds in the recent supplemental, but the President said no.

It was not the other body of this Congress that blocked funds to establish a global system of checking containerized cargo on cargo ships before they leave ports overseas rather than after they are on American soil in order to determine if they have radioactive material, chemical, or biological weapons, or other material that may be used to launch acts of terror. Huge bipartisan majorities in both Houses of Congress approved those funds, but the President said no. It was not the other body of this Congress that blocked funds to help the Immigration and Naturalization Service develop the analytical capability they needed to prioritize and track the thousands of illegal immigrants who were inside the United States and identify the ones that are likely to pose the greatest threat to the citizens of this country. Huge bipartisan majorities in both Houses of Congress approved those funds also, but the President said no.

It was not the other body of this Congress that blocked funds to help the National Weapons and Research Laboratories to make certain that they can defend themselves and their employees against cyberattacks and espionage conducted by terrorist organizations. Huge bipartisan majorities in both Houses of Congress approved those funds, but the President said no.

Despite all of that, I do not think we saw Democrats in either this body or the other body questioning the President's patriotism or his commitment to national security. We took those differences to be honest differences. The President owes us and the other body the same courtesy.

We all have obligations of conscience, and we should respect them, including the President of the United States. And we have other obligations. Because this House has not met those obligations, we are here today with this continuing resolution. Because at this point, this House, if we can quit blaming somebody else for a change, this House, not the other body, this House has passed only five appropriation bills out of the 13 required to finish our business.

This chart demonstrates what has happened every year since 1988. The worst record during that period from 1988 through today, the worst record we had was in 1991 when the House only finished 10 of its 13 appropriation bills, and in 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 years, the House finished all of them. This year, the House has done virtually nothing of its appropriations work, and that is not the fault of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and it is not the fault of the Committee on Appropriations.

It is because there is an internal war in the majority party caucus over one bill, the Labor, Health and Education bill. The conservatives in the majority party caucus do not want to see any appropriation bill brought to this floor until the education budget is brought to this floor and passed at the President's level, and the Republican leadership's dilemma is that they know they do not have the votes for that in their own caucus. Because the moderates in the Republican caucus know that the President's budget is inadequate, and they do not want to go home having stopped the progress we have made on education over the last few years.

Now, I will say one thing for the President. He has had a lot of photo ops. He has been in elementary schools more often than students over the past year, posing for political holy pictures with children promoting the No Child Left Behind Education Act. We passed that with large bipartisan majorities, and what that act said is that we are going to reform the education programs and then we are going to fund them. Well, we reformed them. Where is the funding? Before that act passed, this Congress, over a 5-year period, virtually doubled support for public education. But what budget did the President send down to match his talk as he goes from schoolroom to schoolroom, trying to create the image that he is putting education first in this country? The President's education budget brings to a screaming halt the progress we have made in expanding education funding over the past 5 years. He puts a financial freeze on education when we look at it on a per-student basis. That is not what my constituents tell me they want when I go home.

The reason this continuing resolution is here is for only one reason: it is because the majority party does not want to have to vote on the President's education budget before the election. The only group that appears to want to vote on it are the conservatives in the Republican caucus. But the rest of the caucus does not want to have to vote on the President's budget because they know they would vote no, because the President's rhetoric is not matched by his actions.

Mr. Speaker, the President is not putting our money where our mouths are, and I call that posing for political holy pictures. As far as I can see, the Nation's schools are regarded as the number one photo op for the White House political staff and the number one target by the White House budget staff. I would like to know which of those two groups our friends in the majority party are actually going to be supporting. But this CR is here because they do not want to have to vote on that issue. They do not want to have to expose their own chaos and their own different vision in their own caucus.

So I want to make clear to the leadership in this House, I will vote for this resolution today, this short-term continuing resolution, because we have no option if we are going to keep the government open. But I will not vote for an extended continuing resolution. I will not vote for a continuing resolution that allows this body to push these issues off until after the election so they can have a collective Republican duck. I will not do that.

This House needs to finish its business. It needs to pass the Labor-HHS bill, it needs to pass the transportation bill, it needs to pass the budget for science, it needs to pass the budget for defense. In short, we need to meet our basic responsibilities.

When all we can do is produce five of these 13 bills and then somehow blame the other body for the fact that we have not even seen these bills come up here, that to me is a confession of institutional impotence and a demonstration of political incompetence; and neither one of them ought to make anybody very proud.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute. I do so, number one, to say that I agree with some of the things that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has said, and I disagree with some of the things that he has said. I do want to thank him for helping us bring this resolution to the floor today, because it is essential. We have to pass this resolution, or Monday night at midnight the government closes down. I do not want that to happen. There may be some around here that want it to happen, but I am not one of them. But anyway, I do appreciate the fact that we finally have got this resolution on the floor.

But I also want my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), to know that I am not going to try to respond in kind on any of the political issues that might be raised today, because my job and my responsibility today is to move this CR through the House, get it to the Senate, and get it to the President.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding time to me.

I do not want to engage in the blame game; I just want to support the record that we have achieved in the past 6 years in terms of education. I think this is an outstanding record, and I must say, in fairness, that oftentimes or most of the time we have had the support of the minority party in doing this. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) is ranking in our committee, and has been very supportive.

Title I, aid to disadvantaged students. I think the important part that I want to say is that the record in education has been to help those really in need of help. Let us take Title I. It is up 62 percent from 1996, from $6.37 billion to $10.35 billion, a good record for this body that we can all take pride in.

IDEA, special education grants. These are young people who need help. It is up by 224 percent. That is a remarkable increase over the past 6 or 8 years.

We have tripled the funding for Federal reading programs from $300 million to more than $900 million. This is what the President promised to do. I think he deserves credit for that.

We have increased the Federal teacher quality funds by 35 percent to help States and local communities to train, recruit, and retain quality public school teachers.

I might say here, and this is almost a crusade with me, we should get a good teacher in every classroom, because if we ask any group, do you have some teacher that in your life has made a difference, without hesitation hands go up. That is why it is so important that we can continue the programs that will help the States and local communities to get good teachers in every classroom. No child will be left behind if they have a quality teacher.

Pell grants. This is help to those from the low income to have an opportunity to get an additional education; it might be in a trade school, it might be in a college, a university, or whatever. We have increased them by 62 percent, from $2,470 to $4,000 in fiscal year 2002. That is a credit to this Congress, that it has recognized the importance of helping these young people.

Head Start, another program to help those who are less advantaged, we have increased it by 83 percent over the past

6 years. I think it is a record to be proud of.

We have increased Federal aid to America's Historically Black Colleges and Universities by 144 percent.

Mr. Speaker, we want to continue this record because I think education is the most important responsibility, in cooperation with the States and the local communities. We need to have an educated population if we want to compete in the world of tomorrow, if we want to give the people of this Nation an opportunity, the young people.

I would also like to point to the record in Health and Human Services. We have supported dislocated worker employment assistance. It grew by $271 million to $1.4 billion, again, helping those who need a helping hand.

Community health centers. They delivered needed medical services to over 10 million patients in fiscal year 2001, and it grew by 77 percent since fiscal year 1996.

Support for the Centers for Disease Control. We suddenly discovered after 9/11 how important the Centers for Disease Control were to this Nation, and they deal with infectious diseases. They are the traffic cop that stands between us and the incursion of many different types of diseases in our society. It grew by 400 percent; again, something that helps people all across the Nation.

The Centers for Disease Control's chronic disease prevention, it has grown by 178 percent.

Medical research by the National Institutes of Health: a commitment was made about 4 years ago or 5 years ago that we would double their budget. We have kept that commitment, and we would hope to do that again in this fiscal year. They have supported nearly 37,000 research projects. That is important. That is important to people, because out of those research projects will come cures, will come ways of helping individuals.

If Members could sit in the committee that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) and myself are responsible for and listen to the testimony, they would realize how important it is to the people of this Nation, and parents with children that need help; people with Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, you name it, we have heard from them in our subcommittee, and we have tried to help by enhancing the programs of the National Institutes of Health and many others.

All I want to say to this body is that I think we have an excellent record we have accomplished on a bipartisan basis over the past several years, and particularly since the Republicans have had the responsibility for the programs as the majority party.

But in fairness, I also want to say, we have had help in getting this record accomplished. We would hope that we will have the same kind of help. We know that we cannot do everything, that the resources are not as great as they might have been 3 or 4 years ago.

I think one of the things we need to do is take a look at all the money we have poured into these programs and say, is it being spent wisely? Is it getting results? Is it producing value received to the taxpayers of this Nation? What we are trying to do in crafting these appropriations bills is to ensure that we are getting value received; that we are using the money wisely on behalf of the people who need the help.

I would reiterate again that these programs help all Americans. They are not limited to any single group. Illness strikes at all types in our socioeconomic strata.

Education is important, and we have had a real concern in making sure these programs serve the people. I think that is a record we can point to with pride, and I hope that we can work out appropriation bills that will continue this record of great service to the American people from every walk of life.

Under Republican leadership, America's proven education programs have thrived. In the past several years, Republicans have:

Increased Title I aid to disadvantaged students by 62 percent—from $6.37 billion in FY 96 to $10.35 billion in FY 02.

Increased special education grants to states (Part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, or IDEA) by 224 percent—an increase far larger than under Democrat controlled Congresses.

Tripled funding for federal reading programs from $300 million to more than $900 million, as promised by President George W. Bush.

Increased federal teacher quality funds by 35 percent to help states and local communities train, recruit, and retain quality public school teachers.

Increased the maximum Pell Grant award by 62 percent—from $2,470 in FY 96 to $4,000 in FY 02.

Increased Head Start funding by 83 percent—from $3.569 billion in FY 96 to $6.538 billion in FY 02.

Increased federal aid to America's Historically Black Colleges and Universities, Historically Black Graduate Institutions, and Hispanic-Serving Institutions by 144 percent—from a combined total of $140 million in FY 96 to $341 million in FY 02.

Support for dislocated worker re-employment assistance grew $271 million, to nearly $1.4 billion since FY96;

Support for Community Health Centers, which delivered needed medical services to an estimated 10.5 million patients in FY2001, grew $587 million, or 77 percent, since FY96 helping CHCs serve 2.4 million more patients over six years;

Support for CDC's work in tracking, understanding and controlling new and re-emerging infectious agents grew $282 million, or over 400 percent since FY96.

Support for CDC's chronic disease prevention activities, in areas such as breast and cervical cancer prevention, diabetes control, and cardiovascular disease prevention, grew $479 million, or 178 percent, since FY96;

Support for medical research administered by the National Institutes of Health grew $11.5 billion, or 97 percent since FY96. NIH estimates that they will support nearly 37,000 research/project grants in FY2002, over 11,000 more than they supported in FY96;

Support for Head Start grew nearly $3 billion, or 83 percent, since FY96. During FY2002, the Administration estimates Head Start will serve over 100,000 more children aged 3 to 4 then it did in FY96; and Support for helping low income Americans in meeting their heating costs through the LIHEAP program grew $1.1 billion, or 120 percent since FY96.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is certainly a friend of education and health care; but I would simply point out that the issue is not what we have done last year, it is what we are going to do next year.

We still have not seen a bill produced by the majority, and the President's budget for health care cuts back $1.4 billion in crucial health care programs outside of NIH. It essentially fails to provide anywhere near the support level that is needed for programs that help low-income students, for programs that help the handicapped, and for children who need help with second languages.

So there are going to be thousands of children, indeed, left behind by the President's budget, and we would like to correct that, but we cannot get the Republican majority to bring a bill to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA). I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) is a friend of education. Also, he is the chairman of our subcommittee.

What I think most of us feel on the Committee on Appropriations is our Republican colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations want positive investment in our country. They are not the problem, but the leadership of the Republican Party is the problem. Frankly, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget this year and in past years is the problem.

Now, let me tell my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, about education. The irony is that my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, would stand and say, look what we have done since 1995 on education. What we have done on education is, under the leadership of Bill Clinton, he said, I am not going to sign bills that underfund education.

What were those bills? Let me read them to the Members so in the future the Members will know, because I know if the gentleman knew this, he probably would not have made this representation.

The Republican bill offered to this House in 1996 was $5 billion under the President's request. That did not end up that way.

In 1997, the Republican bill offered $2.8 billion under the President.

In 1998, it was a Presidential election year. The Republican leadership, wanting to elect its own, came in with a bipartisan bill. It was just $191 million under the President. However, in the next year, it was over half a billion dollars over the President.

In the year 2000, the Republican bill was $1.4 billion under the President; and in 2001, it was $2.9 billion under the President. By the way, the bills were not as harsh as the budget.

So, Mr. Speaker, yes, over the last 8 years we have been generous to education, and we have in fact said not only are we rhetorically going to leave no child behind, but we are going to fund programs to seek that end.

The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) put up a chart here, it is now over there, but essentially it shows 15 years of activities of the Committee on Appropriations, and more importantly, the House committee, in passing appropriation bills.

Over those 15 years, we have averaged 12.2 bills passed before the end of the fiscal year. That is a 93 percent average. That is an A. This year, we are at 38 percent. That is a miserable failure; not the responsibility of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) or the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS) or others who chair the appropriations subcommittees, but it is the fault of a divisive leadership that wants to talk about being for programs but does not want to fund those programs; not only that, does not want to debate them on this floor.

This month of September we have not considered one appropriation bill on this floor, notwithstanding the fact that September 30 is at the door.

I, like the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), will vote for this continuing resolution, but like the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), I will also call to account those who put us in a position of being unable to debate the priorities of this Nation on this floor.

Like the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), I do not want my patriotism or concern for the security of this Nation to be called into question by this President, who is our leader and who ought to bring us together, not drive us apart.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to respond to my dear friend, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER). I want to assure him that however politically engaged this might become this afternoon, that none of my speakers will attack any of the gentleman's leadership. We had a lot of disagreements with the gentleman's leadership, but we are not going to raise those today. We have a strong leadership on our side and they have accomplished a lot in this Congress.

We did hit a couple of roadblocks dealing with the budget process, and as the gentleman knows, we passed a budget. Whether the gentleman likes it or not, we passed a budget in the House. That did not happen in the other body.

Secondly, I wanted to point out to my friend that the only two bills that we have had a request from the other body to go to conference on are the defense bill and the military construction bill. We in fact are in conference aggressively coming to closure on those two bills. With the exception of Legislative Branch appropriations, we have not had a request from the other body to go to conference on any other appropriation bills, including the ones that we have already sent down there to them.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM).

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my colleagues that in 1994, with a Democrat-controlled House, they passed an education bill $3 billion below President Clinton's request.

☐ 1745

I have heard tonight, well, let us stop pointing fingers. That is all I have heard from the other side, every single speaker, pointing fingers. You know why? Well, the President took control of the issue of education.

I have talked to Democrat pollsters; they are upset because the Democrat numbers are down on Education. This President has shown that he cares about education. He focuses on education. And education spending is not everything.

I would like to submit this for the record. It is what Secretary Paige showed, the number of increases in education spending but yet test scores have baselined. The education plan is more than just spending. We have increased education dollars, but we have also given the State the flexibility to move those dollars around where parents and teachers can make those decisions.

My colleagues on the other side want line items and every item increased so that they can mandate exactly what is done in the States, the paperwork increases, the mandates, the union bureaucracy. And the President said no, I want to give the States the flexibility where parents and teachers can make those decisions.

They also demand accountability. And with the accountability he also gave the superintendents and the State legislatures the ability to move money around, not line item it and mandate it. A hundred thousand teachers? We need teachers, yes. But we also put money in for the quality of education and teachers.

We have passed prescription drugs, and tax relief for working families. My colleagues only attack, oh, it is a tax break for the rich. Some of them have not found a tax they do not want to increase. In 1993 they increased tax on the middle class after they said they were going to reduce it. They taxed Social Security. They actually taxed gas. And, remember, there was even a retroactive tax in there and you cut veterans' COLAs. You cut military COLAs, if you want to talk about history.

And I want to tell you, I would question somebody who used our military as White House waiters. I would question someone who would send our people into harm's way. I questioned a Republican President who sent our people over in Lebanon and let them sit there. But I sure question President Clinton on a lot of the things he did that in my estimation were not right.

Why are they doing this? Well, it is an election year, Mr. Speaker. Have you ever heard the name of James Carville and his colleagues? We have got the "Carville Report." What does he recommend to his Democrat pollsters? For the Democrats to stick close to the President on the war because if they do not, the numbers will go down. But they also requested that the Senate hold up bills, because in a bad economy they can hang on to the Senate. They also said we can pass things here like tax relief but to blast the Republicans on these issues. And I think you have heard every speaker over here do that. And it is just not the case.

We have passed prescription drugs here. The Senate has not. We have passed homeland security. And I tell you, I would question somebody that holds up a homeland security bill insisting on union workers filling those billets instead of passing a homeland security bill. I think that is wrong. And I think it should be questioned.

I heard about border patrol. The gentleman from California (Mr. HUNTER) on this floor, when I first came, we fought to get more border patrol and we were turned down until we took the majority. And slowly in a bipartisan way in many cases, we got more border patrol to secure our borders.

It is sad to watch the things that are going on tonight because as a group we have done so many things. This President is a caring President. I want to tell you, he has brought credibility, he has brought character to the White House that was not there before. Is it not nice to see a President who can actually look at his wife and say, I love you and mean it?

The economy is growing. It is growing by 3 percent. Alan Greenspan said that the economy has grown by 1.5 percent because of tax relief for working families. My colleagues say it is just for the rich; it is an election year.

Inflation is low. Interest is low. But yet there is not confidence in the market. The Senate has not passed the Employee Protection Act that would protect them from cases of Enron and WorldCom. We need to pass that bill, to bring that confidence up. And that has not been passed by the other body; and I think that is wrong.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HANSEN). The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, the speaker has just violated the rules of the House with regard to references to the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The characterizing of the Senate inaction is not in order.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, they have not passed the bill that should be in order. They have not passed the bill.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, the point of order I raised was not when the gentleman referred to inaction, but when the gentleman characterized that inaction and gave a value judgment to the inaction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman in the well will proceed in order.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I do not believe I have done that, Mr. Speaker.

But I will tell you, an energy bill is critical. The Senate has not passed that bill. An economic stimulus package is critical which helps us in education. The Senate has not passed that bill.

The Senate according to the Carville memo did not pass its budget, not mine. Why? Because they can offer a trillion dollars in a prescription drugs program.

MR. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), the distinguished whip.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished ranking member for yielding me time and for his great leadership on behalf of America's families. I also commend the distinguished Chair of the Committee on Appropriations for his leadership and the two of them for bringing this continuing resolution to the floor.

The sadness of it all, though, is that the continuing resolution is needed at all. For the weeks that we have come back here from the summer August break, this Congress has been in session from Tuesday night until Thursday afternoon. We have had plenty of time if we had worked a full week to do the people's business, to pass the appropriations bills that are our responsibility by the end of this fiscal year and the start of the new one.

Instead, we are here passing a short-term continuing resolution, and there will be another one and there will be another one because this House has ignored the needs of the American people, the needs for a growing economy, for prescription drug benefits, for access to quality health care, for educating our children; and that is the point on which I would like to focus.

I rise on behalf of America's children who deserve every opportunity we can give them and on behalf of their parents who deserve to know just where the parties really stand as opposed to what they say they stand for.

Nowhere is the contrast between Republican rhetoric and Republican reality so stark as in the oft-repeated promise to "leave no child behind."

The reality is that the Republicans want to cut our investment in education to a level far below what is authorized in the Leave No Child Behind Act, $7 billion less of an investment than that which was promised by the President. Despite countless Presidential photo ops and despite the little red school house built outside the Department of Education at massive tax payer expense, I might add, the reality is that the Republican Party plans to leave millions of children behind.

The fact is that the Republicans do not want to debate appropriations bills because they do not want the public to see that their education budget would underfund the No Child Left Behind Act, which the President heralded as his great achievement by $7.2 billion, and that is the President's recommendation and that is why some Republicans will hold up this bill from coming to the floor.

The President's education budget stops in its tracks 6 years of steady progress in Federal support to local schools, dead in its tracks. The investments in education under this budget are down to less than 1 percent. How are we going to grow our economy if we will not grow our investment in public education?

There is no tax cut you can name or benefit or credit or anything that you could name that grows the economy more than investing in education. There is nothing that is more dynamic to the budget than investing in education. We are not only doing a disservice to the children, we are doing a disservice to the taxpayers. There is nothing you can name that would grow the economy more than investing in education.

All the research, Mr. Speaker, tells us that children do better in smaller classes and, indeed, they do better in smaller schools. And yet the Republicans want to freeze funding for these cost-effective programs. What they have in the budget is enough to provide, for example, after-school programs to only 8 percent of the 15.2 million low-income children who could benefit from them.

I refer you to this chart. Look at this. We are gaining in enlightenment. We are giving after-school guidance for children. It is good for their education. It is good for their health. It is good for their future. And here we come into this budget and take a downturn in after-school programs for America's children. This is really, really a tragedy. We cannot turn our backs on the millions of children who just last year we were promising to rescue, and we cannot turn our backs on the economic future of our great country. When we make a decision in this body we should think of America's children. We should think of growing our economy. There is a commonality of interest.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the very distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), who is the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce and who authored the outstanding education bill last year, H.R. 1.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, the rhetoric we are hearing from our friends across the aisle is not about children. This is all about politics. And when it comes to education funding or any other kind of funding, our Democrat friends this year have no budget, no plan, and no credibility.

Now let us just look at the facts. In the House the Democrats voted against the President's budget but did not even offer an alternative of their own. In the Senate they even failed to pass any budget at all. The first time since 1974 that has happened.

Now, let us take a look at what columnist David Broder wrote recently: "When the House is debating its budget resolution," Broder wrote, "the Democrats proposed no alternative of their own." He went on to say, "Rather than fake it, House Democrats just punted," Broder wrote. "The resolution is designed to be the clearest statement of a party's policy priorities, and as long as they are silent the Democrats cannot be part of a serious political debate."

I think David Broder is right.

So I say to my Democrat friends, if you are going to stand here today and say you are for additional education spending, you better be prepared to tell the American people how you plan to get there. Fortunately, President Bush has given us a budget this year that continues to make education a priority even in the face of war and economic turmoil.

As you can see by this chart, President Bush's budget this year proposes far more for education than the last budgets proposed and signed by President Clinton. In fact, Federal funding for education has more than doubled over the past 6 years. Discretionary appropriations for the Department of Education have climbed from $23 billion in fiscal year 1996 to $49 billion this year, an increase of 113 percent.

Now, as you can see by this chart, special education, the Republican budget provides for another billion dollars' increase in special education grants to the States, and calls for full funding of IDEA over the next 10 years. This is almost a 300 percent increase over the last 7 years.

Democrats did not offer a budget to help children with special needs. They have no budget. They have no plan, and they have no solution.

Now, let us look at title I for a moment. For disadvantaged students in school, the Republican budget provides for a billion dollars' increase in title I grants. Now this is on top of the $1.6 billion increase that we passed and was signed into law earlier this year. These resources are focused in on high-poverty schools and kids who are in poor neighborhoods who need our help. Democrats have not offered a budget to help low-income school districts or kids. They have no budget. They have no plan and they have no solution.

Now, here is something else to consider. As this chart shows, under the first 2 years of President Bush's Presidency, we will have seen greater increases in title I funding than in the previous 7 years combined.

The last 2 years of the President's budget, last year and this year, are greater increases than in the last 7 years under the previous President.

Let us not forget about teachers, the people responsible for our kids in the classroom. For teachers, the Republican budget provides $2.85 billion, matching the historic increase the President signed into law last year. This is a 38 percent increase over the last Clinton budget.

Democrats have offered no budget to help America's schoolteachers. They have no plan, they have no budget and they have no solution. Despite the twin challenges of war and economic recovery, the President's budget this year expands funding for all of our educational priorities, and so I say to my friends on the other side, if they have got a better plan, why do they not show us?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes. The previous speaker leaves a false impression in the House because of his constant reference to budget resolutions rather than appropriations. Budget resolutions do not provide one dime for students. Appropriations bills do.

The fact is despite the fact that the President of the United States made a big thing out of being for the No Child Left Behind authorization bill, there will be hundreds of thousands of children left behind under the budget that he proposed, which does not in any way match that original legislation. Example: Special education, the budget he proposed this year is one-half billion dollars below what it would have to be to meet the promises of the Individuals with Disabilities Act.

In Title I, they are $4.6 billion below where they would have to be in order to meet the promised funding level under the No Child Left Behind Act, and even the small $1 billion increase in that package is paid for by cuts in other programs that affect the very same children who need help the most, and then you have in addition the President cutting the comprehensive school reform program by 24 percent, eliminating the smaller schools appropriations.

So then if you take the children who are most at risk, because they have difficulty with languages, this budget on a pupil basis provides a 10 percent real reduction in programs to help children who have trouble with the English language. No child left behind, it sounds nice. Why do you not back it up with your money?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is so proud of that which he has done in his budget and his bill, why does he not bring the appropriations bill to the floor? Why does it languish for the last 8 months in committee? Why do they say to me we do not have the votes for the bill on our side of the aisle if what he says is so true?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, let me respond to my colleagues and say that we worked closely together in a bipartisan way to produce the No Child Left Behind Act, and it was truly the most bipartisan bill this Congress has produced, and I am proud of my relationship with my good friend the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), who worked closely with me and all of my colleagues to produce it.

We put huge increases in place last year, and my colleagues have to understand that the increases that are in this year's budget are on top of the increases in last year's budget. We have offered a budget. We have a plan. My colleagues have no plan. They brought no budget to the floor. They are ducking and hiding from the issues how.

Now where is the bill? The fact is we have a plan. We have a budget. Show us yours. We have not seen it yet.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), a strong member of the strong leadership team in the House.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate the gentleman from Florida's work and what he has been able to accomplish, and I understand the dilemma that he is facing, and I can answer the question where is the bill.

You cannot reconcile with an addict. The Senate did not pass a budget. Therefore, they are spending with addiction. They are addicts. They are spending like I have never seen before. When we have a budget that we have to adhere to in the House, you cannot reconcile.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HANSEN). Members will avoid improper references to the Senate during this debate.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that.

When you try to reconcile a bill against with having a budget, it cannot be reconciled with a bill that has increased spending with abandon. It is amazing, Mr. Speaker, that they do not understand that.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) will avoid improper references to the Senate.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, this surge of aggression from the other side of the aisle is simply the bitter fruit of a strategy to stymie, frustrate and defeat fiscal discipline at every turn. My colleagues from the other party are infuriated.

Mr. Speaker, I am speaking about Members of this House.

My colleagues from the other party for this House are infuriated that our Republican House majority is a dike holding back waves upon waves of new Democrat nonsecurity spending. That is not how it used to be around here. They ache to restore the tax and spend policies that robbed the Social Security Trust Fund for decade after decade after decade after decade when the Democrats controlled this Congress.

The Democrats ran the House and they fueled an irresponsible culture of spending that drove America's books deep, deep, deep into the red. They spent with abandon. They spent without restraint. They spent blindly. They spent more than the country could bear. They ignored the economic damage that their spending lust had created. They balanced their budgets on the backs of future generations.

The other party understands that they have to raise taxes to fund the huge new spending programs that their big spending caucus demanded. Our Republican insistence on lowering, not raising, taxes makes them livid. They complain that lowering taxes causes the deficit, and one made mention that Reagan's tax cut in the eighties created the deficit. For every dollar, revenues actually went up after that tax cut. The problem is for every dollar of new revenues coming in they spent two dollars.

The other party understands that and has a single all-consuming ambition, separating the taxpayers from more of their hard-earned dollars and swelling the size of government with waves of new spending, waves and waves of new spending.

The Democrat House leadership embraced the decision by the other body to proceed with no governing fiscal oversight called a budget. They attempted to do the same thing here, but unfortunately for the big spenders, the House of Representatives passed a budget. Let us shift our attention away from the specific points at issue. Let us consider things in the realm of the theoretical.

For any theoretical elective body, the decision to proceed forward without a governing budget would be foolhardy and grossly irresponsible. It would be a blunder of rank stupidity and extreme fiscal wantonness for any conceivable legislative body to rashly conclude it could sustain fiscal discipline without a guiding and governing budget.

Our House Republican majority brought America back into the black. We brought back fiscal discipline. We even started paying down the debt. We are working with the President to hold the line on excessive nonsecurity spending, we are holding firm, and we are motivated by an undeniable truism: The dollars that Washington spends belong to the taxpayers. We respect their hard work. We appreciate the taxpayers' ability to spend their own money better than Washington, D.C., and we are extremely hostile to any scheme that would separate a single taxpayer from any additional dollar.

Our friends on the other side of the aisle see 180 degrees differently. The truth is the House Republicans are completing America's business and we are doing it responsibly within a fiscal framework that preserves fiscal freedom.

The hostility directed against us today flows from the bitter hunger pains of an insatiable appetite for new wasteful spending.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, we have just been told by the majority party whip that he is holding back an ocean wave of spending. Well, what is it that he is holding back? What is he using his hammer to hold back in his own caucus? He is using his hammer in order to prevent this House from voting on the education and health appropriations bill. He has his ideological views and he has assessed the votes in his own caucus and he has decided he does not even have the votes in his own caucus to squeeze down education as much as the President wants to do in his own budget.

If The Hammer, as he is known on that side of the aisle, if the gentleman is so confident that he can prevail, then why do you not allow the committee to bring up the Labor-Health-Education bill? I wrote to the Speaker and I said, Mr. Speaker, you have got a fight between your conservatives and your moderates and so you are hung up and so you do not want to bring a bill up because you cannot guarantee an outcome, why do you not simply bring the bill to the floor and let us let the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) offer the President's budget, which he tried to do, let your Republican caucus offer any other alternative they want, and then let us offer an alternative we want and let us see which package wins? The reason you will not bring the Education bill to the floor is because you know you cannot win it.

It is also because you know that your Members desperately want to avoid voting on the President's Education budget before the election. Why? Because in the last 5 years, we have delivered on average a 13 percent increase for education each year, and now you want to freeze it. Now you want to freeze it and your moderate Members know that that will not fly with the American people. It will not do any good for America's kids. It will not help build America's future, and it will not help you in the election.

Bring the bill out. That is what we are asking.

As for the Senate being responsible, the fact is that 90 percent of the domestic budget has not passed, and that is no fault of the Senate. You have only produced on this floor the smallest of the domestic appropriation bills and only the Treasury-Post Office bill has become law.

We are going to have a conference on Defense next week but you have abdicated your responsibility. The gentleman from Texas, I say to you, you have abdicated the responsibility as majority party whip to do the Nation's business. You say you have completed the Nation's business. Then why is it that 90 percent of the domestic appropriations are being bottled up by the majority party? Why do you not do your duty and bring those bills to the floor?

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to remind Members to please avoid improper references to the Senate.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining on both sides?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has 29½ minutes, and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) has 29 minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW), my distinguished colleague.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time.

One item that has been lost in this debate, which is truly important, I think one of the proudest moments in this House of Representatives was in 1996, when we passed a welfare reform bill. As a result of that, almost 3 million kids are now out of poverty. Millions and millions of people who otherwise would be on the welfare roll are on the payroll, and the welfare rolls in this country have been reduced by 60 percent, and that is why at the same time we are reducing poverty among kids. What greater accomplishment have we had?

That bill runs out the end of this month.

There will be no welfare and welfare reform can be forgotten. The $4.8 billion in child care will no longer be there. Four months ago on the floor of this House, we passed the extension. The Senate has not.

Part of this bill is to extend welfare reform so that the checks will continue to go out. The child care will continue to be there, the job training will still be there, and all of the good things that we passed in 1996 will remain with us. But it is going to be absolutely vital that we pass this continuing resolution because this would extend it for 3 months into next year. That is tremendously important because if we do not, there will be no checks going out.

The prediction that was made in 1996 when we passed welfare reform would come true and the poverty levels would skyrocket, the job training and all of the good that we did would be undone. The Senate has not acted on this most important piece of legislation, and it is one that I think all Members in one degree or another can support.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the House for passing welfare reform, and also urge that all Members tonight vote for this continuing resolution so that all the good that we did in 1996 is not lost.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON).

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I intend to support the continuing resolution that is before us today, but I must say that the administration's budget proposal in this body has not lived up to the commitment that we made to leave no child behind.

Yesterday, the Census Bureau stated that the proportion of Americans living in poverty rose significantly last year, increasing for the first time in 8 years. At the same time, the Bureau said that the income of middle-class households fell for the first time since the last recession ended, in 1991. In the last 2 years, 2 million more Americans have lost their jobs, and economic growth is at an anemic 1 percent, the slowest growth in over 50 years.

What has been the House's answer to this: Tax cuts, the ability to find another $100–200 billion for a possible war in Iraq.

A strong economy depends on a strong workforce, and that means educating all Americans and providing them with skills they need to be productive workers. Some Members of Congress seem to have a single focus, and that is keeping America strong abroad. But we have a dual responsibility, keeping America strong abroad and also keeping America strong at home. Education is the key to keeping America strong at home, and that is why I think we must finish our work here before we adjourn for the elections in November.

The title I program provides funds for school districts to help disadvantaged children obtain a high-quality education, and at a minimum, to achieve proficiency on challenging academic achievement standards established by the States.

The President's request for title I education is $4.56 billion below the $16 billion he supported and Congress supported in the Leave No Child Behind Act. The administration refused to request funding for title I school improvements funds, and last year over 8,600 schools, 10 percent across the country, were identified as failing to meet the State standards. With the additional funds promised by the Leave No Child Behind Act, school districts would have been able to hire an additional 92,000 title I teachers.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members to support this continuing resolution, but let us also focus on the need to fully fund education for our children.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. KINGSTON), a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, there is a sinkhole on the Capitol, not over here, but over there, a giant growing sinkhole. It is particularly hazardous to judicial nominees, to presidential appointees, and to presidential ideas or initiatives in general. It is very hazardous to legislation, hazardous to the budget. In fact, the only thing that seems to get through this giant sinkhole are memos from Barbra Streisand; but that is an improvement, I would say, over contacting Eleanor Roosevelt, as we were doing a couple of years ago to get our instructions.

Now, this sinkhole ate up the budget this year. There is no budget. Where there is no budget, every day is Christmas.

I have four wonderful children. I love my children, like just every Democrat and Republican here. We all love our kids, but my kids have all kinds of ideas about how I ought to be spending my money. For birthdays, they want a golf cart, Jetskis, CDs, and if they are older, they want a car. None of them quite wanted the pair of tennis shoes that I bought and wrapped so carefully. The reality is, they think I am a U.S. Senator, and every day is Christmas when we do not have a budget.

So here we are forced to pass a continuing resolution because we cannot deal with some group that does not have a budget. That is bad enough, but here are some other bills. We are at war. As I speak, as we sit here, we have troops in Afghanistan and Pakistan and all over the Middle East, and yet we cannot get a homeland security bill passed. We cannot get faith-based initiatives passed. The House has passed 51 bills which have not been passed by the other body. There is no bipartisan Patient Protection Act. There is no human cloning bill. I can understand that because some of them do not want more of us, and a lot of us do not want more of them. Maybe that one I can understand their hesitancy.

They have not passed Personal Responsibility, Work, and Family Promotion Act, or welfare reform. We had 14 million people on welfare 3 years ago.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HANSEN). The gentleman from Georgia will suspend.

Members must avoid improper references to the other body. That is the rule of the House.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. Now there is no doubt who I am referring to; and that same other body has not passed the Child Custody Protection Act, the Internet Freedom and Broadband Deployment Act, the Small Business Interest Checking Act, the Sudan Peace Act, the Coral Reef and Coastal Marine Conservation Act, the Rail Passenger Disaster Family Assistance Act, the Medicare Regulatory and Contracting Reform Act, the Two Strikes and You're Out Child Protection Act, the Anti-Hoax Terrorism Act, the Class Action Fairness Act, the True American Heroes Act, the Jobs for Veterans Act, the Social Security Benefit Enhancement for Women Act, the Child Sex Crimes Wiretapping Act.

Mr. Speaker, all this stuff the House has passed, 51 pieces of legislation which languish in this giant sinkhole on the other side of the Capitol. It is disgraceful.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair reminds Members not to characterize action or inaction in the other body.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, it is not the other body that has prevented this House from bringing out the Labor-Health and Education budget, or the Science budget, or the Housing or Transportation budget. It is the fact that the majority caucus is wrapped around the axle because they cannot get an agreement on any approach that will bring those bills to the floor and allow them to pass them. That is what the problem is.

Now we have an effort to shift the blame somewhere else. I guess that is the normal course of action around here. That does not make it right.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I love this House of Representatives, but I do not like us when we do not do our work. The reason we are here tonight is because we have not done our work. We have not passed the 13 appropriation bills in this body, and we would have all of the complaints in the world had we done our work. We have not done our work.

It is amazing the speeches I have heard defending the budget and the fact that we do not have a budget on this side of the aisle. Some of us did. We were denied an opportunity to debate it on the House floor. Some of us had a budget. We did not like the budget that has now given us $317 billion of new deficits.

Conveniently, the majority whip came on the floor and talked about 10 years ago. What about right now? We are here tonight discussing a budget that has given us $317 billion of new deficits and will spend Social Security trust funds for the next 10 years. Forget the last 40, worry about today. That is when we can do something about it. The other side is in the majority.

Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel with the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) or the gentleman from Iowa (Chairman NUSSLE), but the gentleman from Texas who stood down here a moment ago and made that eloquent speech of untruths reminded me of the Will Rogers quote when he said, "It ain't people's ignorance that bothers me so much, it's them knowing so much that ain't so is the problem."

Mr. Speaker, we talk about the Reagan tax cuts. I was here. For the 12 years of Reagan-Bush, never did the big spending Democratic Congress, other than 1 year, spend more than Presidents Reagan and Bush asked us to spend; and yet, conveniently, the rhetoric tonight says it was us that did it.

Conveniently, we are letting some of the real budget rules that allowed us to do some good things on budget expire September 30, and the same leadership that comes down and makes the speeches they made a moment ago are directly responsible for allowing pay-go to expire, to allow discretionary caps to expire.

Let me make out one relevant point tonight when we talk about spending, as so many Members on the other side of the aisle keep talking about Democratic spending, the difference between the House and the Senate; the difference we are talking about on the appropriators is $9 billion. That is the difference that has kept the leadership from bringing the 13 appropriation bills to the floor of the House and letting the House work its will.

We should at least keep the spending caps in. I feel kind of ridiculous arguing for that because we have ignored them all year, but if the other side had enforced the pay-go rules, we would have never passed the budget because we could not have passed the budget. Increasing the debt ceiling for our country was passed at midnight because the majority party did not want to stand up and acknowledge the fact that as they talk about paying down the debt and deficit elimination, the debt is going up. We are going to have to do it again, under the budget that everybody over on the other side is bragging about. If they are bragging about it, spend the appropriation bills out and pass them; but do not keep complaining about somebody else's fault. This House has not done its work. It is not the minority party's fault; it is the majority party's fault.

As a child, I always knew that if I started criticizing some trait about one of my playmates, Mother would soon be talking about "your own plank." Her shorthand reference was to the scripture which warns against pointing out the "speck" in someone else's eye when there was a huge "plank" in your own. I think we could use my mother on the House floor these days. There has been a lot of rhetoric about what the other chamber has not done but not much attention to some of our own shortcomings right here in the House. One of those shortcomings—the failure to renew budget enforcement rules—is very near and dear to my heart and, after years of defending those rules, I cannot remain silent today.

Circumstances have changed dramatically since we passed the Republican budget last year. The projections turned out to be too optimistic, revenues are much lower than expected, and we face tremendous new expenses for homeland defense and the war on terrorism and a possible war with Iraq.

Now that those projections have proven to be nothing more than empty hopes and unfulfilled promises, some of us think we should look honestly at our economic situation rather than continuing to view the world through faulty rose colored glasses. But the leadership on the other side of the aisle refuses to consider any adjustments to their budget policies.

At the very least, we should take action to make sure we don't dig the deficit hole still deeper. Instead, the Republican leadership is allowing the existing budget enforcement rules which impose some fiscal discipline on Congress to expire.

Over the previous decade, the budget enforcement rules were one of the more successful tools for establishing fiscal discipline and helping bring about budget surpluses. These rules set limits on the amount of discretionary spending Congress can approve and prohibited legislation which would have increased the deficit.

When these rules expire five days from now, there will be no limits on spending and no restrictions on the ability of Congress to pass legislation which makes the deficit even worse.

Considering spending bills during a lame duck session after the election without any rules imposing budget discipline is a recipe for runaway spending and higher debt.

Unless we renew our budget discipline, Congress will continue to find ways to pass more legislation that puts still more red ink on the national ledger.

Alternatively, enforceable spending limits would serve as a fiscal guardrail to help keep our spending within our means.

Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan told the Budget Committee that "Failing to preserve (budget enforcement rules) would be a grave mistake . . . the bottom line is that if we do not preserve the budget rules and reaffirm our commitment to fiscal responsibility, years of hard effort could be squandered.

Leon Panetta, who served as Chairman of the House Budget Committee and Bill Frenzel, the former Ranking Republican on the Budget Committee wrote a letter on behalf of the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget warning that: "The expiration of Budget Enforcement Act constraints on spending and revenue legislation is an open invitation to fiscal irresponsibility and an embarrassment to all that care about the budget process. . . . To let them expire now would send a terrible signal to an economy that is struggling for stability."

The Concord Coalition has warned that allowing budget enforcement rules to expire is "an open invitation to fiscal chaos."

Despite these warnings about the harm that could be done to the federal budget and the economy if we allow these rules to expire, the House leadership has resisted any efforts to extend these rules.

In my book, that's a mighty big "plank" in the House's eye.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. HERGER).

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, I urge support for this continuing resolution so that America's critical welfare reform programs and support for low-income families can continue. Welfare reform should not be forced to be part of this discussion today. The House passed a 5-year welfare reform extension bill this May. Fourteen of my colleagues across the aisle joined us in approving that bill. Now more than 4 months later, the Senate has still failed to act.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend.

The gentleman from California is reminded to avoid improper references to the other body.

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, if it were not for this continuing resolution, the greatly successful 1996 welfare reforms would expire just 4 days from now. What makes this prolonged lack of action so frustrating is that welfare reform has helped literally millions of families achieve remarkable progress in the last 6 years.

The 1996 welfare reforms were the greatest social policy change success story in history. The success is indisputable. Nearly 3 million children have left poverty. Employment by mothers most likely to go on welfare rose by 40 percent. Welfare caseloads fell by 9 million.

The continuing resolution before us extends for 3 months the important welfare programs depended upon by millions of low-income families. We should not have to be here today extending welfare programs, but the other body has failed to act; so we have no other choice. I encourage my colleagues to support this continuing resolution so millions of low-income families can continue to be supported in their efforts to work and support their families.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HANSEN). The Chair reminds the Members again that characterizing Senate inaction is not appropriate and is against our rules.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK).

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I am going to confess our inferiority. We have been here denouncing this continuing resolution, but we are not as good at denouncing continuing resolutions as some of the great figures in America's past.

I was here when Ronald Reagan really talked about a continuing resolution, when he said Congress should not send another one of these, when he belittled a continuing resolution of 5 days and 8 days and 9 days, then denounced the fact that Congress had passed none of the appropriations bills. That was Ronald Reagan holding up that continuing resolution as an example of government at its worst. How the Republican Party has fallen away from that ideal. Ronald Reagan was the one who said let us get the people's work done in time to avoid a foot race with Santa Claus. Santa Claus has gained on the Republican Party since he left.

The Republican Party is usually quite respectful of Ronald Reagan. Why this great falling away from the teachings of President Reagan to which they are usually so obedient? Do the Members know why? I hope Members listened to the speech from the chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education, who boasted about increased government spending, and then heard the speech from the majority whip, who denounced all those people who boast about increased government spending. That is the problem when the chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee gives a speech which is in fact denounced by the majority whip. That is why the bill cannot come up.

Let us be clear. There is no rule, there is no principle, there is no Constitution, there is nothing that interferes with this House bringing something up, and Members can violate the rules by denouncing the Senate all they want. It is irrelevant to anything except their disrespect for the rules of this House. It has nothing to do with whether or not we vote on bills. Indeed, they are illogical by their own rules because they ultimately boast about passing some appropriations bills and then complain that some mystical force has kept them from passing the others.

The fact is that rarely, rarely do I have to dissent even mildly from the gentleman from Wisconsin who has been such a magnificent articulator on this issue, but he said the problem is a fight between the moderates and the conservatives of the Republican Party. He knows that is a fight between Mike Tyson and Grandma Moses. The moderates in the Republican Party are lucky if they get the water cooler turned on. It is not the moderates. Here is the problem: it is the Republicans who voted for a tax cut, and then we had Afghanistan and Iraq and homeland security, and we now have demands on expenditures that are greater than the revenues.

I will pay tribute to those like the majority whip in his fervor and venom against government spending. He is prepared to bring government spending down to the level that would be consistent with the tax cut, but the other Republicans want to have it both ways. They want to vote for a tax cut, which reduces government revenue; and then they do not want to vote for a bill that would bring down the spending. So that is why we do not have the bill. We do not have the Health and Human Services bill or the HUD bill because they cannot admit how much they have made it impossible for the government to spend responsibly.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON), who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time, and I feel compelled to share a few words in this debate tonight.

I have dealt with budgets all my life. For 26 years I operated a business and I had a budget. In the family I had a budget. For 19 years I was in State government and we passed a budget every year. For 10 years I was a State appropriator; so I was very involved in the State budget. It had taken me a while since my 6 years in Washington to figure out our process because it is a lot more complicated, and I have often wondered why it was so complicated. But we all know the basic principles, that the House has to pass a budget and the Senate has to pass a budget, and we have to bring that together. And the process that I have learned to understand is the budget first is the framework of how much money we should spend. The Senate figures out how much money, and then we reconcile that figure and then we are all working off of the same spending plan. We only argue about how we spend it.

This is the first time that process has fallen apart. Our friends have not played in this process and so they have no rules of conduct, they have no limits on spending, so their proposals from the figures I have when you use the budget gimmicks of advance spending is up to close to $15 billion above the President's proposal.

We have had the war on terrorism; we had the rebuilding of our defenses. We have a stellar record of spending in the last few years for education which increased education spending 132 percent.

It seems to me it is the year that we both need to have a proposal that limits spending because we have a war to fight, we have our defenses to rebuild; and if we do not have some rules of spending, we will have deficits as long as we are around. The debate is about do we want to have deficits forever, or do we want to have deficits temporarily and get past deficit spending back to budgets that are surpluses? That is the big argument. If the other body plays by no rules and we have no way to reconcile how much money we are going to spend together, we can never reconcile our appropriation bills at the end of the process, in my view. That is pretty simple adding up the numbers.

So we now have a process where we have rules, they have no rules. We have a limit on how much we will spend so we can get beyond deficit spending down the road. They have taken the rules away so they can spend for anything they want to spend no matter what it costs so it will sound good for the election. Their process is about electing people. It is not about having our budget process work so the American people can know that we have been a little cautious in our spending because we have a war to fight and so that we can bring realism back to our budget process in the future and we can get back to surpluses where this country needs to be.

I rise tonight to say that it is time for these two bodies to reconcile their differences and get down to a budget process that has rules for both bodies.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For the benefit of the Members, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) has 18 minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has 21 minutes.

The Chair again reminds Members to please not characterize the actions of the Senate.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

I would simply like to say to the gentleman who just spoke, the worst thing that can happen in this town is when we believe our own baloney, and the fact is I have just heard a lot of it.

We hear speech after speech from the majority side of the aisle saying, It's them thar other guys on the other side of the Capitol what's caused this problem.

That is really not the problem. The problem can be summed up in a quote from Shakespeare: "The fault, dear Brutus, lies not in our stars but in ourselves."

I would say to my friends in the majority, you are in the majority. Act like it. Bring the bill to the floor. If you have got the votes, you have got the votes. If you do not, we will reach some other result. But do not stymie the Congress into paralysis and then govern by continuing resolution because you do not have the courage of your convictions. Bring the bills up and see whether the majority whip or other factions in the caucus win. The only reason the majority whip does not want to bring the bill up is because he knows he does not have the votes in his own caucus. I dare him to bring the Labor-Health-Education bill up. I dare him to put the President's budget on the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), ranking member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I have never heard such a sad, duplicitous argument from my colleagues on the other side as this one of why they cannot get their work done, why they cannot do the job that they were elected to do. They come out here and suggest that somehow it is everyone else's fault, but the fault lies within the Republican caucus.

I find it rather interesting on the eve of the time when so many in this House are so anxious to send our troops into harm's way to establish democracy and defend democracy, they are so afraid of democracy on the floor of the House of Representatives. Bring the bill out and let us vote. Somebody will win and somebody will lose. It may be a bipartisan coalition of moderates and Democrats or right-wing conservatives and conservative Democrats, I do not know. But bring the health and human services appropriations bill to the floor and let us vote. That is democracy.

This is supposed to be the most democratic of all places on the face of the Earth, and you want to manage it because you are afraid to be accountable for your votes. It was not too long ago when the President of the United States said when he signed the No Child Left Behind education reform that I had the honor of working with him on, along with the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce (Chairman BOEHNER), he said to the American public and he said to every audience as we flew around the country as he had multiple signings, if you will, he said, This is the way Washington should work. This is the way Washington should work.

The basic tenet of that bill at the request of the President of the United States was accountability. That bill holds State offices of education accountable, school districts accountable, chief State school officers accountable, teachers accountable. But now we have the Republican caucus, rather than bring out the funding for that bill, seeking to duck the accountability for the savage cuts that are going to happen if we kick this all over to March.

This is not theoretical. My colleagues in California on both sides of the aisle know that in the middle of March, if we have not done this bill, tens of thousands of teachers in California will get pink-slipped, their lives will be disrupted, school budgets will be disrupted. Most of these local governments and school districts will start the budgetary process in January; and by March, April and May they will be deep into their budget. But there will be no education budget. There will be no education budget allowing for the additional billion dollars for special education on which we have bipartisan agreement. There will be no education budget for the 350,000 additional title I children, the children in most desperate need of this money to get a decent education in this country. There will be no education budget for them. There will be no education budget for 350,000 children with disabilities.

Can you not see it in your heart to bring this budget to do your work to carry out the promise of the President of the United States, the promise of this Congress to the parents and to the children of this Nation that there would be a new day for education, there would be a system of standards and goals and accomplishments and, more importantly than anything, of accountability to the children and to the parents?

When? When will this Republican caucus get the courage and the pride to do the Nation's business?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PRICE).

□ 1845

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the audacity of the House Republican leadership in blocking the entire Federal budget in order to spare the President embarrassment and to cater to their most extreme right-wing members goes beyond anything I have ever seen or experienced in this body.

I was amazed in July when the House leadership caved in to the Conservative Action Team, putting the Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill in jeopardy. I wondered, how are Republican leaders going to pass this bill within the President's inadequate numbers? How would we get past this bill to the rest of the appropriations agenda before the new fiscal year began?

But, Mr. Speaker, it never occurred to me that Republican leaders would simply disregard the start of the new fiscal year and let the entire budget come crashing down, all to appease the most right-wing members of their caucus.

It is equally amazing that the President and his OMB Director are complicit in this strategy, apparently, or perhaps it is a lack of strategy, for in fact this is irresponsibility and dereliction of duty on a monumental scale.

What I never dreamed would happen has indeed happened, and the continuing resolution we are voting on today, covering not one bill or two, but the entire discretionary budget, is a monument to an extraordinary failure of leadership and responsibility.

This institutional breakdown is fraught with real consequences for real people. The No Child Left Behind Act, for example, was signed by the President amid great bipartisan fanfare in January. Yet, just weeks later, the President submitted a fiscal year 2003 budget that would cut the very education programs authorized in the new law. A continuing resolution will stall education funding and negate the effects of No Child Left Behind while the Bush budget would actually take us backwards.

The Bush budget reduces by 82 percent promised support for needy schools and students. Instead of increasing funding to help school districts meet the mandate that all teachers be highly qualified, the President's budget cuts teacher quality funding by 4 percent, eliminating training for 18,000 teachers.

Instead of providing increased support for after school centers to increase enrollment by 580,000, the President's budget would actually force 50,000 children to be eliminated from programs that provide safe places to learn after school.

Mr. Speaker, the House leadership has allowed a willful group of right-wingers to hold the entire budget process to their ideological agenda. This budgetary breakdown is a disaster, not only for this institution, but for the people we represent.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO).

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting on the floor now for hours, as many of you have as well. I do not relish saying the following, but I think that we have hit one of our all-time lows.

This is the House of Representatives, the place of the people. We are the political descendants, every single one of us, of this man here, George Washington, of Lafayette, of Lincoln, of Kennedy, of Reagan, of all of them. What has come of us, that we have descended into this?

I say to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), I respect you. You are a gentleman. You are a decent man. I respect the mainstream Republicans who have to deal with this nonsense daily by the only wing that dominates your party now, the right wing.

But the right wing is the wrong wing. The people of this country deserve to have their families taken care of by us. That is why we ran. We said to our respective constituents, whether they were Republicans, Democrats, Independents, we want to fulfill the dream of America for you.

Now, whether we agree or disagree about the approaches, we have the collective responsibility to bring the vehicles to this floor, and a continuing resolution means that there has been a collapse, a collapse of leadership.

I do not want to think of what Lincoln would say about the Republican whip and what he said. He is too busy hating Democrats. What about loving our country and moving an agenda forward?

I feel ashamed tonight. I feel ashamed that there is not enough leadership. Where is the Speaker? Where is the majority leader? We can do better than this. We can do better than this, and the American people will hold us accountable. This is a sad evening.

I will vote for the resolution, so the government does not shut down.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER).

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I am so honored to serve in the people's House and have taken such great pride in my service here over the past 12 years. I will soon be casting my last vote in this historic Chamber, and I remember casting my first 12 years ago on whether or not to go to war in the Persian Gulf. Members sat attentive, listening, applauding one another, Republican and Democrat. Whether or not they agreed with the Member's position, there was respect and comity.

Now, when this Chamber should be united, when that respect should be at an all time high, when we should be productive and working into the night, we are questioning one another's patriotism and calling one another names.

What is happening to this great institution? That night we went into the night, we worked for days. We did the people's work. Now we work 2 days. We cannot bring a housing bill to the floor, we cannot bring an education bill to the floor, we cannot have the great debates that this body has had over centuries.

Why can we not rise to the occasion, rather than putting this great body into reverse and going backwards at one of the most momentous and important times in our Nation's history? Let us pull together and work together and bring glory and hope to what Abraham Lincoln said was the last best hope of mankind. Let us come together and work together in a bipartisan way and do the people's work.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY).

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you, I am reminded of the coffee shop breakfast table where I ate breakfast every morning for 27 years. We have a motto, "Often wrong, but never in doubt."

It is a sad day, as previous speakers, have mentioned. We are Americans. We can do better. We can do anything. All we have to do is work together and do the right thing.

The facts are we have got more people in poverty now than we had 2 years ago. Middle income has gone down. The debt is $440 billion greater. The American people continue to get robbed every time they go to the drugstore by the criminal acts of the prescription drug manufacturers.

We have spent all of the Social Security and Medicare trust funds. It is all gone. We collected that money with a promise to the American people that we would take it and it would be there to pay your benefits when your time came. It is all gone. Those are facts. You cannot hide from them. You cannot make up something else. You cannot blame it on somebody else. That is the way it is.

It is also a fact, as I said in the beginning, that we are Americans. We can do better. This is a shameful event in the history of this House.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PHELPS).

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for allowing me the time to speak on this very important subject.

That we are asked to vote on a continuing resolution to continue something implies that which is in progress to reach a reasonable end, a resolve. I remember my father saying, "Don't start a job you can't finish." Well, that is what we are doing, if we are not careful. It is my hope that we can come together and resolve the differences before we throw in the towel.

I am not a quitter. I want to do everything possible that we can to come to a positive end.

Circumstances have changed drastically since we enacted the budget last year, the Republican budget last year. The projections turned out to be too optimistic. Revenues are much lower than expected, and we face tremendous new expenses for homeland defense and the war on terrorism and a possible war with Iraq.

But we have got to acknowledge that there is a problem. New situations call for new solutions. Do not point fingers at each other and say it will work itself out. We came here to do a job, the greatest deliberative body in the world, to debate the very differences that we have. Maybe it is about unions in one respect and business in another, but that is why we came here. Can we not as reasonable people reach a resolve on behalf of the American people, whom we are going to ask in a few days to reelect us? It is shameful if we cannot.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. TAYLOR).

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, like every one of you, I love my country, but I do not think we serve our country when we lie to the people who sent us here.

In the past month I have heard no one less than the Speaker of this House and the majority whip tell the American people we are paying down the debt. A question I pose to the both of you, if that is so, then why did this body schedule a vote in the wee hours of the morning when our constituents slept to raise the debt limit over $6 trillion? If that is so, why is our Nation $440 billion deeper in debt than 1 year ago today, and en route within the next week to have the single largest increase in our Nation's debt in one fiscal year?

Mr. Speaker, we have to pass this resolution tonight. But I want to very much commend the people in that party and the people in this party who are working with our budget chairman to try to rein in spending, because not one of you would go buy a car and say, "Let my kids pay for it." Not one of you would go buy a house and say, "By the way, I don't care what it costs, let my kids pay for it." That is precisely what you are doing.

By the way, it was a Republican House, a Republican Senate and a Republican President who signed the budget bill last year. Please do not tell me and please do not tell the people I represent that somehow your magical budget is going to solve that, because it was your budget that put us $440 billion deeper in debt in the past 12 months.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, while American servicemen and women are fighting the war against terrorism in Afghanistan tonight, and preparing for possible war against Iraq, it seems to me that the House could at least extend its present 3-day work week in order to keep from undermining the education of military schoolchildren. By not passing our education appropriation bill and by relying on this continuing resolution, this bill will basically prevent hundreds of millions of Federal dollars from going in November to public schools that have large numbers of military schoolchildren in them.

How can the House leadership explain to soldiers fighting 7 days a week in Afghanistan that the House cannot pass an education appropriations bill important to their children's education because that might just require Members of Congress to work more than 3 days a week? If the top Republican leadership has time to campaign in my district in Texas this weekend, then surely they can find time to schedule more than a 3-day work week in the House so that we can pass an education appropriations bill that is vital to thousands of Army parents in my district.

We have an obligation, Democrat and Republican alike in this House, to pass appropriation bills. That is our responsibility, Mr. Speaker, even if it requires more than a 3-day work week. We owe it to our military children and to their parents who sacrifice so much for our Nation to put this continuing resolution aside, get back to work, and pass an education appropriation bill.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN).

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, after 6 years on the Committee on the Budget, I am amazed at the debate I have heard tonight. I did not realize just how powerful that committee is. In the 6 years I have been on that committee, I have seen Members of the other party in this body and the other body waive the pay-go rules, waive the spending cap rules to accomplish whatever goal they want. But tonight, tonight we hear, because we do not have a budget resolution of both bodies, we cannot bring appropriations bills to the House floor.

Why is it that we can have an ongoing conference on the defense bill and the military construction bill but, somehow, we cannot even bring the Labor-HHS-Education bill to the floor, we cannot bring the science bill or the housing bill or any of those other bills, because the majority whip tells us, if we bring them to the floor, then we will have to go to conference and then the spending will go up?

But we are already in conference on other bills. It seems rather illogical to this Member that if we can do it on some bills, why we cannot do it on other bills.

What it is, Mr. Speaker, is that there is a small cadre in the House on the Republican side that are the last to realize that the economic program of this administration has been a failure, and rather than leaving us in surplus, we have wiped out over $5 trillion in surplus value, including that in the Social Security and Medicare trust funds. They are the last ones to realize it. The American people and the majority in the House and the Senate long ago did. We ought to bring those bills to the floor and finish our work for the American people.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO).

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, it is irresponsible for Congress to put off doing the people's business; it is irresponsible for the Republican majority to continue to ignore America's unmet needs, particularly our commitment to educating our children. From Head Start to teacher's pay, America's children, teachers and schools are being severely shortchanged by President Bush's budget and the majority's inaction. Mr. Speaker, 18,000 fewer teachers being trained, 33,000 fewer children in after-school programs, zero funds for repairing our crumbling schools, and only 9 months ago, we heard so much talk about how Congress and the administration would leave no child behind.

But now, with the smallest proposed increase in education since 1996, the President and the Republican majority are doing just that. Leaving our children behind is what happens when we underfund education by $7.2 billion.

This year programs funded under the No Child Left Behind Act are cut by $87 million, no additional resources to purchase books, to invest in teacher training. The President does take a lot of photographs with young children. When it comes to early childhood learning, we have heard soaring rhetoric, but not much else. Nowhere in the Bush budget does the Republican rhetoric ring more hollow. They have cut the Even Start program, supporting projects that combine early childhood education for children and literacy training for parents. By gutting Even Start, we leave whole families behind.

What we need to do is to stop taking pictures with children and provide them with the tools they need in order that they might succeed.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining 1½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House, the gentleman from Florida has the right to close; he still has a lot of time remaining, and so much may be said which we will not be able to respond to. But having said that, let me simply say that I think every Member of the House wishes the chairman well. He is being honored tonight for his leadership on bone marrow research, and I hope we do not tie him up too late here so that he can receive that award. I want to congratulate him for it. I think all of us in the House know that he deserves it, and his mother will be proud.

Let me also say, Mr. Speaker, we are simply here because this resolution will extend the ability of the government to function until October 4. It is then my understanding there is another plan to move us to October 11; and then after that, evidently, an effort will be made to move us past the election. I want the majority leadership to understand, I will not vote for a resolution that moves us past the election without doing our duty to pass the education bill, to pass the science bill, to pass the other appropriation bills that this House has a duty to pass. We should not sneak out of town before we have done our duty, especially our duty by the children of America.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House leadership to take the time afforded by this resolution to face up to their responsibilities to bring the Labor-Health-Education bill to the floor, as well as the other bills, so that the House can finish its business.

When we finish our business, then we can squawk about the other body. Until then, we have no claim in the world to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, anyone observing our debate this evening would think that we were engaged in some great political activity and that this bill on the floor was going to affect the politics of this body.

The fact of the matter is, we are only talking about a 4-day CR, and I would suggest that maybe some of us should save our ammunition for next week, because we are going to have to go through this all again next week, probably.

As far as it being a CR, someone might get the idea that it is a sinister development or a sneaky procedure. Except for the year that the gentleman from Wisconsin chaired the Committee on Appropriations, we have used CRs around here forever. So this is not something that is new; it has been used before, a number of times, many times.

But as strange as it might seem from all of this debate, this really is a bipartisan bill that we are debating here tonight. It is bipartisan because the gentleman from Wisconsin has worked closely with us to fashion this bill, and I do not want to get in trouble here with the rules of the House, but as well as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the other body, and the ranking Republican member of the other body; we all worked together to fashion this nonpartisan, bipartisan continuing resolution.

As I said, we are probably going to have to do this again next week, so if my colleagues have some other ammunition that they want to throw out, save it. Although I think everything that needs to be said has probably already been said, but let us see.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. I yield to the gentleman very, very briefly, because I have said there would be no other speakers.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would tell my friend from Wisconsin, if I was fighting in combat, I would want to fight against the best MiG driver there is; and as a political opponent and a friend, I think we have fought against one of the best MiG drivers here on the floor tonight, and I salute the gentleman.

I would just like to answer, and I do not think they will be controversial, two questions real quick. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS) asked how can we increase the debt. If you inherit a debt that is $5 trillion and you nearly spend $1 billion a day on just the interest of the debt, it grows. You can pay down $490 billion; but if it grows over the years, over $1 billion a day, it is going to get bigger.

The other thing I would say is to my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), whom I am very proud of as a colleague in California, who worked on the education bill, but I would ask him to take a look at what Governor Gray Davis is doing to education in California where every single district is being cut millions of dollars because of the energy crisis that was mismanaged.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is a continuing resolution to keep the government funded until October 4, which is 4 days into the fiscal year. It is a bipartisan bill, and I would urge that we vote it quickly, send it down to the other body so that we can get it to the President's desk.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we have not been able to deal meaningfully with the appropriations process. The fiscal year ends in a few more days and we have not completed our appropriations work. Indeed, we have barely begun. The Republican part has a split between its conservative and its more conservative members, which is keeping the remaining appropriations bills from being brought to the House floor for debate and action.

The funding of our federal departments and program is one of the most important jobs of Congress. We must honor our commitments to defend our country, educate our children, and protect the environment. I am willing to support this short-term continuing resolution. However, we must, sooner rather than later, face up to the consequences of a massive tax cut, more demands for security, and the impact of the wasteful farm bill, and get on with the job the American people expect of us.

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to take this opportunity to express my strong opposition to the idea of a long-term continuing resolution.

My colleagues, what have we done over the last few weeks? We've passed resolutions critical of the other body. Day by day, however, the start of the fiscal year approaches and the possibility looms that our inaction on the Labor-HHS bill will be felt in classrooms throughout American and by every school-age kid.

The House Republican leadership ought to stop pointing the finger at the Senate, and start crafting appropriations bills that are palatable to their own party.

Last year we passed and the President signed into law the landmark reauthorization of the ESEA, which calls for substantial increases in funding to ensure a quality education for every American child. The No Child Left Behind Act marked a new federal commitment to the education of our children.

It seems, unfortunately, that the Republican Leadership suddenly forgot everything it said as soon as we passed this bill.

The new ESEA law promised to provide school districts with 40% of the nation's average per pupil expenditure for each low-income student. Title I funding already does not meet the overwhelming need across the country, particularly in urban school districts, but ESEA was a step in the right direction.

The Republican budget, however, provides a mere $1 billion increase in Title I funding. This funding level is $16.7 billion below "full" funding for Title I under the new education law. Not only does this increase come on the backs of other programs, but it does not even keep up with inflation.

In New York City alone, only 30% of eligible low-income students were served by Title I in the last school year. This means that 326,000 students are being left behind. Under the Republican budget, even with the $1 billion increase, 256,000 eligible students will still miss out.

The failure to provide adequate Title I dollars runs counter to the historic No Child Left Behind Act, which promised to provide greater federal assistance to those schools serving the highest concentration of poor students. Regardless of location, the costs of educating children are similar in all schools. Under the Republicans' education spending bill, children will continue to be deprived of critical academic services.

Now it is the number one victim of Republican delays and intra-party squabbles.

Democrats will not allow after-school, teacher training, and school construction programs be put aside and underfunded until the spring of next year. Clearly, education must remain a recession-proof priority.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, although I support this continuing resolution, I want to sound a warning to my colleagues.

Last year, many of us proudly went to the White House and stood with the President as he signed the No Child Left Behind Act. That bill instituted many needed reforms and authorized additional funding to help poor and disadvantaged children.

I was very disappointed when the President's Fiscal Year 2003 budget did not provide the money necessary to fulfill the promise of that historic bill. Yet today we are heading down a path that will be even more tragic.

No matter how inadequate the President's budget, it at least provided some minimal increases to several critical programs. If in the next few weeks, however, we agree to a long-term continuing resolution, even those scant increases will be gone.

What does this mean to our children? It means that states with sizeable Hispanic student populations like Texas, California, New York and Florida will lose almost $2 billion in funding for Title I.

California, Texas, New York, Arizona, New Mexico and Illinois will lose $63 million just under the English Language Acquisition State Grants program. This program serves 950,000 limited-English proficient and immigrant children. These are the children who need the most help, yet we will be denying them access to education they deserve.

If we pass a long-term CR will be freezing funding for TRIO, GEAR-UP, Migrant Education, drop-out prevention, and the College Assistance Migrant Programs. All of these programs heavily impact Hispanic students nationwide. A long-term CR will leave thousands of Hispanic children behind.

We do not need a long-term continuing resolution, we need a fully funded education appropriations bill for all the children in this country. I urge my colleagues to take heed.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HANSEN). All time for debate has expired.

The joint resolution is considered read for amendment, and pursuant to the order of the House of today, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 370, nays 1, not voting 61, as follows:

□ 1935

So the joint resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, during rollcall vote No. 423, H.J. Res. 111, continuing Appropriations for FY03 I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from votes this afternoon so that I could be in New York to keep an appointment at my daughter's school. Were I here I would have voted as follows:

Rollcall Vote 420, on a Motion to Recommit H.R. 4600 with Instructions: "yea"; rollcall Vote 421, on Passing H.R. 4600: "nay"; rollcall Vote 422, on Passing the Conference Report to Accompany H.R. 2215: "yea"; and rollcall Vote 423, on Passing H.J. Res. 111: "yea".

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 483 Concurrent Resolution directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to make technical corrections in the enrollment of the bill H.R. 1646.

The message also announced, that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1646) An Act to authorize appropriations for the Department of State for fiscal years 2002 and 2003, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Ms. PELOSI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I take this time for the purposes of inquiring about the schedule of next week, and I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT).

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

I am pleased to announce that the House has completed its legislative business for the week. The House will next meet for legislative business on Tuesday, October 1 at 10:30 a.m. for morning hour and 12 o'clock noon for legislative business. The majority leader will schedule a number of measures under suspension of the rules, a list of which will be distributed to the Members' offices tomorrow. Recorded votes on Tuesday will be postponed until 6:30 p.m.

For Wednesday and the balance of the week, the majority leader has scheduled the following measures for consideration in the House:

H. Res. 559, a House resolution on expedited special elections;

H. Res. 543, expressing the sense of the House that Congress should complete action on H.R. 4019, making marriage penalty tax relief permanent; a continuing resolutions; and S. 2690, the Pledge of Allegiance Reaffirmation Act; and Conferees are also working hard to complete work on the Bob Stump National Defense Authorization Act conference report. It is our hope that the conference report will be available for consideration in the House next week as well.

I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

From what I can tell from what he read, next week we will have another week of heavy lifting: a House resolution on special elections, sense of the Congress on making tax relief permanent, a continuing resolution reflecting the fact that we have not finished our business, and the Pledge of Allegiance Reaffirmation Act.

We all want to reaffirm our Pledge of Allegiance, but we can do that by pledging allegiance not only to the Flag but to the American people. They are still crying out for us to take action, to grow the economy, to create jobs, to educate our children, to provide a prescription drug benefit, access to health care, protect Social Security, preserve Medicare, give us a prescription drug benefit under Medicare; and we are having resolutions and hoping to complete our work on the defense bill.

I have some questions for the gentleman. Will the resolution on Iraq be brought up on the floor next week? If not, when do you think it will be brought up?

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, in response to my friend, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), I would like to say that on the list of things she mentioned, the House of Representatives passed virtually all of that legislation, sent it to the Senate. We would like to see it come back and would like to take final action on it and hope that the conference reports on defense and military construction and other conference reports would produce some of that work next week.

In terms of Iraq, there is hard work on a bipartisan bicameral basis to get a resolution that I personally would be pleased to see come to the House next week, but we are working hard to have a resolution that has broad agreement to deal with this very important question.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. Can the distinguished gentleman inform us when H.R. 3450, to reauthorize community health centers, might be scheduled? Twelve million Americans who are served by the centers are waiting to hear. I was hoping it might be a suspension on Tuesday.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, at the gentlewoman's request, I am told it will be on suspension on Tuesday, and I look forward to seeing that bill come to the floor as well.

Ms. PELOSI. To the best of the gentleman's knowledge, will there be votes next Friday?

Mr. BLUNT. I think there very likely will be votes next Friday; and certainly if we are able to move on the Iraq resolution, there will definitely be votes on Friday.

Ms. PELOSI. We have given up Monday of next week already?

Mr. BLUNT. We are working Tuesday, not Monday.

Ms. PELOSI. What is the leader's latest prediction on when the House will adjourn before the election? Closer to October 11 or 18? And when do you believe we will return for a lame duck session?

Mr. BLUNT. I am certainly in no position to predict that. I think there is a discussion with the leaders on both sides of the building. We want to adjourn, of course, in conjunction with our friends on the other side of the building. I would anticipate that the continuing resolution next week will go through the 11th; and hopefully by the time we get into that period, we will have either resolved some of the appropriations concerns, or we will be looking at the time between now and the election in a more definite way.

Ms. PELOSI. I certainly hope so. And I hope that we can work together to pass more of these appropriations bills. We have taken them up in committee. Some of them are ready. In fact, the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, Export Financing and Related Programs last Thursday on the floor asked when his bill would be taken up. We are working on transportation, but we passed District of Columbia today. So many of these bills are ripe for coming to the floor. That is why I am disappointed not to see them on the schedule because when we pass up votes on Monday, I remind my colleagues that is September 30, the last day of the fiscal year, Mr. Speaker, and once again there are no appropriations bills scheduled to be on the floor. We used to say, and you know the expression, you are a young man, "Thank God it's Friday." Around here it is "Thank God it's Thursday." Now the Republican leadership is giving us a work week that ends on Thursday afternoon. I am sure hard-working Americans who are holding down two jobs to support their families and work more than 40 hours a week would appreciate a schedule like this.

We spent weeks telling the other body that they have made no progress taking care of business we think they should be doing, and yet we have neglected so many of our own responsibilities. We have eight appropriations bills to fund the entire government that the House has yet to consider: education, veterans' medical care, transportation, agriculture, energy. The list goes on and on. And the disappointment is that these are being held up because an element, not the entire, but an element in the Republican Party wants to cut $7 billion out of education and you do not have the votes to do that; so you cannot bring it to the floor and therefore we are engaged in this business of one CR after another.

I thank the gentleman for the information.

STANDING FIRM FOR THE PEOPLE OF SUDAN

(Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, for nearly 20 years, the people of Sudan have been engaged in a civil war. The government in Khartoum, known as the National Islamic Front, has been ruthlessly terrorizing its own citizens in the south, killing and starving those who are not Muslim Arabs.

This religious hatred has evolved into genocide. Christians in southern Sudan are the subject of ethnic cleansing. Over 2 million people have died. Over 4 million people have been displaced. The war in Sudan is clearly one of good versus evil.

If this persecution was not bad enough, southern Sudan is a source of enormous oil reserves, causing the National Islamic Front to literally clear a path of black Christians in order to reap the benefits of this commodity.

Sudan is perhaps the most prominent purveyor of slavery, an atrocity of unspeakable proportions. Women and children are subjected to extreme cruelty. Men are removed from their families and given Arabic names before experiencing the worst of conditions.

There have been many prayers and vigils for the people of Sudan recently. I commend those who speak up for the persecuted and enslaved in the south of Sudan, and I urge the Sudanese government to resume peace talks with the Sudan People's Liberation Army. We must have peace, Mr. Speaker, in Sudan.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

WELCOMING MEMBERS OF RUSSIAN DUMA AND FEDERATION COUNCIL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to pay tribute to what has been a very exciting week.

Members of this body and the other body played host to four separate groups of our colleagues from the Russian Duma and Federation Council. These groups were involved in intense discussions involving cooperation on antiterrorism, on projects involving health care, energy, programs to improve the conditions of the people of Russia and the relationship between the U.S.

In fact, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON) chaired one delegation, and we had Members of other groups in the Congress chair other delegations. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) was hosting a group that was focusing on veterans benefits and ways to construct housing support for the military in Russia. It has been a good week.

Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday a group of our colleagues, 12 to be exact, from both sides of the aisle played host to one of the rising young companies in Russia, an energy company known as ATERA and their CEO Igor Makarov. The members of the bipartisan delegation that traveled to Russia last May were hosted by ATERA as they had been hosted in previous delegations by the officials from GASTFIRM, LUKoil and other major energy companies, including Yukost and our friend Mikhail Korofko.

In response to the hospitality shown to us in Moscow, we agreed to host a dinner here in Washington for Makarov and the ATERA Corporation, and so on Tuesday evening in the Library of Congress almost 30 Members of this body from both parties and members of the other body assembled, along with diplomats from eight nations and approximately 18 members of the Russian Duma and Federation Council. In addition, we were joined by officials from various Federal agencies.

It was a very productive dinner, as we heard the progress of this young energy company, 10 years old, that now has an annual revenue approximating $5 billion.

There were also some serious discussions because, as with other merging companies in Russia, there have been allegations and accusations, as there have been with other energy companies and other banks and institutions in Russia, that the companies are perhaps not transparent enough, perhaps they have items that we have to confront and ask them about.

In this case, what was absolutely refreshing was that the chairman of the board of the ATERA, Igor Marakov, a young 34-year-old champion bicyclist from Russia, openly in front of our entire assembled group offered to provide to us the complete list of all of the owners of this privately held corporation. That in itself was significant because they are a private corporation. They gave us the list at my request of not just the owners of the company but also the members and employees of their Esau who, in fact, were revealed to us so that we now know the true ownership of this corporation as they move to be accepted on the New York Stock Exchange.

Secondarily, because of concerns that we raised with them and concerns that we have had with other companies that are emerging in Russia, they announced that they have agreed to form an outside independent board that would monitor and review the board activities of ATERA, and they have announced that they are accepting, and I have provided to them suggestions for prominent Americans that can reflect upon the kind of work that this company is engaged in, and in fact, they had meetings this week with former CIA Director Jim Woolsey, former Energy Secretary and former CNO of the Navy Jim Watkins and, in fact, took their constructive suggestions and have agreed to put into place an aggressive effort to open up the inside operations of the company, the kinds of activities they are involved in, the extent of their operations and to have a formal process for these kinds of officials that will, in fact, come from America and perhaps other companies to bring true transparency to their company.

For these things I applaud ATERA. I am not saying that we have answered all the questions, but I am saying that we have made a good start, and this company deserves to be given credit for coming to Washington and telling the elected officials of this body that it wants to be open, it wants to engage with American energy corporations. It wants to have the bipartisan look of not just Members of Congress and our agencies but also of those individuals in America that can help them chart a new course, a course of integrity, honesty and openness as they grow into a company that hopefully will become a true multinational organization.

I thank my colleagues for joining with me in hosting that event, in particular the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) from Jacksonville, who hosts the corporate headquarters of this company, and I applaud those other Russian companies that are looking to make the same strides in moving toward open ownership and openness and moving toward the kind of transparency that American companies must provide to get the investment from the people of this country and people from around the world who have confidence in the American free enterprise system.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH FOR RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRENSHAW). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to report to the staff that I will not take the full hour. That I am sure is good news because they work awfully hard, and many times the staff is here at 11:00 at night. I will keep my word to be not much longer than 20 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am on the floor again, I have been every week for the last month, talking about an issue that, to me, if we are talking about September 11, we are talking about the war on terrorism, we are talking about our troops in Afghanistan. Part of the reason they are there is to protect our freedom. There is no question about it, and our national security.

The reason I come to the floor is because a year or so ago it was brought to my attention by a minister in my District that he was prohibited from talking about a political issue or candidate during the 2000 election in the months of September and October. So I took it upon myself to, along with my staff, to research this issue, and I found out that in 1954 Lyndon Baines Johnson had the H.L. Hunt family opposed to his reelection, and the H.L. Hunt family had established two 501(c)(3) think tanks.

So Johnson, being the majority leader and a very powerful man, and I think very arrogant man quite frankly, but anyway that is my opinion. He put an amendment on the revenue bill that was going through the Senate that was never debated, no debate, and basically what this debate said that if a company is a 501(c)(3) then they may not have political speech.

Mr. Speaker, the reason that bothers me so greatly is that prior to the Johnson amendment, any pastor, priest or rabbi or cleric in this country had the right to talk about any issue that they and the congregation chose for that minister to talk about. The Johnson amendment put the IRS, because his amendment went on a revenue bill, into our churches, and they are what we call the speech patrol.

That is not what this great Nation is about. This great Nation is about freedom, and the first amendment is cherished by all of us, and I would always do any and everything I can as a Member of Congress and as a citizen to protect the first amendment rights of the people of this country, and that includes our preachers, priests and rabbis.

So we put a bill in as H.R. 2357, the Houses of Worship Political Speech Protection Act, and I am pleased to tell my colleagues, as of tonight, we have about 134 cosponsors. We are picking up some from the other side of the aisle, some Democrats. I am delighted that the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. CLEMENT) came on this week. He has joined us in this fight to return the freedom of speech to our churches and synagogues, and I want to read a couple of quotes at this time.

This is a quote from the former Congressman George Hansen from Idaho who served 12 terms, and this is his quote, "It is impossible to have religious freedom in any Nation where churches are licensed to the government." In my opinion, if the government is going to influence what a person can and cannot say within a church, then that is the government, in my opinion, that might as well as be licensed to churches, if they are going to stop them from talking about the moral and political issues of the day, because many of the biblical issues are today the political issues of the day. So the churches should be free to have those sermons and those discussions if the minister chooses to do so.

In addition, Martin Luther said, "The church must be reminded that it is neither the master nor the servant of the State but, rather, the conscience of the State."

Mr. Speaker, what happened in the year 2000 and actually throughout the election cycle in the year 2000, Barry Lynn of the Americans United for Separation of Church and State, he sends a letter to the religious leaders, both front page and back, and I am just going to read one paragraph because I want to make a point with this one paragraph. He says, "Dear Religious Leader, another election year is upon us, and questions about the appropriate role of houses of worship in the political process have arisen."

The second paragraph is the one that I really find intriguing quite frankly because he says in the first sentence of the second paragraph, he acknowledges what I am saying tonight is that our churches are guaranteed freedom of speech by the Constitution, and this is what Mr. Lynn says to begin this second paragraph.

"The First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution protects the right of pastors and church leaders to speak out on religious, moral and political issues." That is exactly what I am saying. Exactly what I am saying. The first amendment guarantees the freedom of speech in our churches and synagogues and mosques throughout this country. However, and that is the word he uses, the second part of that paragraph or the second sentence in that paragraph is exactly what I am talking about tonight, the Johnson amendment.

He says, "However, houses of worship, as nonprofit entities under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Service Tax Code, are barred from endorsing or opposing candidates for any public office and may not intervene directly or indirectly in partisan campaigns."

That is because of the Johnson amendment. If I go back to Mr. Lynn's first sentence, very seldom do I agree with him, but I do agree with him and he is exactly right, "The first amendment of the U.S. Constitution protects the right of pastors and church leaders to speak out on religious, moral and political issues."

He is right. The problem is the second sentence, the Johnson amendment, "however." That is right, Mr. Lynn and I agree, the Constitution does guarantee that right to our preachers, priests, and rabbis throughout this country.

There was a hearing held, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) has certainly been interested in this issue. He has a separate bill from mine. They are not competing. Mine just takes a different approach than his, but I want to praise the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) for taking on this issue for a number of years, and I look forward to working with him in the months and years ahead. One day I hope that President Bush will sign a bill that says to the churches and synagogues of this country that they have total free speech in that church. That is what the cosponsors who have joined us on this bill, H.R. 2357, want.

Tonight I am not going to take the time to list all of the spiritual leaders that have written letters of support and made telephone calls.

Dr. D. James Kennedy from Florida testified before the oversight subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, and brought petitions signed by 60,000 people from around this country in support of this legislation. That same day we had a former Member of Congress from Washington, D.C., and a vice mayor of Washington, D.C., Pastor Walter Fauntroy testified on behalf of this legislation at the same time Dr. D. James Kennedy testified, and the attorney who helped me draft this legislation, Mr. Kobe May of the American Center for Law and Justice. Mr. May has been in the courts many times trying to protect the first amendment rights of people throughout this country.

What I want to share is a response. There were two representatives from the Internal Revenue Service. One is Mr. Hopkins, and one is Mr. Miller. I found the whole testimony intriguing, quite frankly, but just a couple of points I would like to bring forward. In response to a question the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) asked Mr. Miller, "As a rule, do you monitor the activities of churches during the political season?"

Mr. Miller with the Internal Revenue Service, "We do monitor churches. We are limited in how we do that by reason of section 7611 and because of lack of information in the area because there is no annual filing."

Mr. Speaker, this is the point that I want to make clearly. The last part of his answer, Mr. Miller to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), and this is what I wanted to stress, "So our monitoring is mostly receipt of information from third parties who are looking."

Mr. Speaker, third parties that are looking to see what the church and the pastor in that church is talking about and if he is violating the 501(c)(3) status, the Johnson amendment, then he is in violation and can lose the 501(c)(3) status. For those who talk about the separation of church and state, if they really are concerned, why do they want the government dictating what a minister might or might not be able to say within the church?

WELLER) also is on that committee, and I want to read a couple of his questions and the answers. This gives a better example I think to my colleagues here in the House. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) asked a question of Mr. Miller of the Internal Revenue Service. Can the from the pulpit and not be in violation of the tax status that candidate is pro life or candidate why is pro choice? The answer was that becomes more problematic can speak to issues of the take but to the extent they start tying it to particular candidates and to a particular election, it begins to look more and more like either opposition to a particular candidate or favoring a particular candidate.

Basically he is saying they are in violation of the Johnson amendment. The preacher cannot do that. That is exactly what he is saying that.

Let me go to another question that the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) asked. He asked, "and would the Crane and Jones legislation clarify the law to allow for that type of statement?

Mr. Miller answers, "I believe so."

That is what this is all about. I think if this country is to remain morally strong, our spiritual leaders throughout the country should have the right to talk about these issues. They had it prior to 1954. I am going to give evidence of that in just a moment.

Another question from the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) to another agent who was in attendance, Mr. Hopkins. He says, "So just to follow up on that, say you have a candidate who is a guest speaker, was in a church speaking from the pulpit, concludes his or her remarks, and the minister walks up, puts his or her arm around that particular candidate and says, this is the right candidate. I urge you to support this candidate. Is that allowable under current law?"

Mr. Hopkins with the Internal Revenue Service, "No, that would not be allowable under current law. That would clearly be political campaign activity. It would be protected, however, under the two bills that are the specific subject of the hearing." So it would be protected under my bill and the Crane bill.

Some people might say why should the churches get involved in political campaigns. Let me give another example. Down in my district during the year 2000, Jerry Shield, a friend of mine who is Catholic, went to his priest, Father Rudy at St. Paul's in New Bern, North Carolina, the Sunday before the Tuesday and he said to Father Rudy, Would you please say to the congregation George Bush is pro-life. The priest said, I cannot do that. It will violate the tax status of this church.

Let me give an example on the other side. There is a wonderful former Member of Congress, Floyd Flake, whom all of us love. He is Dr. Floyd Flake, a minister, and has a very large church in New York City. Mr. Flake had Al Gore in his church, and when Mr. Gore completed his speech, Reverend Flake went up and did exactly the same thing that the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) asked the IRS about. He stood up there and said I believe this is the right man to lead this Nation. He is trying to say that he believes as a spiritual man that he believed Al Gore is the right man. He got a letter of reprimand from the Internal Revenue Service; a third party turned him in.

Mr. Speaker, this is America. Freedom rings in this great country. Our men and women are serving this Nation across the sea to guarantee that freedom, and we have a responsibility to not let Lyndon Johnson get by with an amendment that was not even debated. That is what happened. So after 48 years, 48 years of the Federal Government influencing and threatening what can be said in our churches and synagogues, we now have an opportunity to pass legislation to get this debate started.

I want to thank even some who do not agree with me on this issue, thank you for allowing, after 48 years, for this bill to get to the floor for a debate. We will see what might happen when this bill might come forward.

Let me take 5 or 6 more minutes and then I will close. There is a professor at Purdue University named Dr. James Davidson. I had read a report. He is well known. He is a psychologist at Purdue University. I talked to Dr. Davidson yesterday. He has spent a lot of time writing books and articles about churches and religion in America. I want to read this to Members. This is the beginning of his research on the issue of the freedom of churches to talk about political issues. "The ban on electioneering has nothing to do with the first amendment or Jefferson's principle of separation of church and state. The first amendment speaks of religious freedom. It says nothing that would preclude churches from aligning themselves with or against a candidate for political office," and he cites certain court rulings. I will not recite those because of time.

"The courts also have never used Thomas Jefferson's celebrated 1802 metaphor about a wall of separation between church and state to stifle church's support or opposition to a political candidate."

Another paragraph, "From a Constitutional perspective then, American churches have had every right to endorse or oppose political candidates. They have not participated in all elections, but they have been actively involved in some. For example, many Protestant churches and church leaders delivered sermons and published religious literature opposing Al Smith's bid to become the Nation's first Catholic President in 1928."

□ 2015

He cites some references there. Constitutional principles have not changed since 1928. Churches still have a constitutional right to endorse or oppose political candidates. However, then he gets into the issue of the Johnson amendment. What he is saying, that up until the Johnson amendment, there were no restrictions of speech, right or wrong. The preacher, the priest, the rabbi, the cleric had every right to talk about issues they thought were important to their church, to their State and to this Nation.

I just wanted to read that because this man, Dr. Davidson, is an expert on this issue. I wanted to cite that for the record tonight.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take just a couple of more minutes now to say that the left has tried to say that if my bill or the bill of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) passed, then you are allowing the churches to get into the fund-raising business for political candidates. That is total hogwash. The bill that the Congress and the Senate passed, the 2002 campaign finance reform laws, says that if you are a nonprofit entity, which is a 501(c)(3), you cannot raise hard or soft money. So that is just a bogus argument from the extreme left that does not want to have the preachers to have the right to talk about these issues in their churches, synagogues and mosques.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the staff and you for giving me this time. I want to say that the strength of America depends, quite frankly, on our spiritual leaders being able to talk about the issues of the day, whether they be moral issues or political issues. I believe that the strength of this country is dependent on the fact that our spiritual leaders have total freedom of speech no matter what the issue might be. That is the best hope for this country. The spiritual leaders that I have met in the last year and a half I really believe are my brothers in Christ and I have great respect for them.

I want to say that this legislation is supported by such people as D. James Kennedy, Dr. Tim LaHaye and his wife Beverly, by also Ray Flynn, the former Ambassador to the Vatican and also Rabbi Daniel Lapin, a wonderful man of God from the west coast. I talked to him two or three times on this issue. Again, these spiritual leaders and I would say that probably the majority of the spiritual leaders maybe would not even want to discuss these issues in front of their congregation. Maybe they would choose to say, well, I don't want to talk about a political candidate here or there. But my point is, they should have the right to make that decision. They now do not have that right.

There is one other problem with this law. The IRS admitted during the hearing that they cannot enforce this law.

As I said earlier, they are dependent on a third party, a spy, if you will, to turn somebody in. I do not believe that that is what this great Nation stands for. Let me also say that they acknowledge that they cannot enforce this law adequately across the board. They have and they did admit they have been somewhat selective as to certain churches. I gave you an example of Floyd Flake who again is a wonderful man of our Lord in New York. All he did was to say to his congregation that he believes that Al Gore is the right man to lead this Nation. Then again I want to go back to the priest down in my district, there was a request made by a parishioner, Just say that George Bush is pro-life. These are just simple words. They have a right to say it. They should have that right. That is acknowledged by Davidson and even in Barry Lynn's letter, the first sentence. He is exactly right. They do have that right. Johnson took it away from them.

I also want to say that this country, I think, is a Nation, and some people will not agree with this, but it was founded on Judeo-Christian principles. That is the foundation of America and if America is going to remain strong, then we have got to be sure that our spiritual leaders have the freedom to talk about the biblical, the moral, and the political issues of the day. They must have that right.

Mr. Speaker, I always close when I come to the floor in a certain way. I spoke this morning and I close this way everywhere I go, because I think we are so fortunate to have our men and women in uniform who are protecting our national security and also protecting the first amendment, the second amendment and all the guarantees that we have in the Constitution. I close this way by saying, I ask God to please bless our men and women in uniform, I ask God to please bless the families of our men and women in uniform, I ask God to please bless the men and women who serve in the United States House and the United States Senate, I ask God to please bless the President of the United States so that he might make the right decisions for this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I close this way by saying three times, I ask God: Please God, please God, please God, continue to bless America.

SENATE—Thursday, September 26, 2002

The Senate met at 9:15 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island.

PRAYER

Dear God, our hearts are often restless; we long to rest in You. We feel an inner emptiness only You can fill, a hunger only You can satisfy, a thirst only You can quench. All our needs are small in comparison to our deepest need for You. No human love can fulfill our yearning for Your grace. No position can satisfy our quest for significance. No achievement can substitute for Your acceptance. Our relationship with You is ultimately all that counts. There is no joy greater than knowing You, no peace more lasting than Your shalom in our souls, no power more energizing than Your enabling Spirit empowering us. This is the day You have made for us to enjoy and to serve You. Grant us the greatness of seeking Your best for our Nation and working together as patriots. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JACK REED led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD.)

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

> U.S. SENATE,
> PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
> Washington, DC, September 26, 2002.
>
> To the Senate:
>
> Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rues of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, to perform the duties of the Chair.
>
> ROBERT C. BYRD,

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Prior to the Chair announcing morning business time, I would advise the Senate that we are going to be in a period of morning business until 11:15. At that time, we will resume consideration of the Homeland Security Act. Cloture was filed on the Gramm-Miller amendment to homeland security. Senators have until 1 p.m. to file first-degree amendments.

Senator DASCHLE and I, in private conversations, have indicated to the minority that we would be willing to move this vote to today. Under the rules, it is tomorrow. We would be willing to have the vote today. We are concerned, I am concerned, and we have been told by Senators on the other side, they have 30 speakers on this amendment. As people who know how the Senate works, that is a big flag for "we are stalling."

As I indicated, we will at the appropriate time ask that the vote be moved up until today. If they are serious about this legislation, this should indicate their seriousness.

When the Chair moves to morning business today, I ask unanimous consent, on the Democratic side, Senator BINGAMAN be recognized for 10 minutes and Senator LEAHY for 15 minutes. Senator BINGAMAN, of course, is chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and Senator LEAHY is chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Next is Senator JOHNSON for 10 minutes and Senator DORGAN after that for 20 minutes. I ask unanimous consent for that order.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 11:15 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each. Under the previous order, the first half of the time will be under the control of the majority leader or his designee. Pursuant to the order, the Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

THE ECONOMY AND IRAQ

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to speak. I want to address a growing disconnect that I detect between what I am hearing in my home State of New Mexico and much of what I am hearing and reading here in Washington, DC. Frankly, I begin to worry when we are talking about one thing in Washington while the people we represent at home are talking about other things, or talking about them in different ways—in coffee klatsches, in barber shops, in various settings.

What do I mean by that? I mean in Washington in recent weeks the drumbeat has been about how we need to prepare for and pursue an attack on Iraq, and how the United Nations had better get its act together to pursue this effort in weeks rather than months or we would unilaterally act in its place.

In my State, there is talk about Iraq. Frankly, there is a great deal of concern about what is being planned and what is being contemplated, on what timetable. But the main issue I hear from people in my State relates to the economy and what is happening in the economy. Why would the economy be a major issue in New Mexico, somebody might ask? One reason is the article that appeared in the Albuquerque Journal yesterday with a headline that says, "New Mexico Tops U.S. for Poverty in 2001."

It indicates the poverty rate for the U.S. was at 11.7 percent last year, and in my State it was 17.7 percent of our population living below the poverty line. The median income for the same period dropped over $700 between 2000 and 2001. Income levels fell for every group. This is according to the U.S. Census. This is not some group with an axe to grind. This was the U.S. Census that reported that income levels fell for every group except the very richest and the very poorest. So that is one reason people are concerned about the economy.

Another reason is because of what is happening to their pension plans, to their 401(k)s. I heard a discussion a week or so ago where I thought one of the commentators made a very good point. He said there will be an October surprise this year. As we approach elections in this country there is always a concern on the part of people who watch the political comings and goings that there will be an October surprise; something will be done in October to try to change the outcome of the election. In fact, this commentator said there will be an October surprise, but the surprise will be when each person opens their quarterly report showing where their retirement savings now stand, where they stand in their 401(k). They will see a dramatic decline in the amount of retirement savings that they have because of what is happening in the economy.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

More and more people are worried that nobody in Washington—and this is what I begin to pick up in my State—there is a concern that no one in Washington seems concerned. No one seems concerned about the economy. There is no talk about any strategy to improve the economy. There is no plan to improve the economy.

To hear the pronouncements that have come out of the administration in recent weeks and months, you would think the economy is just fine, that everything is humming right along. At least we are no longer hearing from the Secretary of Treasury and others that we are on the cusp of a rebound in the economy. That talk has faded. But certainly there is no talk about any plan or any suggestion about how we are going to strengthen the U.S. economy. And the fact that we are not talking about it is of concern.

It is possible I am just reading the wrong newspapers, watching the wrong TV reports. Maybe there is something being planned. Maybe there is some strategy that is being developed in the administration. I have not seen it. I hope there is. My strong belief, though, is that the administration's basic position on the economy is: Stay the course.

The problem with staying the course is this is not a very good course for the average American. It is not a very good course for the average person in my State. So I hope we will begin to hear something here in Washington about this issue which is dominating the discussion in my home State.

Let me also say something about this threatened war in Iraq. Obviously, Americans want to deal with any imminent threat to our Nation's security. I think much more so are we ready to do that after the catastrophe of 9/11. If weapons of mass destruction have been developed or are being developed with the intent to use those against us or against our allies, then that is a threat that requires us to act. I think there is general agreement on it.

We all share the goal of wanting to eliminate the threat of these weapons. But the question we need to debate is the means for accomplishing the goal. So far the means that the administration has insisted upon and put forward is a so-called regime change. That is the means. We are going to pursue a regime change. That is an interesting phrase. That is a euphemism for attacking Iraq, killing or capturing Saddam Hussein and his cadre of leaders, and replacing them with the leadership of our choice. There are some potential problems with pursuing that particular means to deal with these weapons of mass destruction. Let me just mention a few of those problems which have been discussed by others but need to be discussed even more.

One is what is the precedent we are setting? This is not a normal course for our country to pursue, attacking and invading another country without some imminent threat being demonstrated.

Second, the implications: What are the implications of such action for our relations with other Arab countries?

Third, what is the cost to us in resources? One figure we heard from the administration was $100 billion. What is the cost? What is the cost in American lives we must anticipate?

The question is, who would constitute the successor government if we are going to displace this government and put in place a government more to our liking; who would that be?

The questions of how large and how prolonged a commitment do the American people want to make to the rebuilding of Iraq, to bringing reforms to Iraq, the effect of such an attack on world oil markets and the price of oil, the spikes in the price of oil that might occur and what that might do to our own economy, are legitimate.

They are questions people in my State are concerned about and they are questions we need to have fully considered in Washington.

We need to look at other possible means besides just the simple approach of regime change. One set of ideas that has been put forward recently, that I think deserves attention and I want to just call it to the attention of my colleagues today, is a paper prepared by Jessica Mathews, President of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, entitled, "A New Approach, Coercive Inspections."

This is a serious proposal and one that deserves serious attention. Essentially, the idea is that if our primary goal is to deal with weapons of mass destruction and the threat that those weapons pose when held by Iraq, then we need to consider, perhaps, a middle ground between the unacceptable status quo, which none of us like, and this idea of full-scale invasion of Iraq in order to change the regime. It proposes a third approach. It proposes a new regime of coercive international inspections where we would have a multinational military force created by the Security Council, which we would participate in, and which would be there to ensure that inspections take place as the U.N. has indicated they would. There would be several advantages if we were able to pursue that kind of option.

It would have the advantage of assuring our allies that we want to work with them and not go it alone. It would assure the world that our priority is what we say it is, and that is eliminating the threat of weapons of mass destruction, not just evening old scores with Saddam Hussein. It avoids military conflict, if the goal of weapons inspection and weapons destruction can be achieved without military conflict. It reserves the option of force being used.

Frankly, pursuing a course such as this on Iraq would allow us to tone down the saber rattling, to calm anxieties here at home and in the world community. I think there is a great benefit that can be achieved from that, not only in our relations with our allies but I believe the economy also would benefit from believing we are pursuing a more measured course such as is described in this paper.

This is not the only proposal for how we should proceed. Maybe it is not the best, but it is certainly a serious proposal and one we should consider before we rush to authorize the President to use any and all force to bring justice and peace to that region of the world.

In conclusion, people in my State want to know what is going to happen on the economy, what this Government is going to do to help them pursue a better life and have greater economic opportunity in the future. They also, with regard to Iraq, expect us to think before we act. They hope—I hope—this President and this administration are not so committed to a single course of action that serious discussion and serious consideration of proposals such as this are precluded.

Mr. President, I appreciate the time and I yield the floor.

I ask unanimous consent the paper to which I referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The papers in this collection grew out of discussions held at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace from late April to late July of this year. The discussions included top regional and military experts, former inspectors with dozens of man-years' experience in Iraq, and individuals with intimate knowledge of the diplomatic situation at the United Nations.

A New Approach: Coercive Inspections

(By Jessica T. Matthews, President, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace)

The summary proposal that follows draws heavily on the expertise of all those who participated in the Carnegie discussions on Iraq and on the individually authored papers. Further explanation and greater detail on virtually every point, especially the proposal's military aspects, can be found therein.

With rising emphasis in recent months, the president has made clear that the United States' number one concern in Iraq is its pursuit of weapons of mass destruction (WMD). No link has yet been found between Baghdad's assertively secular regime and radical Islamist terrorists. There is much else about the Iraqi government that is fiercely objectionable but nothing that presents an imminent threat to the region, the United States, or the world. Thus, the United States' primary goal is, and should be, to deal with the WMD threat.

In light of what is now a four-year-long absence of international inspectors from the country, it has been widely assumed that the United States has only two options regarding that threat: continue to do nothing to find and destroy Iraq's nuclear, chemical, biological, and missile programs, or pursue covert action or a full-scale military operation to overthrow Saddam Hussein. At best, the latter would be a unilateral initiative with grudging partners.

This paper proposes a third approach, a middle ground between an unacceptable status quo that allows Iraqi WMD programs to continue and the enormous costs and risks of an invasion. It proposes a new regime of coercive international inspections. A powerful, multinational military force, created by the UN Security Council, would enable UN and International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) inspection teams to carry out "comply or else" inspections. The "or else" is overthrow of the regime. The burden of choosing war is placed squarely on Saddam Hussein. The middle-ground option is a radical change from the earlier international inspection effort in which the playing field was tilted steeply in Iraq's favor. It requires a military commitment sufficient to pose a credible threat to Iraq and would take a vigorous diplomatic initiative on Washington's part to launch. Long-term success would require sustained unity of purpose among the major powers. These difficulties make this approach attractive only in comparison to the alternatives, but in that light, its virtues emerge sharply.

Inspections backed by a force authorized by the UN Security Council would carry unimpeachable legitimacy and command broad international support. The effort would therefore strengthen, rather than undermine, the cooperation the United States needs for long-term success in the war against terrorism. It would avoid setting a dangerous precedent of a unilateral right to attack in "preventive self-defense." Although not likely to be welcomed by Iraq's neighbors, it would be their clear choice over war. Regional assistance (basing, over-flight rights, and so on) should therefore be more forthcoming. If successful, it would reduce Iraq's WMD threat to negligible levels. If a failure, it would lay an operational and political basis for a transition to a war to oust Saddam. The United States would be seen to have worked through the United Nations with the rest of the world rather than alone, and Iraq's intent would have been cleanly tested and found wanting. Baghdad would be isolated. In these circumstances, the risks to the region of a war to overthrow Iraq's government-from domestic pressure on shaky governments (Pakistan) to government misreading U.S. intentions (Iran) to heightened Arab and Islamic anger toward the United States-would be sharply diminished.

Compared to a war aimed at regime change, the approach greatly reduces the risk of Saddam's using whatever WMD he has (probably against Israel) while a force aimed at his destruction is being assembled. On the political front, coercive inspections avoid the looming question of what regime would replace the current government. It would also avoid the risks of persistent instability in Iraq, its possible disintegration into Shia, Suni, and Kurdish regions, and the need to station tens of thousands of U.S. troops in the country for what could be a very long time.

A year ago, the approach would have been impossible. Since then, however, four factors have combined to make it achievable: Greatly increased concern about WMD in the wake of September 11; Iraq's continued lies and intransigence even after major reform of the UN sanctions regime; Russia's embrace of the United States after the September 11 attacks, and the Bush administration's threats of unilateral military action, which have opened a political space that did not exist before.

Together, these changes have restored a consensus among the Security Council's five permanent members (P–5) regarding the need for action on Iraq's WMD that has not existed for the past five years.

CORE PREMISES

Several key premises underlie the new approach.

Inspections can work. In their first five years, the United Nations Special Commission on Iraq (UNSCOM), which was responsible for inspecting and disarming Iraq's chemical, biological, and missile materials and capacities, and the IAEA Iraq Action Team, which did the same for Iraq's nuclear ones, achieved substantial successes. With sufficient human and technological resources, time, and political support, inspections can reduce Iraq's WMD threat, if not to zero, to a negligible level. (The term inspections encompasses a resumed discovery and disarmament phase and intrusive, ongoing monitoring and verification extending to dual-use facilities and the activities of key individuals.)

Saddam Hussein's overhelming priority is to stay in power. He will wilingly give up pursuit of WMD, but he will do so if convinced that the only alternative is his certain destruction and that of his regime.

A credible and continuing military threat involving substantial forces on Iraq's borders will be necessary both to get the inspectors back into Iraq and to enable them to do their job. The record from 1991 to the present makes clear that Iraq views UN WMD inspections as war by other means. There is no reason to expect this to change. Sanctions, inducements, negotiations, or periodic air strikes will not suffice to restore effective inspection. Negotiations in the present circumstances only serve Baghdad's goals of delay and diversion.

The UNSOM/IAEA successes also critically depended on unity of purpose within the UN Security Council. No amount of military force will be effective without unwavering political resolve behind it. Effective inspections cannot be reestablished until a way forward is found that the manor powers and key regional states can support under the UN Charter.

NEGOTIATING COERCIVE INSPECTIONS

From roughly 1997 until recently, determined Iraqi diplomacy succeeded in dividing the P–5. Today, principally due to Iraq's behavior, Russia's new geopolitical stance, and U.S.-led reform of the sanctions regime, a limited consensus has reemerged. There is now agreement that Iraq has not met its obligations under UN Resolution 687 (which created the inspections regime) and that there is a need for the return of inspectors to Iraq. There is also support behind the new, yet-to-be tested inspection team known as the UN Monitoring, Verification, and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC, created in December 1999 under Resolution 1284). Because three members of the P–5 abstained on the vote to create UNMOVIC, this development is particularly noteworthy. The May 2002 adoption of a revised sanctions plan was further evidence of a still fragile but real and evolving convergence of view on the Security Council.

Perhaps paradoxically, U.S. threats to act unilaterally against Iraq have the potential to strengthen this limited consensus. France, Russia, and China strongly share the view that only the Security Council can authorize the use of a force—a view to which Great Britain is also sympathetic. All four know that after eleven years of the United Nations' handling of the issue, a U.S. decision to act unilaterally against Iraq would be a tremendous blow to the authority of the institution and the Security Council in particular. They want to avoid any further marginalization of the Council since that would translate into a diminution of their individual influence. Thus, U.S. threats provide these four countries with a shared interest in finding a formula for the use of force against Iraq that would be effective, acceptable to the United States, and able to be authorized by the Council as a whole. That formula could be found in a resolution authorizing multinational enforcement action to enable UNMOVIC to carry out its mandate.

Achieving such an outcome would require a tremendous diplomatic effort on Washington's part. That, however, should to be a seen as a serious deterrent. Achieving desired outcomes without resort to war is, in the first instance, what power is for. Launching the middle-ground approach would amount, in effect, to Washington and the rest of the P–5 re-seizing the diplomatic initiative from Baghdad.

The critical element will be that the United States makes clear that it forswears unilateral military action against Iraq for as long as international inspections are working. The United States would have to convince Iraq and others that this is not a perfunctory bow to international opinion preparatory to an invasion and that the United States' intent is to see inspections succeed, not a ruse to have them quickly fail. If Iraq is not convinced, it would have no reason to comply; indeed, quite the reverse because Baghdad would need whatever WMD it has to deter or fight with a U.S. attack. Given the past history, many countries will be deeply skeptical. To succeed, Washington will have to be steady, unequivocal, and unambiguous on this point.

This does not mean that Washington need alter its declaratory policy favoring regime change in Iraq. Its stance would be that the United States continues to support regime change but will not take action to force it while Iraq is in full compliance with international inspections. There would be nothing unusual in such a position. The United States has, for example, had a declaratory policy for regime change in Cuba for more than forty years.

Beyond the Security Council, U.S. diplomacy will need to recognize the significant differences in strategic interests among the states in the region. Some want a strong Iraq to offset Iran. Others fear a prosperous, pro-West Iraq producing oil to its full potential. Many fear and oppose U.S. military dominance in the region. Virtually all, however, agree that Iraq should be free of WMD, and they universally fear the instability that is likely to accompany a violent overthrow of the Iraqi government.

Moreover, notwithstanding the substantial U.S. presence required for enforced inspections and what will be widely felt to be an unfair double standard (acting against Iraq's WMD but not against Israel's), public opinion throughout the region would certainly be less aroused by multlaellateral inspections than by a unilateral U.S. invasion.

Thus, if faced with a choice between a war to achieve regime change and an armed, multilateral effort to eradicate Iraq's WMD, all the region's governments are likely to share a clear preference for the latter.

IMPLEMENTING COERCIVE INSPECTIONS

Under the coercive inspections plan, the Security Council would authorize the creation of an Inspections Implementation Force (IIF) to act as the enforcement arm for UNMOVIC and the IAEA task force. Under the new resolution, the inspections process is transformed from a game of cat and mouse punctuated by diversions and manufactured crises, in which conditions heavily favor Iraqi obstruction, into a last chance, "comply or else" operation. The inspection teams would return to Iraq accompanied by a military arm strong enough to force immediate entry into any site at any time with complete security for the inspection team. No terms would be negotiated regarding the dates, duration, or modalities of inspection. If Iraq chose not to accept, or established a record of noncompliance, the U.S. regime-change option or, better, a UN authorization of "use of all necessary means" would come into play.

Overall control is vested in the civilian executive chairman of the inspection teams. He would determine what sites will be inspected, without interference for the Security Council, and whether military forces should accompany any particular inspection. Some inspections—for example, personnel interviews—may be better conducted without any accompanying force; others will require maximum insurance of prompt entry and protection. The size and composition of the accompanying force would be the decision of the IIF commander, and its employment would be under his command.

The IIF must be strong and mobile enough to support full inspection of any site, including socalled sensitive sites and those previously designated as off limits. "No-fly" and "no-drive" zones near to-be-inspected sites would be imposed with minimal advance notice to Baghdad. Violations of these bans would subject the opposing forces to attack. Robust operational and communications security would allow surprise inspections. In the event surprise fails and "spontaneous" gatherings of civilians attempt to impede inspections, rapid response riot control units must be available.

The IIF must be highly mobile, composed principally of air and armored cavalry units. It might include an armored cavalry regiment or equivalent on the Jordan-Iraq border, an air-mobile brigade in eastern Turkey, and two or more brigades and corps-sized infrastructure based in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. Air support including fighter and fighterbomber aircraft and continuous air and ground surveillance, provided by AWACS and JSTARS, will be required. The IIF must have a highly sophisticated intelligence capability. Iraq has become quite experienced in concealment and in its ability to penetrate and mislead inspection teams. It has had four unimpeded years to construct new underground sites, build mobile facilities, alter records, and so on. To overcome that advantage and ensure military success, the force must be equipped with the full range of reconnaissance, surveillance, listening, encryption, and photo interpretation capabilities.

The bulk of the force will be U.S. For critical political reasons, however, the IIF must be as multinational as possible and as small as practicable. Its design and composition should strive to make clear that the IIF is not a U.S. invasion force in disguise, but a UN enforcement force. Optimally, it would include, at a minimum, elements from all of the P-5, Turkey, Saudi Arabia, and Jordan, as well as others in the region.

Consistent with the IIF's mandate and UN origin, Washington will have to rigorously resist the temptation to use the force's access and the information it collects for purposes unrelated to its job. Nothing will more quickly sow division within the Security Council than excesses in this regard.

Operationally, on the civilian front, experts disagree as to whether UNMOVIC's mandate contains disabling weaknesses. Although some provisions could certainly be improved, it would be unwise to attempt to renegotiate Resolution 1284. Some of its weaknesses can be overcome in practice by tacit agreement (some have already been), some will be met by the vastly greater technological capabilities conferred by the IIF, and some can be corrected through the language of the IIF resolution. Four factors are critical:

Adequate time. The inspection process must not be placed under any arbitrary deadline because that would provide Baghdad with an enormous incentive for delay. It is in everyone's interest to complete the disarmament phase of the job as quickly as possible, but timelines cannot be fixed in advance.

Experienced personnel. UNMOVIC must not be forced to climb a learning curve as UNSCOM did but must be ready to operate with maximum effectiveness from the outset. To do so, it must be able to take full advantage of individuals with irreplaceable, on-the-ground experience.

Provision for two-way intelligence sharing with national governments. UNSCOM experience proves that provision for intelligence sharing with national governments is indispensable. Inspectors need must information not available from open sources or commercial satellites and prompt, direct access to defectors. For their part, intelligence agencies will not provide a flow of information without feedback on its value and accuracy. It must be accepted by all governments that such interactions are necessary and that the dialogue between providers and users would be on a strictly confidential, bilateral basis, protected from other governemnts. The individual in charge of information collection and assessment on the inspection team should have an intelligence background and command the trust of those governments that provide the bulk of the intelligence.

Ability to track Iraqi procurement activities outside the country. UNSCOM discovered covert transactions between Iraq and more than 500 companies from more than 40 countries between 1993 and 1998. Successful inspections would absolutely depend, therefore, on the team's authority to track procurement efforts both inside and outside Iraq, including at Iraqi embassies abroad. Accordingly, UNMOVIC should include a staff of specially trained customs experts, and inspections would need to include relevant ministries, commercial banks, and trading companies. As with military intelligence, tracking Iraqi procurement must not be used to collect unrelated commercial and technical intelligence or impede legal trade.

CONCLUSION

War should never be undertaken until the alternatives have been exhausted. In this case that moral imperative is buttressed by the very real possibility that a war to overthrow Saddam Hussein, even if successful in doing so, could subtract more from U.S. security and long-term political interests that it adds.

Political chaos in Iraq or an equally bad successor regime committed to WMD to prevent an invasion from ever happening again, possibly horrible costs to Israel, greater enmity toward the United States among Arab and other Muslim publics, a severe blow to the authority of the United Nations and the Security Council, and a giant step by the United States toward-in Zbigniew Brzezinski's phrase-political self-isolation are just some of the costs, in addition to potentially severe economic impacts and the loss of American and innocent Iraqi lives, that must be weighed.

In this case alternative does exist. It blends the imperative for military threat against a regime that has learned how to divide and conquer the major powers with the legitimacy of UN sanction and multilateral action. Technically and operationally, it is less demanding than a war. Diplomatically, it requires a much greater effort for a greater gain. The message of an unswerving international determination to halt WMD proliferation will be heard far beyond Iraq. The only real question is can the major powers see their mutual interest, act together, and stay the course? Who is more determined—Iraq or the P-5?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am fortunate to represent a State whose citizens have long been involved in international affairs. Whether through military or diplomatic service, volunteering for the Peace Corps, studying abroad, or because we live on a great international border, Vermonters have strong views about these issues.

I was in Vermont this past weekend, and as always I had the opportunity to speak to many Vermonters from all walks of life. I can say, beyond any doubt, that Vermonters across the political spectrum are very concerned about our policy toward Iraq.

They are worried that we are shifting our focus away from ending the violence in the Middle East, eliminating al-Qaida, and rebuilding Afghanistan even though that Herculean task has barely begun.

The President has sent to Congress a proposed resolution for the use of military force against Iraq. It would permit the President to take any action whatsoever to "defend the national security interests of the United States against the threat posed by Iraq, and restore international peace and security in the region."

While I hope this is the beginning of a consultative, bipartisan process to produce a sensible resolution and to act on it at the appropriate time, the current proposal is an extraordinarily over-broad, open-ended resolution that would authorize the President to send American troops not only into war against Iraq, but also against any nation in the Gulf or Middle East region, however one defines it.

Declaring war, or providing the authority to wage war, is the single most important responsibility given to Congress under the Constitution. As history has shown, wars inevitably have unforeseen, terrible consequences, especially for innocent civilians.

Blank-check resolutions, such as the one the President proposes, can likewise be misinterpreted or used in ways that we do not intend or expect. It has happened before, in ways that many people, including Members of Congress, came to regret. That is why a thorough debate is so necessary. And that is also why this Vermonter will not vote for a blank check for this President or any President. My conscience and the Constitution do not allow it.

The timing of the debate is also important. Congress is being asked to send Americans into battle, even though diplomatic efforts have not yet been exhausted. Nor do we have a complete assessment by U.S. intelligence agencies of the threat that Iraq poses to the United States.

I will have more to say when the debate on the resolution occurs. But I do want to take a few minutes to share some initial thoughts as we begin to consider this difficult question.

The question we face is not whether Saddam Hussein is a menace to his people, to his neighbors and to our national security interests. The Iraqi regime has already invaded Iran and Kuwait, gassed members of its own population, and repeatedly flouted international conventions against armed aggression. It is clear that Iraq has tried to develop a range of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons, with which Iraq might threaten the entire Gulf region.

I would like to see Saddam Hussein gone as much as anyone. But the question is, how immediate is this threat and what is the best way to deal with it, without undercutting our principal goal of protecting the American people from terrorism, promoting peace in the Middle East, and other important U.S. national security priorities?

Some administration officials have suggested that to ask questions about going to war in Iraq is somehow unpatriotic, or indicative of a lack of concern about national security. That is nothing more than election year partisan politics at its worst. These questions are being asked by Americans in every State of the Union.

Until recently our focus has been, rightly so, on destroying al-Qaida and other terrorist networks. While that challenge has already cost billions of dollars and continues to occupy the attention and resources of the Department of Defense and the U.S. intelligence community, the administration has suddenly shifted gears and is now rushing headlong toward war with Iraq.

Some have argued that Congress must act now to strengthen the President's hand as the administration negotiates at the United Nations.

But what we would really be saying is that regardless of what the Security Council does, we have already decided to go our own way. I contrast that with the situation in 1990 when the United States successfully assembled a broad international coalition to fight the Gulf War. The Congress passed a resolution only after the U.N. acted.

President Bush deserves credit for focusing the world's attention on international terrorism and weapons of mass destruction. I have said this over and over again. But the process that has brought us to the brink of preparing for war with Iraq has been notable for its confusion.

The statements of administration officials have been fraught with inconsistencies. They claim to speak for the American people, but average Americans are urging the administration to proceed cautiously on Iraq and to work with the United Nations and the Congress. Our allies are confused and angry about the way this has been handled. Our friends in the Middle East are fearful of what lies ahead.

Fortunately, the President heeded calls to go to the United Nations, and in his speech to the General Assembly he described in great detail Saddam Hussein's long history of deception and defiance of U.N. resolutions. I commended that speech. I am also pleased that it focused on enforcing those resolutions, especially concerning weapons of mass destruction.

But the American people need to hear more than generalized accusations and threatening ultimatums. They need to know the scope and urgency of the problem, Saddam's current and future capabilities, the options for solving the problem, and the short and long-term implications of each course of action, including the very real dangers of unintended consequences.

I agree with the President when he says that Saddam Hussein cannot be trusted and that disarming Iraq is the goal. But the first way to try to accomplish this is not through precipitous, unilateral military action. Rather, it is by building an alliance and working through the United Nations.

Earlier this week, the former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General John Shalikashvili, warned the administration of the dangers of attacking Iraq without the backing of the United Nations:

> We are a global nation with global interests, and undermining the credibility of the United Nations does very little to help provide stability and security and safety to the rest of the world, where we have to operate for economic reasons and political reasons.

Working through the United Nations to readmit the weapons inspectors could be effective in disarming Iraq. Rolf Ekeus the former executive chairman of UNSCOM, has stated:

> International weapons inspectors, if properly backed up by international force, can unearth Saddam Hussein's weapons programs. If we believe that Iraq would be much less of a threat without such weapons, the obvious thing is to focus on getting rid of the weapons. Doing that through an inspection team is not only the most effective way, but would cost less in lives and destruction than an invasion.

A study by the Carnegie Endowment, co-authored by former U.S. military and United Nations officials, supports this view: "With sufficient human and technological resources, time, and political support, inspections can reduce Iraq's [weapons of mass destruction] threat, if not to zero, to a negligible level."

There are distinct advantages to this approach. For one, if Iraq again refuses to comply with U.N. demands, there will be a much stronger case for more forceful action.

It would also help mitigate potential damage to our relations with other nations whose support we need to achieve other important U.S. goals, such as capturing terrorists or promoting peace in the Middle East.

Diplomacy is often tedious. It does not usually make the headlines or the evening news, and much has been made of our past diplomatic failures. But history has shown over and over that diplomacy can not only protect our national interests, it can also enhance the effectiveness of military force when force becomes necessary.

Many experts believe that, despite deception by the Iraqis, the U.N. inspection process destroyed much of the Iraqi weapons program, and new inspections could succeed in substantially disarming Saddam. However, the U.N. regime broke down when Saddam Hussein starting blocking the inspections and the Security Council was divided on how to respond.

I support the unconditional return of inspectors backed up by an international military force. But, the world must not repeat the mistakes of 1998. We have already seen some troubling signs of diplomatic double talk from the Iraqis, particularly on the issue of unimpeded access for the inspectors. The international community cannot tolerate deception and defiance on the part of the Iraqis, and Secretary Powell is right to push for a new U.N. resolution.

Other members of the Security Council should join United States and British efforts to craft a strong new resolution with a deadline for Iraqi compliance. The U.N. has a responsibility to enforce its demands. If the U.N. does not act to ensure that the inspection regime is effectively structured, we will end up back where we were in 1998. Saddam will play the same cat and mouse game, the U.N. will look toothless, and we will be not be able to destroy the Iraqi weapons program.

We need a strengthened inspection regime that has preexisting authority from the Security Council to deploy military force to back up the inspectors if there is resistance from Iraq. I hope that the Administration works with the United Nations, not so much the other way around, to make this happen.

If Iraq resists the inspections, and the President decides to use military force, then the procedure is clear. He can seek a declaration of war from the Congress, and the Congress can vote. But voting on such a resolution at this time would be premature.

A decision to invade Iraq to topple Saddam Hussein should be based on a complete assessment of Iraq's arsenal of weapons of mass destruction, and the threat Iraq poses to the United States. What is the evidence—as opposed to assertions and assumptions—that Iraq is close to acquiring a nuclear weapon? What is the evidence that Iraq is capable of launching, or has any intention of launching, an attack against us or one of our allies?

And there are more questions that are as yet unanswered. What is the evidence that Saddam Hussein wants to commit suicide, which such an attack would guarantee? Why is containment, a strategy which kept the Soviet Union with its thousands of nuclear warheads and chemical and biological weapons at bay for 40 years, not valid for Saddam Hussein, a cold, calculating tyrant who cares above all about staying in power?

I am not sure how these questions can be answered without an updated National Intelligence Estimate. As the Washington Post has reported, there are conflicting views within the intelligence community on Iraq, and without this estimate, which pulls together the different assessments by various parts of the intelligence community, Congress is being asked to give a blank check without all of the facts. I am not going to write a blank check under any circumstances and I am certainly not going to do it with less than all of the facts.

We also must assess whether an attack could spin out of control and draw the entire Middle East into war. As Secretary Rumsfeld acknowledged, an Iraqi attack on Israel could spark a deadly spiral of escalation in which Israeli retaliation prompts responses from other Arab states. Israel has a right of self-defense, and Prime Minister Sharon has said that Israel would retaliate. At the very least, it would further inflame Arab populations whose governments are key to bringing lasting peace to the Middle East and reducing the breeding grounds for extremist Islamic fundamentalism and international terrorism. Some of those breeding grounds are within the borders of some of our closest friends in the region and we should not lose sight of that.

We also must fully assess the costs of a war. The Gulf War cost tens of billions of dollars, but ultimately other nations helped to defray those costs. The President's Economic Adviser said that this war could cost as much as two hundred billion dollars, and that assumes it does not spread beyond Iraq.

As the combat in Afghanistan showed, once again, we have the finest fighting forces in the world. We can be confident that we would win a war with Iraq, but there would be American lives lost, especially if Iraq lures U.S. troops into urban combat.

We have to remember that it is one thing to topple a regime, but it is equally important, and sometimes far more difficult, to rebuild a country to prevent it from becoming engulfed by factional fighting. If these nations cannot successfully rebuild, then they will once again become havens for terrorists.

The President would need to show that a post-Saddam Iraq would not be a continual source of instability and conflict in the region. While Iraq has a strong civil society that might be able to become a democracy, in the chaos of a post-Saddam Iraq another dictator could rise to the top or the country could splinter into ethnic or religious conflict.

To ensure that this does not happen, does the administration foresee basing thousands of U.S. troops in Iraq after the war, and if so, for how many years and for how many billions of dollars at a time when the U.S. economy is weakening, the Federal deficit is growing, and poverty is increasing here at home?

Is the administration committed to investing the resources it is going to take to rebuild Iraq, even when we are falling short of what is needed in Afghanistan?

In Afghanistan, the Taliban was vanquished with a minimum of U.S. casualties, but destroying al-Qaida, which is the primary goal of our efforts in Afghanistan, is proving far more difficult. We are told that while al-Qaida's leadership has been badly disrupted, its members have dispersed widely. Although there is a growing belief that Osama bin Laden is dead, we have no proof.

In addition, the humanitarian situation in Afghanistan is critical. There are thousands of homeless Afghans and a real threat of widespread hunger or famine this winter. There are families who lost loved ones or their homes were destroyed in the violence perpetrated by the Taliban, years of civil war, or from mistakes made during military operations by U.S. and coalition forces.

Yet the administration, despite calls by President Bush for a Marshall plan, did not ask for a single cent for Afghanistan for fiscal year 2003. In addition, $94 million for humanitarian, refugee, and reconstruction assistance to Afghanistan, which Congress added in the supplemental appropriations bill, was not deemed an emergency by the President.

Some relief organizations have already been told that they may have to shut down programs for lack of funds. This is happening in a country that so desperately needs the most basic staples such as water, education and medical help. Afghans who have returned to their homes from outside the country may become refugees once again.

Many other nations have yet to fulfill pledges of assistance to Afghanistan, but if the President is serious about a Marshall Plan, and I believe he is right, then we need to do much more to help rebuild that country.

Yet, as we continue to face difficult challenges in Afghanistan and hunting down members of al-Qaida, not to mention a number of challenges here at home such as the economy, we are suddenly being thrust into a debate about Iraq. It is a debate that will have lasting consequences for our standing in the world as a country that recognizes the importance of multilateral solutions to global problems and that respects international law.

General Wesley Clark, who headed the successful U.S. and NATO military campaign in Kosovo, recently addressed this problem directly, when he wrote:

> The longer this war [on terrorism] goes on—and by all accounts, it will go on for years—the more our success will depend on the willing cooperation and active participation of our allies to root out terrorist cells in Europe and Asia, to cut off funding and support of terrorists and to deal with Saddam Hussein and other threats. We are far more likely to gain the support we need by working through international institutions than outside of them.

The world cannot ignore Saddam Hussein. I can envision circumstances which would cause me to support the use of force against Iraq, if we cannot obtain unimpeded access for U.N. inspectors or the United States is threatened with imminent harm.

But like many Vermonters, based on what I know today, I believe that in order to solve this problem without potentially creating more enemies over the long run, we must act deliberately, not precipitously.

The President has taken the first step, by seeking support from the United Nations. Let us give that process time. If it fails, then we can cross that bridge when we come to it.

But I am reminded of my first year as a U.S. Senator. The year was 1975, and there were still 60 or 70 Senators here who had voted for the Tonkin Gulf resolution a decade earlier. That vote was 88–2, and many of those Senators, Democrats and Republicans, spoke of that vote as the greatest mistake of their careers.

That resolution was adopted hastily after reports of a minor incident which may, in fact, not have occurred at all.

It was interpreted by both the Johnson and Nixon administrations as carte blanche to wage war in Vietnam for over a decade, ultimately involving over half a million American troops and resulting in the deaths of over 58,000 Americans.

I am not suggesting that the administration is trying to deceive Congress or the American people, and I recognize that the situation in Iraq today is very different from Vietnam in 1964. But we learned some painful and important lessons back then. And one that is as relevant today as it was 38 years ago, is that the Senate should never give up its constitutional rights, responsibilities, and authority to the executive branch. It should never shrink from its Constitutional responsibilities, especially when the lives of American servicemen and women are at stake.

So when we consider the resolution on Iraq, I hope we will remember those lessons, because under no circumstances should the Congress pass a blank check and let the administration fill in the amount later. The Constitution does not allow that, and I will not do that.

IRAQ

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to state my intention to vote in favor of a resolution to authorize the use of military force against Iraq. At this point, final resolution language is begin arrived at, and I believe this effort will lead to a resolution which will gain broad, bipartisan support. I support the President, and as a member of the Appropriations Committee, look forward to working with him to ensure that our Armed Forces remain the best-equipped, best-trained fighting force in the world.

Simply put, the world would be a far safer place without Saddam Hussein. As long as he remains in power in Iraq, he will be a threat to the United States, to his neighbors, and to his own people. Over the past decade, he has systematically reneged on his commitments to the international community. He has refused to halt his weapons of mass destruction program, to renounce his support for international terrorism, and to stop threatening peace and stability in the region. The threat that Saddam Hussein continues to pose to our national security interests, and his failure to abide by previous United Nation's Security Council resolutions, provides sufficient justification should military action become necessary.

I am pleased that President Bush has come to the Congress to ask for authorization for the use of force in Iraq, and that the White House is continuing to work with us to develop the appropriate language for a congressional resolution. It is important for the people's representatives in Congress to have the opportunity to fully debate and vote on a matter of this importance. I hope we will move to this vote in an expeditious manner.

In addition, I back the administration's efforts to build support for our policy in Iraq with our allies and with the international community as a whole. Secretary of State Colin Powell has been particularly effective in making the case that Iraq has not complied with the relevant Security Council resolutions and that he remains a threat. Make no mistake, I believe the United States is within its rights to act alone militarily to protect our vital national security interests. I we are required by circumstances to act alone, I will support that decision. U.S. action should not be contingent upon the decisions made by other nations or organizations. My expectation, however, is that this resolution will strengthen the hand of the President at securing United Nations or other forms of international support and cooperation, and I encourage his on-going effort in that regard.

I believe that there is value in building an international coalition of nations and in having the full support of our allies. International support brings practical benefits, such as basing rights for U.S. soldiers and equipment in the region and authorization to use the airspace of neighboring countries to execute military strikes against Iraq. In addition, international support will increase the likelihood of success for our long-term strategy in Iraq and for the ongoing war on global terrorism. I encourage the President to continue his efforts to build a strong coalition of nations to support our Iraq policy.

Mr. President, this issue has particular significance for me—my son Brooks is on active duty in the Army and is a member of one of the three units that General Franks has identified as likely to prosecute this war. There is a strong possibility that I may be voting to send my own son into combat, and that give me special empathy for the families of other American servicemen and women whose own sons and daughters may also be sent to Iraq. Nevertheless, I am willing to cast this vote—one of the most important in my career both as a Senator and certainly as a father—because I recognize the threat that Saddam Hussein represents to world peace. It is my hope that we can move forward quickly, in a bipartisan manner, to approve a resolution that will give the President the authority he needs to defend our Nation.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, this is called the greatest deliberative body in the world. I have always been enormously proud to be a part of it. There are times I think we treat the light too seriously and then the serious too lightly, but in this time and place, the issue of national security is something all of us understand is serious.

This is a deadly serious business. The question of war with Iraq, the question of homeland security, are very important issues. I know there was some controversy yesterday beginning with stories in the newspaper and in the Senate Chamber about statements by the President.

I don't think there is a context in which it is ever appropriate for us to suggest or the President to suggest the opposing political party or members of the opposing political party do not support this country's national security. You will never, ever, hear me suggest a group of my colleagues don't care about this country's national security. I will never do that. It is not the appropriate thing to do.

When you read the President's statements at fundraisers about these matters and hear his suggestion, no matter the context, that the U.S. Senate doesn't seem to care about national security, or places special interests ahead of the Nation's interests with respect to security, that is wrong.

National security is deadly serious business. The issue has to do with the country of Iraq, but much more than that—a very troubled region of the world—the question of whether a tyrant, an international outlaw of sorts, is going to acquire nuclear weapons and threaten his region and the rest of the world, and what we might be considering doing about that, what we should do about it, and what the United Nations considers we should do about it. That is serious business.

Any discussion ever about sending our sons and daughters to war is serious business. It has no place in political fundraisers or in the normal routine of American political partisan activity leading up to an election.

Yesterday I attended a top secret briefing with Vice President CHENEY at his invitation. I happen to think we are all on the same side. We have a single relentless interest, and that is the interests of this country and its security.

Yesterday it was said some of this dispute relates to the discussions about homeland security and the position taken by some Members of the Senate with respect to homeland security. There is no right or wrong way to do homeland security. There are a lot of ideas on how one might address homeland security.

I happen to believe port security is very important. We have 5.7 million containers coming in on container ships every single year; 100,000 of them are inspected, and 5.6 million are not. If a terrorist were to want to introduce a weapon of mass destruction into this country, do you think they would not consider putting it in a container on a ship that is going to come up to a dock at 2 miles an hour and dock at one of our major ports, to be taken off and put on 18 wheels, driven across the country to its target?

No, we will spend $7 or $8 billion this year believing a rogue nation or terrorist will acquire an intercontinental ballistic missile, put a nuclear bomb on top of it; so we will spend $7 to $8 billion on national missile defense. Is that the smart thing to do, at a time when 5.6 million containers will show up at our docks and are uninspected? That is a decision this Congress ought to take a hard look at.

We have differences on the homeland security bill. It is not that one side believes in supporting this country's defense and this country's security and the other side doesn't. There are differences about it. Is putting 170,000 people into one agency, moving all these boxes around into one agency, is that going to make us better, more fit, more capable of defeating terrorism? Maybe. But big, slow, and bureaucratic is not the way to address terrorism. These 170,000 people will not include the CIA and the FBI. Just read the papers in the last couple of months and ask yourself, where have the problems been in the gathering and the interpretation of intelligence and information about prospective terrorists? They are not even a part of this.

Some say if the President doesn't have flexibility to deal with all of these workers in any appropriate way he thinks necessary, somehow it affects our country's security. It is as if taking 170,000 workers and putting them into one agency and providing some basic security, the kind of basic security they have had with respect to jobs, is counter to this Nation's security. I don't believe that at all.

Go back 100 years and ask yourself what happens in a country such as ours when you decide the Federal workforce shall become a part of patronage, Federal workers will have no security, but can be used at the whim of an executive agency. I am not talking about this one; I am talking about any executive agency or any administration. This country has been best served by making sure we have a Federal workforce that we can trust, that works hard, that is honest, that serves this country well, and that doesn't serve any partisan interest ever.

Some say let's get rid of all the worker protections, that is the way to handle homeland security. That doesn't make any sense to me. There is not a Republican or a Democratic way to develop the issue of security for this country. This is not about political parties. It is about trying to figure out what is the best approach to protect this country's interests, what is the best approach to do that.

Those who want to use this politically do no service to this country's interest. It is not about politics. It is, indeed, about security.

Let me make the next point. Yes, security with respect to people such as Saddam Hussein, and I hope at the end of the day we can find a way to pass a resolution in this Senate that has broad bipartisan support. I hope that is what happens. I believe that is what should happen. I hope at the end of the day we will have passed a homeland security bill that works, one that is effective, one that gives us confidence about defeating prospective terrorists and those prospective terrorists' acts against the American people.

Also, there is another issue with respect to security, and that is the security of our country with respect to the economy and what is happening inside our country. Take a look at the stock market these days. The stock market has collapsed like a pancake. Why? Because investors are nervous. There is no predictability, consistency, security. They are nervous.

We have had a circumstance in recent years where big budget surpluses that were projected for 10 years have turned to big budget deficits. We have had a recession. We have had a terrorist attack on our country that was the worst terrorist attack in the history of our country. We have had, in addition to that, a war against terrorists and a collapse of the technology bubble and a collapse of the stock market. We have had a corporate scandal unparalleled in the history of this country. It shakes the faith of the American people in this economic system of ours.

Even as we discuss all of these security issues, let's understand there is one additional security issue, and that is the economic security of the people in this country, an economy that, hopefully, grows and provides opportunities and jobs once again. This economy is in trouble, and it would serve this President and this Congress well to decide we ought to work together to do something about that as well.

More and more people are out of work. What does that mean? Is that a statistic? No, it is not just a statistic; it is someone who comes home from work one day and says: Honey, I have lost my job, a man or woman who is well trained and worked hard, and because the economy runs into some whitewater rapids and some trouble, they are laid off. Hundreds of thousands of Americans are losing their jobs. It is a big problem.

For those who lose their jobs, their statistic is 100-percent unemployment. They wonder whether there are people around here who care about that. Will there be people who care about economic security issues, trying to put the pieces back together in an economy that is troubled?

We are told the average 401(k) retirement savings account has lost about a third of its value. A North Dakotan who worked for the Enron Corporation for many years wrote to me and said: I had $330,000 in my 401(k) account. It was my life savings—$330,000. It is now worth $1,700.

Do you think that family cares about whether we try to do something to fix what is wrong with this economy? That also deals with security—economic security.

We have all across the central heartland of this Nation family farmers, in my judgment the economic all-stars of America. They raise the food that a hungry world so desperately needs. But a massive drought has occurred across much of this country. Many of those farmers and ranchers have produced nothing.

In my home area of southwestern North Dakota, the landscape looks like scorched earth. It looks like the moonscape, in fact, with no vegetation.

The question is: What about economic security for people who have suffered a natural disaster of a drought? This Senate answered that. The Senate said: Let's provide some emergency help, just as we do when tornadoes, earthquakes, fires, and floods happen. When these natural disasters occur, this country says to people affected: You are not alone; we are here with you; we want to help. So this Senate, with 79 votes, said: We want to help you; we want to help provide some economic security during a tough time, during a disaster. The drought was not your fault, we say to farmers and ranchers.

But the House of Representatives and the President do not support the bill we passed in the Senate that also deals with economic security.

Nobody in this Chamber has a farm someplace 15, 25 miles from town and has invested virtually everything they have in seeds to plant in the ground in the spring and then discovered it did not rain and those seeds are gone, there is no crop, and they do not have the money for family expenses to continue, so they are going to have to have an auction sale. No one in this Chamber suffers that fate—no one.

No one in this Chamber gets up to do chores in the morning—milk cows, feed the cattle, service farm machinery. Nobody does that. But this Chamber understands because 79 Members of the Senate voted for a disaster package to help family farmers during this disaster.

We hope that when we have all of this talk about security, which I think is deadly important and deadly serious—we hope security includes a discussion about economic security, and part of that economic security is providing a disaster bill and disaster help to family farmers when they need it. I ask the House of Representatives and the President to stop blocking that disaster bill.

Another part of this issue of economic security is fixing what is wrong with respect to corporate governance in dealing with corporate scandals. We passed a bill in the Senate dealing with that, but it is not quite enough. We must do more.

Senator SARBANES, in my judgment, deserves the hero's award for being able to put together the bill he did. I was proud to vote for it. One amendment, to give an example of the unfinished business, I tried to offer and which was blocked for 3 or 4 days by my colleague, Senator GRAMM from Texas, dealt with bankruptcy. That amendment is not now law. Let me give an example of what I was trying to do and why it is unfinished business if we are really going to provide economic security.

The Financial Times did a study of the 25 largest bankruptcies in America. Here is what they discovered: Of the 25 largest corporate bankruptcies in America, the year and a half before bankruptcy, 208 executives of those corporations took $3.3 billion out of the company. Then they went bankrupt.

My belief is, when executives are taking a company to bankruptcy and filling their pockets with gold, there is something fundamentally wrong. Investors lose their savings, employees lose their jobs, everybody else loses their shirt, and the top executives of the largest bankrupt companies in the country walk away to their homes behind gated walls someplace and count their money. They walked off with $3.3 billion in the 25 largest bankruptcies. Shame on them.

I wanted to offer an amendment that recaptures and disgorges those ill-gotten gains. Does anybody here believe that anybody, as they take a company into bankruptcy, the year before it goes to bankruptcy should be getting incentive payments and bonus payments for a company that is going down the tubes? Does anybody believe that? That is unfinished business, and there are other pieces dealing with this corporate issue to which we must respond.

The other unfinished business deals with health care, for example, and prescription drugs. We have not passed a prescription drug bill and put a prescription drug benefit in the Medicare Program despite all of our best efforts. That also deals with economic security because when someone needs lifesaving medicine and cannot afford it, it means that medicine saves no lives.

We have people in this country who desperately need prescription drugs to provide the miracle cures and the opportunities for a better life and cannot afford them. We believe putting a prescription drug benefit in the Medicare Program is the right thing to do. No, not some shell, not some phony gimmick by saying, as the House did, just cobbling up a little effort: By the way, let's call this a prescription drug benefit and let the managed care organizations handle it. That does not make any sense. They know it. We know it. They are just trying to create a defensive position to say they did something when, in fact, they did nothing.

We are going to do something, and we should, with respect to prescription drugs for senior citizens. We ought to do it right and do it well. That is another piece of unfinished business that deals with security—economic security and family security.

In Dickinson, ND, a woman went to her doctor with breast cancer and had surgery for breast cancer, and the doctor said to the woman on Medicare: In order to prevent a recurrence of breast cancer, the best chance to prevent a recurrence, you need to take these prescription drugs I am going to prescribe for you.

She said: Doctor, what does it cost? And he told her.

She said: Doctor, there is no way I can afford to buy those prescription drugs. I am just going to have to take my chances.

That is how the doctor testified at a forum I held at home in North Dakota. That is why it is important to complete the undone business dealing with economic security, security for American seniors, to put a prescription drug benefit in the Medicare Program that really works. We have not been able to do that because we are blocked by people who do not want that to happen.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DORGAN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. REID. The Senator has served in the House of Representatives and now in the Senate and understands, as well as anyone, the procedures that take place in both bodies. We have been on homeland security for the 4th week. I was told yesterday they had 30 people who wanted to speak on this amendment. As I mentioned earlier this morning, that is a code ward for "filibuster."

Is it not unusual that a President, who says he wants this bill so badly, has not helped move the bill in 4 weeks, and now the majority leader has arranged a procedure where they can have a vote on the so-called Gramm amendment and they are not taking yes for an answer? Do you think they are really serious about moving homeland security?

Mr. DORGAN. There is no evidence of that in the last 3 or 4 weeks. If ever you have seen an example of slow walking, this has been it.

We can, should, and will pass a homeland security bill. We are going to need help to do it. Those who say they want to pass this bill but have their heels dug in and are preventing action by the Senate, in my judgment, are delaying the inevitable. We will pass homeland security because we should.

We have an amendment on which we ought to vote. We do not need 40 speakers after 4 weeks. Have a vote on the amendment. That is the way to deal with this. I understand there are people who oppose the amendment. The opposition comes from people who either want it their way or they do not want it at all. They think, If we cannot get our way, we do not want legislation to move.

Mr. REID. If the Senator will yield, I have learned a lot from the Senator from North Dakota on agricultural matters because the State of North Dakota depends heavily on its agricultural base for everything in the State. As a result of that, I was 1 of 79 Senators who supported—because the case was made so clearly—farmers all over America who were in desperate need of help because of the drought that has struck the country. We have in the Interior appropriations bill, which is also part of what we have been doing for 4 weeks, a provision to give that aid.

I ask the Senator, would it not be better to do that now than to have this legislation hung up on how money will be distributed to fight fires?

Mr. DORGAN. There is an urgent need to get this bill completed. The Interior bill, as well, has been on the floor. For those who are listening to this discussion, we are working on two issues simultaneously. They call it dual tracking. We have homeland security and the Interior appropriations bill. Both have been on the floor for weeks.

With respect to the Interior bill, the 79 votes cast for the issue of providing disaster aid for family farmers demonstrates the strong support of this Senate for doing that. Yet it is part of an Interior bill that is being held up.

There is an urgent need to get this done. We have family farmers, and the families are sitting around their supper tables talking about their hopes and dreams, whether they are going to have to have an auction sale. Will they be able to make it? Or get through the winter? Or raise cattle in the spring? Or plant seed in the spring? They do not know. If we provide disaster help, they will. If we do not, many will not make it.

I have been pleased, and will always be pleased as a Member of this body, to support, in every circumstance, those around this country who suffer disasters. When Florida is hit by a devastating hurricane, or California by a devastating earthquake, or a dozen other natural disasters I could name, I am the first to say we ought to help. I always want to vote for it. I always want our country to say to those people affected by the disasters, you are not alone; the rest of the country is with you.

That is why I was so pleased with what the Senate did, by 79 votes, saying we need a disaster bill to deal with the devastating drought. In some areas it is as bad as it has been since the 1930s.

In answer to the question, there is urgent business in the Interior bill. We ought to get it done. Those who are blocking it ought to stop blocking it.

Mr. REID. Finally, because of the need to pass homeland security and certainly this drought assistance, and we are spending so much unnecessary time on it, I have said this is an effort to divert attention from all the issues of the economy, and I have heard the Senator from North Dakota ask on many occasions: Why are we not doing something about passing appropriations bills? Why are we not doing something to stimulate the economy? Why are we not doing something with bankruptcy reform? Election reform? Why aren't we doing something with generic drugs? The Senator talked about the Patients' Bill of Rights, terrorism insurance—on all the domestic issues, we have heard not a word and are getting no help from the majority in the House or the minority in the Senate, and certainly not from the White House.

Does the Senator acknowledge we are not spending much time on economic issues?

Mr. DORGAN. I talked about the issue of security and I said it is deadly serious business, national security, homeland security. But there is another area very important for the country. That is economic security. We are spending virtually no time on that. We ought to. The American people deserve to have a Congress that, yes, is concerned about national security, concerned about homeland security, but that is willing to tackle during tough economic times the economic security issues as well. This Congress has not been willing to do that.

Let me end as I began, because this is important. I will never minimize the importance of the security issues. In my judgment, the President and the Congress need to act and speak as one when we talk about the security of this country. No one will never, ever hear me say any Member in this Chamber does not believe in the security of this country or does not act to support the security of this country. I will never say that. I don't want to hear the President say it. I don't want to hear anyone else say it. I believe every Republican, Democrat, conservative and liberal, believes in their heart that whatever they are doing represents the security interests of this country. They love this country and believe in the country, and that goes for everyone serving this country. I don't want anyone to suggest in any way under any context there are those who believe in security more than others. We all love this country. We all want to do what is right and best for this country. I will strongly support the security of this country. It is national security. It is homeland security. It is economic security.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the second half of the time shall be under the control of the Republican leader or his designee.

The Senator from Pennsylvania.

HOMELAND SECURITY

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to encourage my Senate colleagues to pass legislation on homeland security and to send it to conference. There are many more agreements, much more agreement than disagreement, and the disagreements are relatively minor.

Last week, I said the Senate was dysfunctional because we had not passed a budget resolution. For the first time since the Budget Act was passed in 1974, the Congress has not passed a budget resolution. The Senate has not passed a budget resolution. Thirteen appropriations bills have not been passed. We have been on the Interior bill for weeks now and homeland security for weeks. Long speeches. Not getting to the point. Not voting. Not moving ahead with the legislation.

Last week, it was an accurate characterization to say the Senate was dysfunctional. This week, the Senate has become a chamber of rancor. It is plain that President Bush did not intend to impugn anyone's patriotism. He was commenting on two provisions of the homeland security bill related to labor-management relations. Even on those matters, the differences are relatively minor. The relationship between Republicans and Democrats is better characterized by the embrace between President Bush and the majority leader at the joint session of Congress shortly after September 11, 2001.

The current controversy may well be giving encouragement, aid, and comfort to Osama bin Laden, deep in some cave, and Saddam Hussein, in the bowels of some bomb shelter. However, we know who the enemies are. The enemies are the terrorists and the enemies are those who pose the risk of using weapons of mass destruction.

I believe it is vital to move ahead with the homeland security bill to correct major deficiencies which have been disclosed in the intelligence agencies in the United States. We had a veritable blueprint, prior to September 11, 2001, and if we had connected all of the dots, I think the chances were good that we could have avoided September 11. The Congress of the United States and the administration have a duty, a solemn duty, to do everything in our power to prevent another terrorist attack. We lost thousands of Americans and the official word from the administration, articulated by a number of ranking executive department officials, is that there will be another terrorist attack. It is not a matter of if, it is not a matter of whether, it is a matter of where or when.

I am not prepared to accept that conclusion. I believe the United States has the intelligence resources and can muster the intelligence resources to prevent another September 11.

When I served as chairman of the Intelligence Committee in the 104th Congress, I introduced legislation which would have brought all of the intelligence agencies under one umbrella. There have been repeated efforts to accomplish that, not just the legislation I introduced in 1996. There is on the President's desk a plan submitted by former National Security Adviser, General Scowcroft, to accomplish a coordination of all intelligence agencies. However, it has not been done because of the turf battles between the various intelligence agencies. Those turf battles regrettably are endemic and epidemic in Washington, DC. They have to come to a conclusion.

We have the mechanism now, the homeland security bill, to make those corrections. We knew prior to September 11, from the FBI Phoenix memorandum, about men taking flight training who had big pictures of Osama bin Laden. The report was disregarded. We knew prior to September 11 that there were two terrorists in Kuala Lumpur. The CIA knew about it, but did not tell the FBI or INS, and they turned out to be two of the pilots on September 11.

We know from the efforts made by the Minneapolis Office of the FBI to get a warrant under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act as to Zacarias Moussaoui, which would have given us a veritable blueprint of al-Qaida's intention, that certainly it would have led us to the trail and could have prevented September 11.

Then we have the famous, or infamous, report coming to the National Security Agency on September 10 about an attack the very next day, which was not translated.

There is much more I could comment about, but the time is limited.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SPECTER. OK, on your time.

Mr. REID. We don't have any time, but I am sure if we need any time——

Mr. SPECTER. Senator DOMENICI, who is the only Senator waiting, says it is OK, so I will be glad to respond to the question.

Mr. REID. The reason I want to have an exchange with the Senator is I think maybe what the Senator said here today could resolve this homeland security matter.

I believe, as the Senator from Pennsylvania does, that if there are differences we have here in the Senate version of the bill, it will go to conference with the House. The House and the Senate will sit down, the White House people will be involved, as they always are in important conferences, and we will come up with a product. I think instead of scrumming, as we are here, I think we would be better off, as the Senator has suggested, to get a bill out of here, get it to conference, and get something to the President's desk.

So I fully support, as I heard him, the Senator from Pennsylvania. I think that is the way to resolve this matter. Get a bill out of here, get it to the conference, and, as the Senator said—how much difference is there between the two versions of this amendment that is creating so much controversy? There are differences, but I am not sure they are as big as some think.

The labor-management issue, which seems to be a big problem, if that matter is as close as what the Senator from Pennsylvania said, I think it could be resolved in conference.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada for that question, and I am glad to respond. I had intended to talk a little later about the differences. Let me take them up now to emphasize the point that the Senator from Nevada has made, that the differences are not very big.

I agree with the Senator from Nevada that we ought to send the bill to conference. When we had prescription drugs on the Senate floor, I voted for the Republican measure, Grassley-Snowe, and then I voted for the bill put up by the Democrats, by Senator GRAHAM of Florida. It seemed to me the important thing was to get the matter to conference so that the issue could be resolved with finality.

The two pending issues which are outstanding on labor relations, the difference between the bill offered by Senator GRAMM and the bill offered by Senator LIEBERMAN, with the Breaux amendment, boil down to this: It is the President's authority to waive the provisions on collective bargaining in the event of a national emergency.

Now, listen closely to what the President must do under existing law:

> The President may issue an order excluding any agency or subdivision thereof for coverage under this chapter, collective bargaining, if the President determines that, A, the agency or subdivision has as a primary function intelligence, counterintelligence, investigative, or national security work; and the provisions of this chapter cannot be applied to that agency or subdivision in a manner consistent with national security requirements and considerations.

This is what Senator BREAUX wishes to add:

> The President could not use his authority without showing that, No. 1, the mission and responsibilities of the agencies or subdivision materially changed and, No. 2, a majority of such employees within such agencies or subdivision have as their primary duty: Intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative work directly related to terrorism investigation.

It is true the Breaux amendment does add a requirement for the President to exercise his authority. It is true that there is an additional requirement, and the President does lose a little power. However, the requirements of existing law which relate to intelligence, counterintelligence, and investigation are very similar to the provisions of the Breaux amendment which again relate to intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative work directly related to terrorism investigation.

The President must make an additional showing. However, it is a showing which is very much in line with what the President has to show under existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 10 minutes.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, what is the order following the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no order of speakers.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that I follow him for up to 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my colleague from New Mexico.

Mr. President, the other provision which is in controversy relates to the flexibility which the President is seeking on six categories. The Breaux amendment would allow the President to have the flexibility under four of the categories, and then in the event of disagreement between management and the union, the controversy would go to the Federal Services Impasse Panel.

There are seven members of that panel and all have been appointed by President Bush. It is customary for that panel to change when the administration changes. The four categories which are in the Breaux bill allow for performance appraisal, classification, pay raise system, and labor-management relations, all of which the President wants, and only the limitation going before the impasse panel, which should not be an obstacle, and then the other two are adverse actions and appeals.

So that if you boil it all down, our area of disagreement is really very minor. The bill which is going to come out of conference is obviously going to take up these issues. We know as a matter of practice when there is a Presidential veto or a firm statement about a Presidential veto, invariably the Congress relents on an individual point.

So it would be my hope that we could yet resolve this controversy. I talked to Senator BREAUX, Senator GRAMM of Texas, and Senator LIEBERMAN, and the parties are very close. I have not yet stated a preference for either position. I am being lobbied on both sides. It is a very major matter for my constituency on both sides, a very large labor constituency in Pennsylvania, and very grave concern on my part that the President's powers not be diminished in a way which would impede his efforts on a Department of Homeland Security.

When you take a look at where we are with the various problems of lapses in security—there have been a parade of witnesses before the joint intelligence committees of the House and Senate. We counted some of these, not all. In view of the limited time, Mr. President, I ask that there be added at the conclusion of my comments a recitation of a number of other warnings which were given, which could have provided a veritable blueprint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Our job is plain, it seems to me, and that is to move ahead, to have a reconciliation, a rapprochement. Let us not have this as a chamber of rancor. Let us not have a dysfunctional Senate. We have many bills which are now pending in the conference committees, which have not been acted upon—the energy bill, the Patients' Bill of Rights, the voting machine correction bill, the terrorism reinsurance bill, the bankruptcy bill, and others, which are awaiting conference. We have a very heavy duty to the American people to complete the people's business, and we need to finish the appropriations bills and not have a continuing resolution.

I think it is becoming apparent to the American people that we have a dysfunctional Senate. We have to move away from that. We have to let our enemies—the terrorists and Saddam Hussein—know that the Democrat and Republican Party system is better characterized by that famous embrace between the President and Senate majority leader at the Joint Session of Congress shortly after September 11.

I intend to return to the floor to talk in more detail about the Breaux amendment, but I think it is plain by an analysis of what the Breaux amendment does that it ought to be resolved and it ought not to stop this Congress in legislating. It would be a travesty and a tragedy if we were to go over into next year without having a homeland security bill so that we can correct the major problems in the intelligence function of this country.

I again thank my colleague from New Mexico and yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

A VIRTUAL BLUEPRINT

NSA INTERCEPTS

The NSA intercepted two messages on the eve of September 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon warning that something was going to happen the next day, but the messages were not translated until September 12. The Arabic-language messages said, "the match is about to begin," and "Tomorrow is zero-hour." They came from sources—a location or phone number—that were of high enough priority to translate them within two days but were not put in the top priority category, which included communications from Usama bin Laden or his senior al Qaeda assistants.

MURAD

In January 1995, the Philippine National Police discovered Ramzi Yousef's bomb making lab in Manila and arrested an accomplice named Abdul Hakim Murad. Captured materials and interrogations of Murad revealed Yousef's plot to kill the Pope, bomb U.S. and Israeli embassies in Manila, blow up 12 U.S.-owned airliners over the Pacific Ocean, and crash a plane into CIA headquarters. Murad is a promoter of the same radical interpretation of Sunni Islam ideology as Usama bin Laden, who emerged during this time frame as promoting this radical ideology.

NOTE: This provided a data point on a terrorist group discussing a plan to use an aircraft as a weapon in the possession of the Intelligence Community.

PHOENIX MEMORANDUM

The FBI paid too little attention to a July 10, 2001 memorandum written by an FBI agent in Phoenix urging bureau headquarters to investigate Middle Eastern men enrolled in American flight schools. The "Phoenix Memo" cited Usama bin Laden by name and suggested that his followers could use the schools to train for terror operations.

Federal authorities have been aware for years that a small number of suspected terrorists with ties to bin Laden had received flight training at schools in the United States and abroad.

Pakistani terrorist plotter Murad, who had planned to blow up airliners over the Pacific, trained at four U.S. schools in the early 1990s.

CRAWFORD BRIEFING

President Bush and his top advisers were informed by the CIA in early August 2001 that terrorists associated with Usama bin Laden had discussed the possibility of hijacking airplanes. The top-secret briefing memo presented to President Bush on August 6 carried the headline, "Bin Laden Determined to Strike in US," and was primarily focused on recounting al Qaeda's past efforts to attack and infiltrate the United States.

MOUSSAOUI & MINNEAPOLIS FBI

Minneapolis FBI agents investigating terror suspect Zacarias Moussaoui last August were severely hampered by officials at FBI headquarters, who resisted seeking FISA surveillance and physical search warrants, applied erroneous probable cause standards, and admonished agents for seeking help from the CIA.

KUALA LUMPUR

The CIA tracked two of the Flight 77 (Pentagon) terrorists to a Qaeda summit in Malaysia in January 2000, then did not share the information as the terrorists reentered America and began preparations for September 11. The CIA tracked one of the terrorists, Nawaf Alhazami, as he flew from the meeting to Los Angeles, and discovered that another of the men, Khalid Almihdhar, had already obtained a multiple-entry visa that allowed him to enter and leave the United States as he pleased. The CIA did nothing with this information. Instead, during the year and nine months after the CIA identified them as terrorists, Alhazami and Almihdhar lived openly in the United States, using their real name, obtaining drivers licenses, opening bank accounts and enrolling in flight schools—until the morning of September 11, when they boarded American Airlines Flight 77 and crashed into the Pentagon.

BIN LADEN

On February 26, 1993, a bomb was detonated in the parking garage of the World Trade Center in New York City. On June 24, 1993, the FBI arrested eight individuals for plotting to bomb a number of New York City landmarks, including the United Nations building and the Lincoln and Holland tunnels. The central figures in these plots were Ramzi Yousef and Shaykh Omar Abd al-Rahman—both of whom have been linked to Usama Bin Laden and are now serving prison sentences.

Following the August 1998, bombings of two U.S. Embassies in East Africa, Intelligence Community leadership recognized how dangerous Bin Laden's network was and that he intended to strike in the United States. In December 1998 DCI George Tenet provided written guidance to his deputies at the CIA, declaring, in effect, "war" with Bin Laden.

Concern about Bin Laden continued to grow over time and reached peak levels in the spring and summer of 2001, as the Intelligence Community faced increasing numbers of reports of imminent al Qaeda attacks against U.S. interests. In July and August 2001, that rise in intelligence reporting began to decrease, just as three additional developments occurred in the United States: the Phoenix memo; the detention of Zacarias Moussaoui; and the Intelligence Community's realization that two individuals with ties to Usama Bin Laden's network—Nawaf Alhazami and Khalid Almihdhar—were possibly in the United States.

In June 1998, the Intelligence Community learned that Usama Bin Laden was considering attacks in the U.S., including Washington, DC, and New York. This information was provided to senior U.S. Government officials in July 1998.

In August 1998, the Intelligence Community obtained information that a group of unidentified Arabs planned to fly an explosive-laden plane from a foreign country into the World Trade Center. The FBI's New York office took no action on the information. The Intelligence Community has acquired additional information since then indicating links between this Arab group and al Qaeda.

In September 1998, the Intelligence Community obtained information that Usama Bin Laden's next operation could involve flying an aircraft loaded with explosives into a U.S. airport and detonating it; this information was provided to senior U.S. Government officials in late 1998.

In October 1998, the Intelligence Community obtained information that al Qaeda was trying to establish an operative cell within the United States. This information indicated there might be an effort underway to recruit U.S. citizen Islamists and U.S.-based expatriates from the Middle East and North Africa;

In the fall of 1998, the Intelligence Community received additional information concerning a Bin-Laden plot involving aircraft in the New York and Washington, DC, areas;

In November 1998, the Intelligence Community learned that a Bin Laden was attempting to recruit a group of five to seven young men from the United States to strike U.S. domestic targets.

In the spring of 1999, the Intelligence Community learned about a planned Bin Laden attack on a U.S. Government facility in Washington, DC. Additionally, in 1999, the threat of an explosive-laden aircraft being used in a suicide attack against the Pentagon, CIA headquarters, or the White House, was noted in a Library of Congress report to the National Intelligence Council.

In late 1999, the Intelligence Community learned of Bin Laden's possible plans to attack targets in Washington, DC, and New York City during the New Year's Millennium celebrations.

On December 14, 1999, an individual named Ahmed Ressam was arrested as he attempted to enter the United States from Canada with detonator materials in his car. Ressam's intended target was Los Angeles International Airport. Ressam, who has links to Usama Bin Laden's terrorist network, has not been formally sentenced yet.

In March 2000, the Intelligence Community obtained information regarding the types of targets that operatives in Bin Laden's network might strike. The Statue of Liberty was specifically mentioned, as were skyscrapers, ports, and airports, and nuclear power plants;

Between late March and September 2001, the Intelligence Community detected numerous indicators of an impeding terrorist attack, some of which pointed specifically to the United States as a possible target. Among these are:

Between May and July, the National Security Agency reported at least 33 communications indicating a possible, imminent terrorist attack—none of which were specific as to where, when, or how an attack might occur, nor was it clear that any of the individuals involved in these intercepted communications had any first-hand knowledge of where, when, or how an attack might occur. These reports were widely disseminated within the Intelligence Community.

In May 2001, the Intelligence Community obtained information that supporters of Usama Bin Laden were reportedly planning to infiltrate the United States via Canada in order to carry out a terrorist operation. This report mentioned an attack within the United States, though it did not say where in the U.S., or when, or how an attack might occur. In July 2001, this information was shared with the FBI, the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), U.S. Customs Service, and the State Department and was included in a closely held intelligence report for senior government officials in August 2001.

In May 2001, the Intelligence Community received information that seven individuals associated with Usama Bin Laden departed various locations for the United States;

In June 2001, the DCI's Counter Terrorism Center (CTC) had information that key operatives in Usama Bin Laden's organization were disappearing while others were preparing for martyrdom;

In July 2001, the DCI's CTC was aware of an individual who had recently been in Afghanistan who had reported, "Everyone is talking about an impending attack." The Intelligence Community was also aware that Bin Laden had stepped up his propaganda efforts in the preceding months;

In the late summer 2001, the Intelligence Community obtained information that an individual associated with al Qaeda was considering mounting terrorist operations in the United States. There was no information available as to the timing of possible attacks or on the alleged targets in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to Senator SPECTER, I am sure you had some more to say and I apologize, but it seems like the harder I try to get time here the worse it works out for me.

Mr. SPECTER. It is the Senator's turn, and I am anxious to hear what the Senator has to say.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

THE BUDGET

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I made a few remarks 3 or 4 days ago talking about where we are and what we are doing, and I would like to finish those remarks today, perhaps start on a discussion of the American economy.

First, in less than 5 days the new fiscal year begins. That means if you are a businessman, no matter how small or how large, you would be closing down your books, you would be adding everything up, you would be doing a couple of additions and subtractions, and you would find out how well or how poorly you did—a very important event in the life of an ongoing business.

The United States is similar except it is much bigger. Frankly, it does not keep its books nearly as well as the small businesspeople of America, who must keep them much better than we do because of the Internal Revenue Service if nothing else. We are not audited by anybody. We do ours in some strange ways.

The truth is that the year ends October 1. I think both the occupant of the Chair and the Senator from New Mexico can remember when it was July. We found out that was too soon in the year. If you started a year in January, you started work, it was too quick to have everything done in July. So we had a completed year, since I have been a Senator, when we went to October. We had to fix that up. And now October was thought to be ample time to get our work done.

Not a single appropriations bill has been sent to the President. The last time this situation occurred, excluding last year after the attacks, was in 1995 during the infamous Government shutdown. You remember that, the shutdown period.

I come to the Senate because there has been a lot of talk about who is to blame for what. Frankly, I would like to suggest that the majority party and the majority leader bear the burden of running the Senate. They can run it with all the laments they can put forth and all the blame they can shed upon the situation, but the truth is, as difficult as it is, it is their job and the first and most important thing is that they are supposed to prepare and have a vote on a budget resolution. While it is not everything, to many things that transpire after it, it is a very big issue, a very big instrument.

So we find ourselves, as I indicated, where we are 5 days from the end of the year. All of those appropriations bills that are coming along that have not been finished pick up October 1 as the starting date because the other ones that we put in run out. So if we do not do something by October 1, most parts of Government will shut down.

We found that out in 1995 when there was a cleavage between the Congress and the President. The President would not sign some bills because he did not like certain items, and clearly he pinned the blame on Congress for sending those bills up to him in a manner that he would not sign and closed down the Government, one piece after another. So it was a job that we had to get done.

I believe my friend—the new chairman of the Budget Committee who took over in the middle of a 2-year cycle because the Democrats got one additional Member to vote with them, so everything went to them—went their way. I believe the answer was it was just too hard to get a budget.

The occupant of the chair knows how difficult it was. He sat there for days on end. But that wasn't anything new. Senators before him and Senators after him, if we still keep a budget, will sit there for hours on end trying to get it done. It should have been done. A budget resolution is an important issue upon which we should focus.

It is important we in the Senate understand we did not get a budget resolution because some thought it was not necessary. They were wrong. Some thought we would get along without it, but they were wrong. The American people are the ones suffering because we can't get our work done.

I don't believe there is any room to lay blame for that on this side of the aisle. It is that side of the aisle—the majority party of the Senate now, this particular month—that has to bear the blame.

Back in May, the majority leader blamed the lack of a budget on an evenly divided membership in the Senate. Early this month, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee—who has a propensity, because he speaks well, to put his nose in legislative business as if he were one of us—said on the Sunday show, "Face the Nation":

> We couldn't do it because we need 60 votes and we couldn't get 60 votes.

Wrong, wrong, wrong. A budget resolution needs 50 votes—not 60.

The occupant of the chair, as a valued member of the Budget Committee, knows that. Every Senator knows that. There are many votes that are 60 votes because you did not get a budget resolution—because the law says you are punished in some instances. Some things can't get passed with a majority, even though we require a majority. That the budget laws say without the budget, you have to have 60 votes, but not to pass it.

The budget should have been passed. We should have gone back to it on a number of occasions, and it should have been done.

Finally, just last week the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, referring to an amendment that was voted on by the Senate on June 20, clearly implying it was the Senate budget, literally said here on the floor, and I quote:

> We got 59 votes for that proposal on a bipartisan basis. We needed a supermajority of 60.

That is wrong. You needed 60 votes. Because you didn't have a budget which did not permit you to do what he was suggesting, we didn't get 60 votes.

So that ought to be corrected. Everybody should know the fact we did not have a budget caused it; not that we were voting on a budget that needed 60 votes.

I want to be very clear. We have not voted on a budget resolution in the Senate this year. This will be the first time the Budget Act in its life—which, incidentally, is not a very long life. It is only 27 years old. That means Senator DOMENICI could have been here for its entire life. I have been. I could have been on the committee for its entire life. I was. I could have been the chairman for ½ of its time in existence. I was—maybe 2 years less than ½.

In any event, we split it when we were controlling the Senate. That is who deemed that.

There has not been a budget resolution brought before the Senate to be debated on the floor this year. The chairman of the Budget Committee knows this, and he knows the majority leader knows this, and to even hint we would have considered a budget but didn't pass it is not so.

We have now learned—and I hope they have learned—that if the Democrats are still in control next year, which I doubt—but if they are, we should have learned you had better bring it up, even if you are one or two votes short. And you had better spend 2 weeks debating and see what happens. At least you will have tried, and you might be surprised. Somebody around who would rather there not be a budget would say I will vote to report it out.

I have been, as I indicated, on the Budget Committee since its beginning in the 94th Congress. I have been honored to serve on it. I am very embarrassed by what is happening to it because it is getting very close to becoming something we use as an instrument to require 60 votes for certain things we do and don't do. But as far as it being the policy determiner we expected, it is beginning to fall apart as we speak and as we vote. I know what a budget is. I think I know what we should have done.

Just last week the Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, referring to an amendment that was voted on in the Senate on June 20, clearly implying that it was a Senate budget, literally said here on the floor and I quote: ". . . we got 59 votes for that proposal on a bipartisan basis. We needed a supermajority, which is 60."

Mr. President, let me be as clear as I can possibly be—we have not voted on a budget resolution in the Senate this year. This will be the first time in the Budget Act's nearly 27 year history that the Senate has not adopted a budget blueprint.

No budget resolution has ever been brought to the Senate floor to be debated and voted on this year. The Chairman of the Budget Committee knows this, the Majority Leader knows this, and to even hint that we have considered a budget, is an absolute insult to those of us that have worked to make the budget process a functioning part of the fiscal decisionmaking mechanism here in the Senate.

I think I know what a budget is, and let me assure those who may care, it does not take 60 votes to adopt a budget in the Senate. Despite what the Majority Leader, the current Chairman, or the Democratic National Committee Chairman says.

In fact, of those nearly 32 budget conference resolutions the Senate has adopted over the years, almost half, fourteen, were adopted with less than 60 votes.

And last year, as Chairman of the Budget Committee, in an evenly divided Senate, I had considered and we adopted a budget resolution for FY 2002. It was tough but we worked hard and in that evenly divided Senate, the Senate passed its budget blueprint by a vote of 65–35.

So let us be clear, it does not take 60 votes to adopt a budget.

So what other excuse is given for not adopting a congressional budget this year?

Unbelievable, the Chairman of the Budget Committee comes to the floor and says because the House of Representatives adopted a budget that used OMB assumptions or did not make 10 year estimates, that it was impossible for the Senate to adopt a budget.

Mr. President, to blame somehow the House of Representatives for adopting their own budget resolution as the reason why the Senate did not consider its own, simply defies logic.

That is why the Budget Act created a concurrent resolution, that is why the Budget Act established a conference on a House-passed and Senate-passed budget resolution. I have been in many conferences on budget resolutions, and they were tough, but the fact that I knew they were going to be tough, never stopped me from doing my job as Chairman of the Budget Committee, and again the Senate has always adopted a budget resolution.

So what other excuse is made for the Senate not acting on a budget? The President's budget submitted way back in February is the other excuse for us not acting here in the Senate.

This has to be the weakest of all excuses. This is not the President's budget we are expected to adopt. This is not the President's budget resolution. This is the "congressional budget."

We are an equal branch of government in this balancing act between the Executive and the Legislative over fiscal policy.

I have never been shy about expressing differences with Presidents of either party over the years when I though their budget proposals needed modifications. The same holds true for President Bush's executive budget plan transmitted to Congress last February.

But I have always guarded the congressional prerogative to produce a "congressional budget." This is our responsibility under the Budget Act and I would also go so far as to say, under the Constitution. Because the President has a budget plan that might differ from one that Congress might produce, is certainly no reason for the Congress not to act. In fact, I would argue it is a reason for the Congress to act.

I do not think it should be any surprise that we begin a new fiscal year with no appropriation bills at the President's desk to sign. The failure of this Senate to consider and act on a budget blueprint, to sit down and tough it out back in the spring, has made the appropriation process stumble and fall this year.

Last year in the aftermath of the September 11 attacks, Congress also did not have any regular appropriation bills enacted before the beginning of this fiscal year. This was understandable under the circumstances.

But I contend the major reason the appropriation process has failed this year, is because we were not willing to adopt a budget resolution. You have to go back to 1996 to find the last time no appropriations were enacted before the beginning of the fiscal year. A time under President Clinton and the infamous 26 days of government shut-down and 14 continuing resolutions.

No, there is no other way to say it and it is tough. This Majority Leader and this Chairman of the Budget Committee and this Senate failed in their one basic responsibility under the Budget Act—produce a budget resolution. And now everybody else is to blame but ourselves. I think those who take the time to understand what is going on here can see the hypocrisy of the Majority Leader and Chairman's statements.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I have a statement I want to start and then put the remainder in the RECORD, and if we get time in the next 2 weeks, I will come back a couple of times.

The economy is much in the air now. It is not as much as perhaps the Iraq situation. But the Democratic Party and their leaders want to make it the important issue and put the war in the backseat.

I don't think that is going to happen because the people of this country know the war is an imminent problem. And, if we have a war, the amount of money we plan to spend in the budget will probably get changed in a mammoth way to accommodate the needs of the war.

When we had the war in the gulf the last time, our allies paid most of the bill. I recall looking at the formula that was drawn by the OMB. Actually, our allies just took the formula and said we are bound by the formula, and wrote the checks. Some of those paid as much as $13 billion for that war. That was our friend we were all arguing about which has a little oil. Here is our share. Japan didn't enter that war. They wrote a big check. We didn't pay much for that war. We don't have such an agreement now. Maybe somebody will start thinking about it.

Let me talk about the economy.

Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan said recently the U.S. economy has confronted very significant challenges over the past year: Major declines in the equity markets, which none of us thought would ever happen. Many Americans thought it would go on forever. The equity market had ballooned out of all proportion, and people such as Alan Greenspan were giving us warnings. It did begin its downward trend and it still is continuing on that path.

To date, Dr. Greenspan said the economy appears to have withstood this set of blows very well—the blows being the investment spending, the retrenchment, the tragic terrorist attacks of last September. The Federal budget has been able to withstand that, and the economy has been able to withstand that.

The economy is not in great shape right now. But not in great shape either at this time are many individual problems in this country. Consumption is strong. Unemployment gains are creeping back up.

But to blame President Bush is pure unadulterated, partisan politics. For those who talk about it being his problem, the issue would be what would they do to fix it? Some would raise taxes by an enormous amount; or by repealing the cuts that were made. Nobody with their right mind about the economy would suggest that.

But when you say it is not in very good shape today, what would you do about it? We will blame the President. What would you do positive about it? A large group would say raise taxes.

I find it hard to believe if we had to do that and came to that point, very many people would vote for it when they finally understood the negative consequences of that.

I want to mention every now and then I look to a Democratic economist who is of renown, and is of the other party, and everybody knows who he is; that is, Democratic economist Joe Stiglitz. He was Vice Chairman of the Federal Reserve under President Clinton. He has written many articles and books on the economy.

He has indicated, and I quote:

> This economy was slipping, and it was slipping into a recession even before Bush took office as President and before the corporate scandals—

That we haven't yet determined the breadth and number of them, but even before they started—> were rocking America.

That was earlier yet than when the President took office.

He says we were moving into a recession. What we did were the right things to get out of the recession. We cut taxes, and we increased spending of things that would spend quickly.

We also at the same time, working with the Federal Reserve Chairman, got interest rates to come down. You remember how many times he cut them. And so you had the triad that would help a recession.

I wonder how bad it would be if we had not done that. I wonder how bad the economy would be if we had not cut taxes at the right time and if, in fact, we did not have the Federal Reserve working in harmony reducing the interest rates, and if we had not spent some additional money, some which came because of the war costs.

So the economic growth has started slowing down. It started in mid-2000, well before the President took office. In 1997, more than 3 years before he was elected, you could begin to see, as you analyze corporate profits, they were coming down. This is 3 years before he went out on the steps and took the oath and became President of the United States.

Rather than call this a Bush recession, we ought to call it a Clinton hangover. If you want to use another word for each one so there is nothing negative about it, that would be all right.

In the late 1990s, we had a stock market boom and an investment boom.

Much of the rise in the stock market and investment was sustainable, but some of it was not.

We are now making up for the excesses of that period. We are finally coming to grips with the need to make sure companies are honest when they account for their profits.

It seems as though for a few years there in the late-90s, some CEOs forgot about ethics and morals. They could say just about anything about their profits and no one was there to check. As long as the stock market was going up, no one seemed to care ethics and morals, and laws were not enforced.

But now we're checking. Now the SEC is doing its job of making sure shareholders aren't getting ripped-off. Now we're going after the corporate criminals.

A few years ago, the federal government looked the other way. Now, thanks in large part to President Bush, that's not happening any more.

Having said that, I believe that when the economic history of this era is written, what will strike people is not that we had a recession but that things were not worse.

In early 2000 the NASDAQ hit 5000. If you had told people that two years later the NASDAQ would be treading water at about 1200, as it is now, they might have assumed we had gone through some sort of Depression. Well, as bad as things got last year, we did not have a Depression.

The policies we enacted over the past two years have made the economy better, not worse. If it weren't for those policies who knows how weak the economy would be now.

Over and over again we hear that our policies are bad for the economy because they turned surpluses into deficits. That is just not true.

I have staked a large part of my career arguing for fiscal discipline, much of it when it was unpopular, even with many members of my own party. But now is not the time quibble about the budget deficit.

The deficit this year will be about 1.6 percent of GDP. But look at the same point in previous business cycles. Back in the 1976 recovery, the deficit was 4.2 percent of GDP. In the 1980s it peaked at 6 percent. In the early 1990s it peaked at 4.7 percent. So 1.6 percent is not large considering we are in the early stages of a recovery and in a war.

If fiscal mismanagement were hurting the economy we would see rising interest rates. But interest rates are going down, not up. The rate on 10-year Treasury Notes is the lowest in 40 years. Homeowners are refinancing their mortgages at a record rate. Notice that those who claimed the Bush tax cut would lead to higher interest rates have been very quiet of late regarding that key point in their argument.

Yes, things could be better. But long term, our economic fundamentals are strong. Productivity is growing at about a 5 percent rate and new innovations continue.

Cutting taxes was the right thing to do and we did it just in the nick of time. I am proud of the work we did this year and last year in cutting taxes and my fellow Republicans and a few Democrats should be proud too.

I thank the Senate for yielding time to me, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I listened to my distinguished colleague with great interest. If my colleague wishes to speak for a few more minutes, I will follow my colleague. I say to the Senator, I was very interested in what you were saying.

Does my colleague wish to take some additional time?

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to the Senator, that is very nice of you to offer. When you want to speak on the floor, you take the gamble. I have some other things to do. I had to wait a little longer for my position. You can rest assured that since I think it is pretty good, the Senate will hear more before we go out. And they will hear another one on two subjects that have to do with who is to blame for what, suggesting we ought to get on with doing things rather than blaming, which is what I think the American people would like.

Thank you very much, I say to the Senator.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague. He is clearly one of the elder statesmen of this institution, with some almost 30 years of service in the Senate.

THE GRAMM-MILLER AMENDMENT TO THE HOMELAND SECURITY BILL

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today, with other colleagues, to support the Gramm-Miller amendment. I wish to address very specifically some provisions.

The overall amendment addresses the concerns which I had very early on and are outlined in a letter to the Governmental Affairs Committee. At that time, I said to the then-chairman, in writing, I had specific concerns. This particular amendment by GRAMM and MILLER has taken care of those concerns. It is for that reason I lend my support.

It provides the President with the authority he needs to organize our Government at this critical time to deal with these most unusual threats that are confronting our Nation today.

The Presiding Officer and I are privileged to serve together on the Armed Services Committee, and he full well appreciates the diversity and the unprecedented threats that face this Nation today.

I think Senators GRAMM and MILLER have gone about this in a very balanced way. I specifically thank the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Georgia because I approached them, asking that they include a provision in their bill which I had devised with the help of my colleague from Tennessee, Mr. THOMPSON, my colleague from Utah, who is in the Chamber, and my colleague from Virginia, Senator ALLEN. Senator ALLEN and Senator BENNETT have taken the lead in the high-tech caucus.

In the course of one of our periodic meetings on this subject, the group brought to our attention the need to have this type of indemnity legislation, and once Senator BENNETT, Senator ALLEN, and I approached the Gramm-Miller team, they accepted this amendment. I wish to talk about it today and the importance of that amendment within the amendment that is on the floor now.

The legislation I am proposing with others would authorize the President to apply basically the same indemnification authorities now available to the Secretary of Defense, such that it can be applied to a much larger number of the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, as well as State and local—as well as State and local—governments so these entities of the Federal and State government can go about the business of contracting with our private sector and enable the contractors to have certain protections regarding the products which are the subject of the contract or the services, which products and services are directly contributing to the war on terrorism and the protection of our Nation.

It is quite interesting, I find there is an urgent need for this authority. It has existed in the Department of Defense for so many years. I was privileged to serve in the Department of Defense from 1969 through 1974 as Secretary and Under Secretary of the Navy. The Presiding Officer, I think, was on active duty at that time and had an exemplary career in the military.

But, for example, contractors today would not sell the chemical and biological detectors to a wider range of Federal agencies and departments, and State and local, but they can take the same product and sell it to the Department of Defense. So we are kind of caught up in interpretations of a Presidential directive, the existing law. I think we do not have the time to sort it out in the courts, and it is best to clarify it here in Congress.

Some of our Nation's top defense contractors simply cannot sell these products to the other agencies, State and Federal, today. In the meantime, our vulnerability here in the United States, in my own experience, is of great concern to me.

We should give the President the option that he currently does not have of deciding whether other departments and agencies, Federal and State, should have this authority.

The liability risk has been a longstanding deterrent to the private sector, freely contracting with the Department of Defense, but now wishes to broaden its contracting with other departments and agencies.

Congress has acted in the past to authorize the indemnification of contracts. I find this history fascinating. For example, on December 18, 1941, just a short time after the tragic Pearl Harbor experience—2 weeks—the Congress enacted title II of the First War Powers Act of 1941. By providing authority to the President to indemnify contracts, this legislation and its successor pieces of legislation have enabled the private sector to enter into contracts that involve a substantial liability risk occasioned by their services and products.

Administrations since President Franklin Roosevelt's day have used these authorities to indemnify or share the risk with defense contractors. This was required to jump-start the "arsenal of democracy," as described by the President in 1941.

It was true again in 1958, when the nuclear and missile programs were facilitated by the indemnification of risk associated with the use of nuclear power and highly volatile missile fuels.

It is true today for technology solutions required by agencies engaged in the war against terrorism. And that is the purpose of this legislation.

This war is going to be different in many ways—many ways—we cannot envision at this moment or in the future. For one, much of the Nation's homeland defense activities are going to be conducted by State and local governments. It is, thus, imperative to ensure that State and local governments can access vital antiterrorism technologies and not let the contractor be subjected to undue risk.

To facilitate this, my amendment would require the establishment of a Federal contracting vehicle to which State and local governments could turn to rapidly buy antiterrorism solutions from the Federal Government. The President would also be authorized, if he deemed it necessary, to indemnify these purchases. Again, discretion rests with the President, and he, in turn, has delegated this authority to the Secretary of Defense. I presume if this legislation becomes law, he will delegate it to other heads of departments and agencies.

Again, I wish to emphasize two points: One, that this authority is discretionary. The President, on a case-by-case basis, may decide whether to indemnify contracts.

I expect the President will use the authority much as it has been used at the Department of Defense, carefully and thoughtfully, and only for those products the Government cannot obtain without the use of this authority.

The second point I want to emphasize is that indemnification is not in conflict with any efforts to limit or cap liability. My legislation should not be seen as an alternative for tort reform, but merely as one tool that can be used by the President to ensure that vitally needed technologies necessary for homeland defense are placed into the hands of those who need them.

During World War II and all subsequent wars, conflicts and emergencies in which the U.S. has been involved, we have needed domestic contractors to be innovative, resourceful and ready to support efforts at home and abroad. In 1941, the Congress wanted contractors to know that if they were willing to engage in unusually hazardous activities for the national defense, then the U.S. Government would address the potential liability exposure associated with the conduct of such activities. Our position should be no different now.

I conclude with remarks about another matter connected with the Gramm-Miller amendment. There are many aspects in the creation of this new department of homeland defense that are unprecedented. Contentious civil service issues have largely driven the debate on homeland security in this Chamber in the past days and weeks. Over 170,000 employees from 22 agencies will be transferred to the new Department of Homeland Security, including an estimated 43,000 Federal employees represented by 18 different unions.

Since President Bush proposed the creation of homeland security, I have been involved in discussions with a number of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle and with the Federal employee unions and their members about the potential consequences to Federal employees. In order to successfully achieve this complex collaboration, I recognize the importance of the President's request for increased flexibility in managing the new Department.

The uncertainty, however, of the administration's intentions with additional labor and management flexibility has fostered mistrust, understandably so, among these Federal employees. The administration in no way should put into question basic labor rights and civil service protections for these employees.

The administration cannot ignore the impact this is having on morale, not only on the employees being transferred, but throughout the Federal workforce. With no firm commitment from the administration that collective bargaining rights will not be weakened outside of reasons directly related to national security, I cannot blame these Federal employees for being anxious.

I can personally attest to the dedication of civil service employees throughout the Federal Government. There has never been reason to question that during a national crisis, Federal employees perform their duties first, setting aside personal grievances. Federal employees have been relocated, reassigned and worked long hours under strenuous circumstances with no complaints since the September 11 attacks. Their loyalty is first and foremost to their country. Federal employees have proven this time and again.

I have carefully considered several compromise proposals on the civil service provisions in the homeland security legislation. I am strongly concerned about initiatives that would weaken or interfere with the President's authority under current law to exclude Federal employees from collective bargaining if those employees are primarily involved in national security work. Every President, since it became law in 1978, has exercised this authority in the interest of national security. There can be no argument that this new department's primary purpose and focus is protecting our national security interests.

That said, I would strongly encourage the administration to engage in further discussions with the Federal employee unions and assuage some of their concerns. Information should be available on an ongoing basis concerning the administration's actions and intentions regarding creation and management of the new department.

It is my hope that before the House of Representatives and Senate vote on the final version of homeland security legislation, some provisions can be agreed upon to lessen the tension, the fear that exists in the civil service ranks.

I have been privileged to have lived my life in Virginia, the greater metropolitan area, and have had the opportunity to be in the civil service in a number of positions, all the way from a letter carrier and forest firefighter, in 1943–1944, and service in the military to Secretary of the Navy, where I was privileged to have, as a part of my department, several hundred thousand Federal service employees.

I guarantee you, the ranks of the Federal civil service employees are no less patriotic than the ranks of the military. They are fine, loyal, hardworking Americans. I am hopeful the distinguished manager of the bill and others can listen and take into consideration their concerns and somehow put into this bill those provisions which will lessen the fear and the concern among these brave citizens in our country.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WARNER. Yes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, no one has been clearer or more effective or more concerned about trying to protect the rights of people who work for the Federal Government than the Senator from Virginia. It would have been easy for the Senator from Virginia to simply look the other way, forget about the terrorist threat, and be on the other side of this issue. It has not escaped my attention many people who are Government employees work in the Senator's State.

I thank the Senator for making this bill, supported by the President, better by his input. I thank him for looking at the big picture. If we could keep everything the way it is and provide for the national security of the country, there would not be much of a debate. But, unfortunately, in real life, it is not black and white, right or wrong; it is tough choices.

Maybe it is because the Senator has the background of having been involved in defending the Nation himself, having been Secretary of the Navy, or maybe it is simply because he just has the big picture. I thank him for his leadership on this issue.

I assure him, if there is any way we can work out an agreement on a bipartisan basis to find a solution, I want to do that.

There is one constraint: We cannot give the President a law that won't get the job done. If he says he needs a pickup truck, we can't give him this beautiful, shiny pickup truck with no steering wheel.

I look forward to working with the Senator. I appreciate his leadership and, quite frankly, his courage on this issue.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague for his very thoughtful remarks. If I may say, in conversations in the presence of the President of the United States on this subject and the importance of homeland security—and I have attended several meetings along with other colleagues—this matter has been raised. I detect in the President no concern that Government employees are secondhand citizens, but they are entitled to their rights.

That is the purpose of this legislative body, to bridge the gaps to the extent we can and protect all the people.

I thank my colleague and yield the floor.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDWARDS). Morning business is closed.

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 5005, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5005) to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Lieberman amendment No. 4471, in the nature of a substitute.

Gramm/Miller amendment No. 4738 (to amendment No. 4471), of a perfecting nature, to prevent terrorist attacks within the United States.

Nelson (NE.) amendment No. 4740 (to amendment No. 4738), to modify certain personnel provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 3:45 p.m. today the motion to proceed to the motion to reconsider be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be agreed to, and without further intervening action or debate, the Senate proceed to vote on a motion to invoke cloture on the Lieberman substitute amendment, for H.R. 5005, the Homeland Security legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we are in a parliamentary posture where we will have a vote tomorrow at such time as may be determined, either that or an hour after we come in. The majority leader has said privately and has authorized me to say publicly that we would be willing to have that vote today, the reason being, of course, we have been told by the minority that we are not going to get cloture. It is hard to comprehend that, but that is what they said. It would seem to me it would be in everyone's best interest to see if that, in fact, is the case today, if, in fact, we did get cloture, and the 30 hours could run and it would not interfere with the duties of the other Senators, except those who wish to speak. Postcloture, a Senator has up to 1 hour.

There are lots of things going on at home. This is election time, as we know. It appears to me, as I said earlier today, we have had so many code words. This is a filibuster. We were told yesterday there were 30 speakers on this amendment. Realistically, what amendment ever had 30 speakers? There won't be 30 speakers on this amendment, but there will be a lot of people moving around, stalling for time, which has happened now for 4 weeks on this bill.

I said yesterday, and I am beginning to believe more all the time, and it appears clear to me, that there does not seem to be any intention of either the White House or the Republican majority in the House or the minority in the Senate, of wanting to move this bill forward.

There is general agreement that the bill the Senators from Connecticut and Tennessee came up with is a bill we should have passed very quickly. There are problems that could have been resolved in the House and the Senate conference. For every day we spend talking about Iraq—and I think we should spend some time every day talking about Iraq and homeland security—it is 1 day we do not have to deal with the stumbling, staggering, faltering economy.

If we spend each day on issues focusing away from the economy and what needs to be done in the Senate, including doing something about terrorism insurance, doing something about a Patients' Bill of Rights, which the Presiding Officer worked very hard on—we need to do something on a generic drug bill. There was the fiasco that took place in Florida. Again, 2 years after the fiasco of all time with the elections, still nothing can be done because the House will not let us do anything.

The energy conference is moving forward by tiny steps, but it is one of the few things happening.

It is obvious to me there is an effort to do everything that can be done so we do not focus on the economy. It is too bad. We can either formally come in later and offer the vote on the cloture motion set for tomorrow or do it today. But the offer is there.

For all the Senators worried about what is going to happen tomorrow, they should understand—and I understand there are some on the other side who do not even care if they are here or not because they really do not need them on a vote because we have to try to get 60 votes. But that is OK; we will still do everything we can. On this side we are going to move forward on this bill. We will, as the leader indicated, work weekends, we will work nights, whatever it takes, to try to move forward on this bill. I am disappointed we are being told there will not be cloture on this until tomorrow.

That is, I repeat, only an effort to stall moving forward on this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I will respond to the distinguished Democratic floor leader by simply going back and reviewing the facts and setting out the obvious blueprint that will solve our problems. I remind my colleagues we have been on this bill for over 4 weeks largely because of the debate on the Byrd amendment, and not a minute of that time was wasted because we were convinced by the major premise of the Byrd amendment. In the Gramm-Miller substitute we deal with that problem by maintaining the power of the purse, which is the fundamental constitutional power of the Congress.

I am not complaining about the fact that we have spent the bulk of our time on an amendment that is still pending because the plain truth is we learned something "we" being Senator MILLER and I. We learned something. We concluded that Senator BYRD was right on and we changed our substitute. By the way, we have never voted on the Byrd amendment.

The plain truth is the great bulk of the time we have been on this bill we have been debating that amendment, and it is yet to be resolved.

I remind my colleagues that Senator THOMPSON, the ranking Republican on the committee, offered a simple amendment that said we ought not tell the President how to set up the White House. This amendment was partly controversial in terms of the President's National Security Adviser and his terrorism adviser. That amendment was, sure enough, adopted. But only after 6 days of delay on the part of our Democrat colleagues. And then there were other delays before it was ever added to the bill.

The problem is, they have delayed this bill, and not us. Everybody is entitled to their own opinion. They are just not entitled to their own facts. The weakness our colleagues on the other side of this issue have is that the facts are against them. What is the old deal in law? When the facts are against you, argue the law.

What is the current holdup? The President of the United States, working with a Democrat and a Republican, has spent 4 weeks listening to things that have been said and concerns that have been raised, starting with Senator BYRD. We have made 25 major changes in the President's proposal. In terms of the President's personnel flexibility, we have limited his power to eliminate exactly the concerns that have been raised by every opponent of the President who has spoken out on this issue.

Does the fact that we have eliminated the ability to discriminate while preserving basic workers' rights in terms of being judged on merit change the rhetoric of the debate? No. When people are debating, they still act as if the President could be arbitrary or capricious. But the point is he cannot be under our bipartisan substitute that the President supports.

We are at war. We were attacked on September 11. Thousands of our people were killed. The President has asked us to bring together 170,000 people in the Federal Government to help him prosecute this war and protect American lives.

After listening to many concerns, changing the President's proposal, and adopting 95 percent of the Lieberman proposal Senator LIEBERMAN says: You have taken 95 percent of my bill. What is wrong with it, if you are for 95 percent of it?

It is like a nice, shiny, fancy red truck—I remember our ranking member drove one in the campaign—still legendary—but it is only missing a steering wheel. What Senator MILLER and I have done, working with some 45 of our colleagues, is we have taken that truck and we have put a steering wheel in it.

In wartime, with American lives at risk, the President of the United States, asks only one thing: Give him a vote on his homeland security bill. Some people may view that as an extraordinarily extreme request. But I submit that there is not a State in the Union, whether it is Connecticut or Nebraska, Tennessee, New Jersey, or North Carolina, where you could go into any coffee bar in any drugstore or restaurant, and sit down and gather a group of people around and ask them the following question: When the President has asked for powers to defend American lives during wartime, should we give him these powers that he says that he needs? My guess is you would have a hard time finding somebody in Nebraska who would say no.

All we are asking is something very different. We would like him to be given the tools to do the job. We are simply asking that we have a vote on his proposal.

Our Democrat colleagues say: No, we are not going to give you an up-or-down vote on the President's proposal. We are going to make you vote on it the way we want to write it, before we let you vote on it the way the President wants it. Under the rules of the Senate, they can do that. Under the rules of the Senate, if they have the votes, they can do whatever they want to do. The Democrats have the right to deny the President an up-or-down vote. They have the right to do it under the Senate rules. We know at this very moment that terrorists are plotting the murder of our citizens, we know this and worry about it every day. Under these extraordinary circumstances, the question is not what they have a right to do, but rather it is what is right to do.

Let me say this. We have this little gimmick going on. It is too cute by half. The gimmick is that by using the parliamentary procedure of cloture, they are going to put the President's proposal into a straitjacket where they get to change it before it is voted on.

Look, I have used parliamentary procedure myself. Every Member has a right to do it. But do you think the American people are stupid? Do you think the American people are not going to figure out what the game is here? Do you think the American people are not going to get it straight, that not only are you not with the man and do not support the President's request for the tools he wants, but you won't even give him a vote on the tools? You have the power to do it under the rules of the Senate, but you have to have the votes, and you don't have the votes. So we are going to play this game.

I hope everybody is watching this—I hope a lot of people are watching it. I can tell you one thing. I used to think, before I got old, that I had reasonable political abilities. But I could not defend the position of the opposition. There is no city in my State that I could go into and take the position of the opponents of the President and walk out of there with my hat, much less with my head.

The bottom line is we are going to go through a little parliamentary gimmick tomorrow where we are going to vote on cloture to try to put the President into a parliamentary straitjacket where he never gets a vote on his proposal. But there is a problem. It takes 60 votes to get cloture, and our Democrat colleagues do not have 60 votes, and they are not going to get 60 votes.

So, rather than playing all these games while American lives are in jeopardy, the obvious thing to do is to give us a vote. I would be happy to propound a unanimous consent request to have a vote at 11 o'clock on Tuesday, up or down, on the President's proposal. We want a vote on the President's proposal. Look, I know people back home. They are trying to pay the bills. They are trying to figure out how to get Sarah off to school. They are not quite paying attention. But I do not think they are going to believe that the President does not want his own proposal to be voted on. Again, they may be confused. They are not paying attention. They are busy. They are counting on us to do the right thing. But they are not stupid.

The way to solve this thing and get on with this bill is to do something you are going to end up doing anyway, and that is, give the President a vote.

Let me reiterate that no one has proposed a compromise that I have not set down and talked to him about. It continues to dumbfound me that we have had an issue of life and death for American citizens become a partisan issue. I think every person in the Chamber who has been involved in this debate will have to grudgingly say that this is true.

Now before somebody comes out here and starts screaming let me tell you what partisan issue is. It is an issue where you draw the line right down the middle of the Senate and almost everybody on the left side of the Senate is on one side and almost everybody on the right side of the Senate is on the other side. That is how we define issues becoming partisan.

How did it ever happen, when you saw the way we all felt after 9/11?

Let me tell you how it happened. It happened because it is not easy to provide for homeland security. The vote on Iraq is an easy vote because, so far as I know, there is no organized, active political constituency for Saddam Hussein. He doesn't have an organized political group in America that is actively lobbying on his behalf, of which I am aware.

There are some people who believe we ought to turn over American security to the U.N. I understand that view. I reject it. When the lives of my people are at stake, it is my responsibility and it is the responsibility of our Government. It is not the responsibility of our allies, not the responsibility of the U.N. I am not willing to delegate it to anybody else. But I respect differences of opinion.

But that is an easy issue compared to this issue. The reason it is an easy issue compared to this issue is that you cannot promote homeland security without having to make tradeoffs.

That is why we are here. We all want to protect Americans. I would never say—and I don't believe that my Democrat colleagues are—we are not concerned about national security. The problem concerns that it is not free. The problem concerns that there are tradeoffs. And the tradeoff is, if we are going to give the President the power to hire the right person, put them in the right place, and at the right time, if we are going to allow the President to have the tools to fight an enemy that did show up anywhere and could kill thousands of our people, we have to be willing to change the way we do business in a Federal bureaucracy.

The Federal bureaucracy does not want to change the way we do business. Unlike Iraq, this is an issue where there are strong political forces that are against giving the President this power because they do not want to change the way they run their business.

Look, I am not going to stand up here and state that the position that the rights of public employees is morally inferior to the position that lives are more important than "workers' rights." I believe it is a law of order. But that is a moral judgment somebody else has to make.

All I am saying is the reason this has become such a contentious issue is that we have one of the most powerful political forces in America—the public employee labor unions and the Federal bureaucracy—and to have an effective homeland security system, you cannot have the horse-and-buggy civil service that we have today.

Interestingly enough, there are only 20,000 members of the union who would be among the 170,000 people who will be brought together in this agency. And only 20,000 of them are members of unions. Yet, remarkably, we have an amendment pending that would give unions that represent 20,000 workers veto power over the President's decision with regard to 170,000 workers.

I don't think that would make a whole lot of sense where I am from, and I don't think it makes sense where you are from. But that is why we have a battle.

Let me also say that I think part of our problem was, when this bill was written in committee, and when it was being debated early on, nobody was paying much attention to it except organized special interests in Washington, DC. As a result, this was written as sort of a business-as-usual bill. But business is not usual. When workers' rights interfere with people's right to their life and their freedom, then I think there has to be some flexibility.

I am going to talk more in a moment about the bill. Maybe I should let other people talk before I do. But let me just sum up by saying we have been on this bill for over 4 weeks because the opponents of the bill have taken that tack. We have been on this bill for 4 weeks because it took 6 days to get a vote on the amendment offered by Senator THOMPSON, and even then it was 3 more days before it was added to the bill.

All we want is to have a vote on the President's proposal. We are going to get it. We can go through all kinds of games. We can fill up the tree, as they say. We can use parliamentary procedure. We can try to get cloture and put the President in a box. But the American people are not going to be deceived because they are not stupid. In the end, they want the President to have the tools he needs. But they are never, ever going to accept not even giving him a vote.

Maybe you can justify this. Maybe this makes sense where you are from. But there are a lot of things at night when I get down to say my prayers for which I thank God. One of them is, I don't have to defend a position of the people on the other side of this issue, because I am totally incapable of doing it. I don't think it is defensible.

I want to urge them once again, let us work out a compromise.

I am going to in a moment—this is the last point I will make because others are getting ready to speak—outline why this amendment by Senator NELSON is anything but a compromise. I am going to outline for only a moment how this totally destroys the ability of the President to get the job done. I think most people, when they listen to that, and who are objecting, will understand what the issue is about.

But I have given the Senator in writing the changes he would have to make for the President to be able to accept it. In the previous offer that was brought forward, we gave one simple change—preserving the supremacy of the President on national security. Every President since Jimmy Carter has had the ability in the name of national security to make personnel changes. But, remarkably, the Senator's amendment and the underlying bill take away from President Bush powers that he had the day before the terrorist attacks.

How many Americans would be absolutely stunned to know that in the name of homeland security we are debating a bill that takes away power from the President to use national security powers?

Somewhere, somehow, somebody's priorities have gotten way off base. Either the President and those of us who support him are completely lost in terms of any weighting of the reality of the world we are in, or the people who oppose the President have gotten badly off base and out of tune with the reality we face.

Obviously, I don't make the judgment about which side is lost in the wilderness. But I would have to say I believe the American people are going to reach the conclusion that the President is right and reasonable and the people who oppose him are wrong and unreasonable.

There is a way out of this mess. But the President can't do it alone.

I urge my colleagues to end this charade, reach an agreement, and let us have a bipartisan bill. And, if you are not willing to do that, you are going to have to give the President an up-or-down vote. There is no other way you are going to be able to do it without it. We can go through the process. We can vote on cloture tomorrow. We are not going to get cloture. We can do it next week. But in the end, the President is going to get a vote. But what the President wants is not a vote but a compromise with one constraint—the President has only got one constraint: Give me something that can work. Give me the tools to finish the job. But don't give me tools that won't work. He has a little bit harder time than his opponents because their proposals don't have to work. His proposals do.

That is my plea.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, after the exchanges that were heard on the floor yesterday, I must say I hope we can come back to this debate on homeland security and focus more directly on all the common ground we have with a spirit of compromise and clearheaded perceptions that can bring us together so we can get this done.

I find the comments of the Senator from Texas, who is about to leave the floor, so full of misunderstandings or misperceptions and so full of inflexibility that I must respond to them.

The Senator talks about delay.

Let me just recite some history on this bill. It was in October of last year—almost a year ago—that Senator ARLEN SPECTER, our distinguished Republican colleague from Pennsylvania, and I introduced a bill, a piece of legislation, to create a Department of Homeland Security. That measure came from work our committee had done.

But these special interests that Mr. GRAMM, the Senator from Texas, invokes, throws around, they were not involved in the construction of that legislation. That legislation came from public hearings we had, and primarily and largely from a nonpartisan citizens commission created according to legislation sponsored by the former Speaker of the House, Newt Gingrich, chaired by two distinguished former Senators, Republican Warren Rudman of New Hampshire and Democrat Gary Hart of Colorado, who suggested a Department of Homeland Security.

That was October. Talk about delay. The President of the United States took the position then that the executive office he had created with Governor Ridge could handle the urgent and enormous new responsibility post-September 11 of homeland security. We respectfully disagreed.

I must say, just to harken back to the debate of yesterday, that was a disagreement on substance. I never would have thought to suggest that the President of the United States was putting the bureaucratic opposition to the new Department of Homeland Security ahead of the national security interests of the United States, which was suggested earlier this week by the President himself in referring to this marginal dispute—significant but marginal dispute—that we are having over how best or whether to protect the rights of homeland security workers.

So that was October, November, December, January, February, March, April, May. In May, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee reported out a bill, based on the one Senator SPECTER and I put in, on a 9-to-7 vote, creating a Department of Homeland Security.

President Bush and most of my Republican colleagues—the seven Republicans on the committee who voted on that—were opposed to the Department at that point.

Because we are talking about delay, the truth is, if we had all gotten together last fall, this Department would be up and protecting us today. But we had a difference of opinion about it.

On June 6, President Bush announced that he endorsed the idea of a Department of Homeland Security. That was the turning point that led us to what I thought was the inevitability that we would create such a Department because of the urgent need to do so post-September 11, 2001.

We worked together on a bipartisan basis with the White House. We accepted some of the changes that the White House had in our legislation. We worked with colleagues on the committee and outside—Republican and Democrat—to improve our bill.

At the end of July, after 2 days in markup, the committee reported out the bill. I said at that point that 90 percent of our committee bill was in concert, was in agreement, with what President Bush had in his bill—90 percent.

Senator GRAMM, after his considerable work on the Gramm-Miller substitute, said that—he raised me 5—95 percent of his substitute was the same as our bill.

So can't we agree on that 5 or 10 percent on which we have disagreement? Can't we come together in the interests of the urgent national need for homeland security?

No one is delaying on this side. Right now, the reality is that the Senator from Texas is leading an effective filibuster against moving ahead on this bill. And why? Because we have achieved a compromise on the major outstanding point of division, which is, how do you protect the rights of homeland security workers? It is a bipartisan compromise because one Senator, the courageous Senator from Rhode Island, has decided that he is going to find common ground in the interest of preserving the national security authority of the President while giving a little bit of due process to Federal workers. That is all this does.

I think there may be some others of our colleagues on the Republican side who would support this compromise because it is reasonable and it meets the test that the White House set up that they did not want any diminution of the President's authority. Under this compromise, there is none. Senator NELSON of Nebraska will speak about this in a moment. He is an architect of this proposal.

So the fact is, my friend from Texas does not have the votes. We have at least 51 on our side. And for that reason, he is not going to let us go ahead and vote. He asks that there be an up-or-down vote on the President's proposal, but what he is asking for is something that is pretty much unheard of around here: Don't allow any amendments.

The President is a good man. The Senator from Texas is a good man. But they are not infallible. None of us is infallible. The Senate has a right to amend. In fact, we are asking here for one amendment.

I wish the Senator from Texas were on the floor because I would ask him, wasn't he aware that the President's proposal in the House—the Republican-controlled House—didn't get voted on without amendment? There were amendments offered. They improved it. The Gramm-Miller substitute changes the proposal the President initially made because that is the way this process works.

So if there is any inflexibility here, I say, respectfully, it is on the side of the Senator from Texas and those who stand with him. We are so close to having a reasonable compromise and a good bill to create a Department of Homeland Security. And he is right; the terrorists are out there. They are planning right now to do us damage. And we remain dangerously disorganized in the Federal Government.

One of the things our bill will do is to plug the gaps, close the inconsistencies, break down the walls that the investigation of the Joint Intelligence Committee has shown us contributed, I believe measurably, to the vulnerability that the terrorists took advantage of in September of 2001—September 11.

So I am sorry we are back to this futile, foolish debate. This is a good compromise, the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux compromise. Senator NELSON will speak to it in more detail in a moment. We agree on 90 to 95 percent of the underlying bill. We have the same departments. Let's get this done and stop this inflexibility.

Mr. President, as a show of good will, I want to offer here on the floor now what we informally offered to the Senator from Texas yesterday off the floor. He asks for something that usually does not happen around here, which is an up-or-down vote in the sense of without the right to amend.

But just to show how anxious we are to move forward, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately upon the disposition of Senator NELSON's amendment, Senator GRAMM be recognized to offer a further second-degree amendment, which is the text of the President's proposal as contained in amendment No. 4738, and that the Senate then vote immediately on his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON). Is there objection?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have not had an opportunity to either consider the suggested unanimous consent request or to talk to my other colleagues, some of whom are not on the floor, who are directly involved in these negotiations. So for that reason, at this time, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, that offer remains pending. I hope Senator GRAMM will consider it. It says that the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment, compromise, would be voted on first, and then we give Senator GRAMM the opportunity to have the President's proposal voted on.

Now, is he worried that that means he might not have the votes for the President's proposal without the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment on it?

I ask him to consider that because it would both give him what he asks for and it would allow the Senate to move forward and complete our business, pass this legislation, get it to conference with the House, and create a Department of Homeland Security to protect the American people.

There has been too much nonsense in this debate, too much irrelevancy, and not enough appreciation in this hour of urgent vulnerability for our country about how critically important it is for us not to do business as usual but to rise above the normal nonsense and do what we are supposed to do on foreign and defense policy, which is to forget our party labels, to leave our ideological rigidity at the door, and come here and reason together in the interest of the beloved country we are privileged to serve.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to be here today and speak in favor of the amendment which, together with Senators CHAFEE and BREAUX, I have submitted for consideration to the homeland security debate.

I wish my good friend and colleague from Texas was in the Chamber because I have hunted with him. He is an excellent hunter. He is a great sharpshooter. Today his shots miss the target. The truth is, he is right on one point: The people of America are smart. They are smart enough to know that you are not entitled to your own set of facts, but it is pretty easy for somebody to mischaracterize or restate the facts in a way that will make their case.

That is what happened on the floor this morning. If you want to attack an amendment, then refer to those who support the amendment as opponents of the President. Everybody knows Senator CHAFEE, Senator BREAUX, and I are not opponents of the President. This is an area where I thought we had agreement with the White House.

Let me characterize the facts not as I see them but as they have been stated by others. I refer, first, to the letter from Governor Ridge, dated September 5, to Senator LIEBERMAN. I quote:

> The President seeks for this new department the same prerogatives that Congress has provided other departments and agencies throughout the executive branch.

Then there are several examples set forth as bullets. The third bullet point reads:

> Personnel flexibility as currently enjoyed by the Federal Aviation Administration.

He also adds the Internal Revenue Service and the Transportation Security Administration.

This proposal adopts the language of the Internal Revenue Service in connection with the reorganization of that Department. I thought we were in the position to offer exactly what was being requested. I am a little bit confused about this because I happened to be presiding the day my good friend from Texas appeared on the floor and said, with regard to providing Presidential authority: We have done the same thing in the past with the Federal Aviation Administration. But interestingly enough, in one area we have granted a tremendous amount of flexibility, when we decided to reform the Internal Revenue Service. We gave the executive branch of Government tremendous flexibility in hiring, firing, pay, and promotion because we were so concerned about the inefficiency and the potential corruption in the Internal Revenue Service.

He went on to ask his colleagues, if we believed it worked there, then why do we not believe it can work here?

That is exactly what we have offered. Now we find that is not acceptable.

I have already referred to the concern I have; that is, when the goalposts are moved and the rules change in the middle of the game or the circumstances around you continue to be in flux, how in the world can you ever meet the expectations of the other side?

What my colleagues and I have tried to do is offer a compromise that will bridge the gap to bring together that last 5 percent Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator GRAMM referred to, to close the gap, fill the last 5 percent, end the debate, and do what we need to do—vote to pass a homeland security bill so it can go to conference and we can have national security.

It has been suggested that perhaps we are not as interested in national security as we are in other interests. National security is not only the primary interest, it is the driving force behind the homeland security bill. It has been suggested that there is another interest, as though that is going to take away from national security.

That is not going to take away from national security because this amendment provides enough support for the President's powers, the President's authority to do what the President needs to do. It is consistent with what Governor Ridge has suggested, and it is consistent with what our good friend and colleague from Texas asked for on the floor of the Senate over a week ago.

Characterization is important. But the important thing the American people understand is that on the floor of the Senate sometimes losing becomes winning. While the same set of facts are stated there, they can be characterized in different ways. You have seen a characterization today that is different than what the facts truly are.

It is hard to find another interpretation from what my good friend, the Senator from Texas, has said on the floor of the Senate or what Governor Ridge has written very clearly in his letter.

It seems to me we can, in fact, close the gap, stop the debate, and move forward and pass this legislation.

Senator LIEBERMAN made a good point: In the Congress of the United States, it is rare that a bill that is introduced in one form is in that same form by the time it has completed its process. There are amendments. There are amendments because there are different ideas in which we try to approach these very important issues, to find legislation that will solve the problems we face.

This bill is different now than it was at the very beginning. I can tell you today that, if we can accept this amendment, we can, in fact, close the gap.

I have met with Senator GRAMM. He is absolutely right. He has always offered to meet to discuss this or any other issue to see if we can close the gap. We are continuing to have discussions. I hope we are able to close the gap. But if the conditions change, it is very difficult to close the gap.

I hope we will be able to move beyond what appear to be partisan remarks this morning to what will be American remarks about how we can find a solution—not to characterize it as Republican or Democrat, but to characterize it as an American solution to an American problem facing the American people. And it is the American way to debate, compromise, and ultimately come up with a solution.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I would like to directly respond to the Senator from Nebraska. As I understand his point, it is that his compromise, which is looked upon as the bipartisan compromise because a Republican has joined in it—what Senator GRAMM's efforts have done, along with Senator MILLER, apparently is not looked upon as a bipartisan compromise, even though a Democrat has joined in that; that is just a matter of terminology—the Nelson compromise purports to give the President flexibility because it gives the President flexibility that the IRS has.

He is absolutely right. The IRS has been mentioned in conjunction with this debate as one of those agencies where we have given the President flexibility.

What the Senator fails to point out is that also a part of that debate has been the discussion of other agencies where we have given the President much more flexibility than we have given the IRS.

The flexibility we gave the IRS was hotly contested and hotly debated, but the IRS had so many problems. They had spent billions of dollars trying to get their computers to talk to each other. We had hearings about their problems. This is one agency now. This is just one organization. Because of all the difficulties they had, we decided to give them flexibility with regard to pay, hiring, and some other items. But as a part of that, there was a procedure that required negotiation with the employees union. It required, I believe, a written agreement, and it required, if an agreement was not reached, it had to go before the Federal Services Impasses Panel.

The Senator adopted those provisions and put it in the compromise and said: OK, we have given you what the IRS has.

The only problem with that is we have given flexibility to the FAA, we have given flexibility to the Transportation Security Agency, we have given flexibility to the GAO, none of which require the head of those agencies to go before the Federal Services Impasses Panel.

It is only with regard to the IRS and a hotly contested compromise that we placed that burden on the leadership of IRS. In these other agencies where we gave additional flexibility, we did not put the impasses panel as a part of that. So our friends on the other side find one area where the people running the Department have to go through additional hurdles to interject any flexibility, and they adopt that one instead of the example we have given in other agencies.

What about that? Maybe we made the right decision with regard to the IRS and the wrong decision with the GAO, the wrong decision on FAA, the wrong decision on TSA. What is the right decision?

Let's forget about the fact that it is 3 to 1. Let's ask ourselves, what is the right decision?

I point out that we are not trying to fix one dysfunctional agency. Goodness knows, the Government is full of them. Instead of addressing them in a general fashion, what we have done is when they get so bad, they come before us and we give them something, some flexibility of one kind or another. But we are not trying to do that here.

What the President is trying to do and what the Gramm-Miller substitute amendment is trying to do is to pull together 170,000 Federal employees, requiring the coordination of 17 different unions, 77 existing collective bargaining agreements—77 existing collective bargaining agreements—7 payroll systems, 80 different personnel management systems, an overwhelming task under any circumstances.

Are we to equate that with the IRS, especially in light of the fact we impose these same requirements on these other agencies to which we gave flexibility? The IRS example should not be the high water mark. The IRS example is the low water mark. That is the least flexibility we can give, less than what we gave to these other agencies and certainly less than what we should give the President when we are reorganizing an entire major section of the Government involving 77 different collective bargaining agreements, 7 payroll systems, and 80 different personnel management systems.

We are comparing elephants to peanuts. With what are we left? We are left with a system that takes the crux of the labor-management difficulties we have seen in times past where we spend months and years negotiating items in these collective bargaining agreements, such as color of uniforms, whether or not the smoking area should be lit and heated, whether or not the cancellation of the annual picnic was in violation of the collective bargaining agreement. It took 6 years on an army base in St. Louis to resolve that one.

With regard to issues such as those, collective bargaining and the myriad levels of appeals and the indefinite amount of time it takes, all the way to the Supreme Court of the United States, if they can get that far, this compromise so-called takes that totally off the table—totally off the table. This compromise does not allow the new Homeland Security Department to make any changes with regard to labor-management relations under chapter 71 or with regard to appeals under chapter 77.

If one looks at page 3, at least in the copy I have, of the amendment, chapter 97, Department of Homeland Security, my friend from Nebraska and his colleagues establish a human resources management system. OK, sounds good so far because, goodness knows, we need to establish a new system. We have seen the failures of the past, the creations of the 1920s and the 1940s that some would insist we bring over lock, stock, and barrel into the 21st century.

Then it says: Any new system established under this subsection shall, one, be flexible; two, be contemporary but not waive, modify, or otherwise affect a whole list of items, including labor-management relations, chapter 71, and the appeals section under chapter 77.

There are many other issues that are taken off the table, too: chapter 41, chapter 45, chapter 47, chapter 55, chapter 57, chapter 59, chapter 72, chapter 73, chapter 79. This bill takes all of those off the table and says you cannot touch them in your new system.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. SPECTER. I have been trying to determine whether the provisions of the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment supplements the provisions to title 5 of 7103(b)(1) which says:

> The President may issue an order excluding any agency or subdivision thereof from coverage under this chapter if the President determines that—
>
> (A) the agency or subdivision has as a primary function intelligence, counterintelligence, investigative, or national security work, and
>
> (B) the provisions of this chapter cannot be applied to that agency or subdivision in a manner consistent with national security requirements and considerations.

The language submitted by the Nelson amendment says: The President could not use his authority without showing that the mission and responsibilities of the agency or subdivision materially changed and, two, a majority of such employees within such agency or subdivision have as their primary duty intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative work directly related to terrorist investigation.

If I might have the attention also of the Senator from Connecticut, I had raised this question with the Senator from Connecticut and also the Senator from Nebraska, or talked to their staff, and have been told that the provisions of the Nelson amendment supplement which is now in existing law.

I have been advised by people from the administration personnel department that the Nelson provision replaces existing law which then would leave out the language of national security requirements.

My question to one of the managers of the bill, the Senator from Tennessee who has the floor, is whether this is a replacement for or an addition to?

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. Let me address it first, if I may.

I don't know whether you would call it a replacement, total replacement, or an addition to. The significant thing, in answer to the Senator's question, under any definition it is a diminution of the President's authority from existing law. It is a diminution in this way: Under existing law, the President can make a determination that an agency or a subdivision of an agency is primarily involved in intelligence, counterintelligence, investigative, or national security work, and he can set aside the collective bargaining agreement.

Under the Nelson amendment, there is an additional requirement for the President. He must also go through the requirement of determining the mission and responsibility of the agency materially changed.

If you have a situation where a person was, in times past, doing a certain thing, and he is going to be brought into the new agency—and perhaps he is doing pretty much the same job; his job has not changed that much. What has changed is the rest of the world. September 11 changed it. Our heightened requirement in security changed.

That whole job where the President has not exercised his authority in times past might take on a different dimension, although he is doing the same job. In the first place, the President might not be able to make this finding. In the second instance, he would be setting himself up for another hurdle, for someone to challenge him in court.

I believe the Senator will agree there has been one instance under current law where people have gone to court to challenge the President, and the President and persons got an arbitrary and capricious standard overcome. It is a tough challenge for a plaintiff to overcome, but the President has to go in there and made a determination as to how much he says. We are talking about national security. How much do you divulge? How much can you get in camera and all of that business? That is current law.

Under this, he has an additional establishment that he has to make that there is a material change, not with regard to the work of the agency, as in current law, but with regard to the majority of the employees working in that agency.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Tennessee that there is an additional requirement. I might differ with him as to how substantial it is.

Mr. THOMPSON. If I could add to my answer, under present law the President has the authority to make that determination based on the primary function of an agency involving national security. Under this, national security does not appear. It says primary duty: intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative work. It does not say national security.

What it does say is that it must be directly related to terrorism. Terrorism is important. But there are national security concerns that do not necessarily have to do with terrorism. It is a limiting of the circumstances under which a President can make a determination.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, if the international security consideration is stricken, there is an enormous difference. But that goes to the basic question as to whether this is in place of or in addition to. If there is a national security consideration, it is nonjustifiable. You cannot take appeals.

All the President has to do is come to court and say it is national security. If national security is not in the requirement, then you get into the arbitrary capriciousness, et cetera, on administering appeals.

Perhaps, if I might have the attention of the Senator from Tennessee, I think in listening to the Senator and looking at this, in regard to what you are talking about, it is clearly a replacement. It would be clearly redundant if it were not. It says: No agency shall be excluded as a result of the President's authority unless the President establishes these things.

I don't see how it could be more clear. I don't see how it could rest side by side with current law.

If it is a "replacement," it makes an enormous difference.

I was on the floor earlier in morning business saying if it is in addition to, it is a diminution of the President's power but not very much because of the similarity. But if it is a substitute for—Senator NELSON is on the floor. If I might have leave of the Senator from Tennessee to direct the question to Senator NELSON or Senator LIEBERMAN, is it a substitute for or in addition to?

Mr. THOMPSON. If I may do so without yielding my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, responding to the Senator from Pennsylvania, I will begin and still leave the floor with Senator THOMPSON. I think Senator NELSON may want to respond also.

It is my understanding that it is the clear intention of the sponsors of what I call the Morella-Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment that it supplement, not replace, existing language.

I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, this concern he expresses is real. This is a concern that does not go to the intentions of the sponsors of the amendment. I have not talked to him, but let us reason together how we can make clear in this legislation, in this amendment, what the intentions are. It is not to alter this.

If I were to describe—and I stand to be corrected by the sponsors of the amendment—if I were to describe what the amendment does in this regard, regarding collective bargaining rights, it says to the approximately 43,000 to 47,000 currently unionized employees of various departments that will be moved to the new Department of Homeland Security—and remember, some of these people have worked for decades; some have worked for a few years—while the existing authority that this President, the previous President, all Presidents back to President Carter have had, to suspend collective bargaining rights in the interest of national security, these folks have continued to keep their jobs and be in unions because no previous President has believed that national security was inconsistent with their jobs being unionized.

All we are saying in this compromise amendment is to now, simply because they have been moved from where they are—Border Patrol, Customs agents, FEMA, Coast Guard, civilian employees, whatever—they have been moved to the Department of Homeland Security, to take their right to belong to a union away, you have to show their job has changed.

The President has to declare it and that is it. There is no appeal.

That is my understanding of the intention of the amendment. But on the question, Is the amendment supplementary or does it replace, it is intended to be supplementary. We will work with the Senator from Pennsylvania to make that clear.

I wonder if the Senator from Tennessee would mind if the cosponsor of the amendment spoke.

Mr. THOMPSON. Without losing my right.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. If I might respond, I agree with my friend and colleague from Connecticut. It is our intent this be additional authority, an additional opportunity for the President to make a decision about national security. I agree also that were it to be appealed, the national security would just simply eliminate the appeal. I am confident.

If it is not as clear as it needs to be, we will certainly, with our good friend from Pennsylvania, help make it clear. Perhaps this will resolve the concern the White House has about this language. Our goal is to make it supplemental.

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. I think it is very clear it is a supplement to the existing language in section 7103. If you read our amendment it says that:

> No agency or subdivision of an agency which is transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act shall be excluded from the coverage of chapter 71 of title 5, United

Section 7103(b)(1) is the existing language setting out what the President has to do. Ours is added to that. So it doesn't replace the original 7103(b)(1). That is still intact. This is a supplement to that and is to be read in connection with both of them together. The President makes that determination and it is his decision. It is like a teacher giving a test and the teacher is grading the test. The President in this case is the teacher and he grades his own test. He makes that determination and they are both to be read together, so national security is still a part of it.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have one additional question, if I might.

Mr. THOMPSON. Before we get off that point, it doesn't matter if you call it in addition or supplement to. It places requirements on the President and the hurdles before the President that are not in existing law.

Do you or do you not, in this amendment, require the President to establish the mission and responsibilities of the agency have materially changed?

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator yield for a response to that?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. BREAUX. The answer is yes. But I would also say, the point you made earlier, if you have the same agency today that, somehow, because things have changed in this country, is in fact moved to a different location, they are doing the same type of work, but instead of doing it with regard to domestic security they are doing it because of an outside threat by terrorists, for instance, that mission has substantially changed. Their mission is no longer to stop, perhaps, Mexicans from crossing the U.S. border into Texas. Their mission is now to stop terrorists from entering the United States. That mission has substantially changed. That meets the test. Who gives the test? The President. Who grades the test? The President. So that mission has changed if the enemy has changed. That is very clear. It is a decision the President would make.

Mr. THOMPSON. If I may respond to that, the ultimate arbiter is not the President in this case. It is some Federal district judge. If the Senator from Louisiana was making this determination, I would be satisfied and happy and content the right conclusion would come. But the Senator has just given a scenario of his opinion as to what would constitute material change. Others may or may not agree with that. But there can be no dispute there is an additional requirement placed on the President.

You can argue it is justified, that we didn't place that requirement on Jimmy Carter or Bill Clinton or the former President Bush or Ronald Reagan, but we are going to place it on this President at this time. You can make that argument. But I must say I have difficulty in seeing how one can argue this does not place additional requirements on this President to make additional determinations, on the one hand, and with regard to a more narrow area of things, that is terrorism, on the other.

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. BREAUX. The point is it is for the last 30 years under the existing law the President having to make this decision, that it has always been possible to go to Federal court under Federal law if someone thought the President hadn't met the existing standard. They could take him to court. We are not changing that at all. In the last 30 years there has been one case. The one case ultimately said the President was within his authority to do exactly what he wanted to do—one case in 30 years.

The existing law says the standard the President has to meet is always subject to going to court saying he didn't meet the standard. We are not changing that at all.

Mr. THOMPSON. I may say in response, the issue is not jurisdiction of the court, whether you go to court. I agree with that. The issue is what happens once you get there. Under the current law, all the President has to establish is as an agency it is primarily involved in national security.

Under this amendment, the President would have to establish something similar to that, and, in addition, the primary purpose of most of the employees within that agency had changed. That is a factual determination that is a colossal headache. It is a hurdle.

Again, you can say the President ought to have that additional hurdle at this time. But again I hardly see how one can make the argument this is not a change in existing law and we are opening up, not just one but at least two, avenues for Federal district court recommendations.

Mr. BREAUX. May I make one final point and then I will sit down.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am happy to yield for that purpose.

Mr. BREAUX. I think we are probably not going to agree on this. I suggest to the distinguished ranking member, what we need around here is a little law and order, and perhaps we could go ahead and vote on it. We could resolve it very quickly. Let's just vote on it and then move on to the next step.

Mr. THOMPSON. I agree with that.

Mr. SPECTER. One additional question.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Senator GRAMM had made the comment in his earlier presentation that every President since President Carter has had the power to make personnel decisions on national security grounds. We have just had a discussion with some of the people from the personnel department. We have been cited to no authority as to the personnel decisions under chapter 43, chapter 51, chapter 53, chapter 75 and chapter 77. These are all provisions of the Gramm bill. The only exception for national security is one on labor relations—labor-management relations in chapter 71.

The question I have for the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, is whether he knows of any provision, statutory provision or other provision, which will give the President the authority to make personnel decisions on national security grounds?

Mr. THOMPSON. I know of no other. Obviously, if I am proven incorrect on that, we will supplement this record. But this is clearly the area—which points out the importance of it, which points out the whole personnel issue—getting the right people in the right place at the right time with the right pay and the right responsibilities and the right accountability is what this is all about. Therefore, Congress—many years ago, President Kennedy signed the bill—decided that the President should have the right, in personnel, with regard to matters of national security. And even broader than that: Intelligence, counterintelligence, and investigative, which is something I know my friend from Pennsylvania knows a great deal about—investigative.

I do not know whether that has ever been exercised, that particular provision, but it is a pretty broad provision. Every President since Jimmy Carter has exercised that provision. As far as I know, it has not been controversial.

This President Bush exercised it not too long ago with regard to the U.S. attorneys. There was a hue and cry that went up. It was said they may be prosecuting terrorists and we may have to move them around somewhat and all that. Well and good, but you included the secretaries.

Mr. SPECTER. That was on collective bargaining, was it not, as opposed to personnel?

Mr. THOMPSON. I beg your pardon?

Mr. SPECTER. The President exercised his authority under national security grounds on a collective bargaining issue as opposed to a personnel issue?

Mr. THOMPSON. You could say that, but it was under this (B)(3) authority on national security grounds.

Mr. SPECTER. Correct.

Mr. THOMPSON. The secretaries were a part of the unit and the assistant U.S. attorneys wanted to be organized. I am not familiar with that concept. When I was assistant U.S. attorney, when I was brought in. I stayed as long as they wanted me or I wanted to stay. When they elected another President, I was gone. Nowadays we have a civil service system and folks there were trying to take it one step further and unionize.

In light of what is going on in the world, the determination was made it is not a good idea to have people prosecuting terrorists, bogged down with negotiating some of these things, some of which are quite foolish, we have been describing. For better or for worse, that decision was made.

The secretaries were incorporated because the President's authority only goes to taking action with regard to agencies or subdivisions of the agencies. So the suggestion was made to the union representatives at that time, as I understand it, in talking to the OPM people, let's change the law so we can carve out secretaries. And they said: Oh, no, no, no. We don't want to do that.

We do not like the issue framed just the way it is. That created some controversy with regard to the only time this President has exercised authority there. But as far as I know, historically, all Presidents have exercised it. It happens to be controversial.

I simply do not understand. If we are going to debate whether or not this is merely supplemental, and we don't want to really do anything with regard to the President's authority, why in the world can't we go back to the traditional authority that every President has had?

What is the message we are sending to the American people? Do some of our colleagues distrust this President who seems to have the trust of the American people with regard to matters of life and death? From all the polls I can read, I think he is doing the best he can. I think all Presidents always do the best they can. We rally around them in times of war and in times of great national issues.

Do we really want to be fighting for days on end as to whether or not you can say it is significant or you can say it is insignificant? You can say it is in addition to, you can say it is a modification, and you can say it is supplemental. But do we really want to change that now for the sake of—if it is not 40,000 union employees, it is 20,000—those who are in bargaining units? Only 20,000 are union members out of 170,000.

My colleagues who support the Nelson amendment would suggest that we put up these additional hurdles with regard to the President's national security authority only with regard to homeland security. The area where he needs the authority the most is the only waiver area which they would take away. The Labor Department is not affected by this. The Energy Department is not affected by this. It is only the homeland security area. I have great difficulty in understanding the wisdom behind doing that at this time.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. THOMPSON. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have heard this debate. It reminds me of why I didn't go to law school. It is easier to hire people with the expertise of the Senators here who have gone to law school to try to explain this than it is to understand it yourself.

I have a very simple question coming from a more simple attitude about this whole thing. Is it not true that the President of the United States has said he will veto this bill if it has this in it? If that is the fact, it doesn't matter if we have 99.400-percent agreement on everything else. The legislation is not going to go forward.

I ask the Senator from Tennessee, who is in closer touch with the White House than I am, if it is not true that the President said he will veto this bill if this is in it?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is my understanding. I think it is important to understand the rationale behind that.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not challenging that. I don't want to trigger another discussion of all the rationality. I want to cut to the question that the Senator from Connecticut asked: Why can't we come together, as we always do with legislation, and get this thing moving forward? I ask the Senator from Tennessee, Should we be aware of the fact that, right or wrong, the President, as is his right under the Constitution, has made his intentions very clear? And shouldn't we be paying attention to that as we make our negotiations as well as all the other issues that have been discussed on the floor?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. Indeed. I do not think any of us want to spend all this time and effort on something that basically we think ought to happen in terms of reorganization of an important part of Government for naught and go before the American people and say we have failed because we insist on the status quo with regard to managing this thing but not the status quo with regard to the President's national security authority.

I can't read the President's mind. We learned that our CIA Director declared war to his people some time ago, and he is taking a lot of criticism and abuse, quite frankly, from some of our people who are our allies—one, in particular, I think in a particularly shameless fashion, in order to get reelected in Germany, has said some things which I think is going to haunt the relationship between the United States and Germany for a while. In the midst of all that—albeit he was talking about the Iraq issue and not this one—I think it put the President in a difficult position when we are spending all this time debating.

Again, this is the one area where we do not like status quo. Whether it is small, whether it is large, whether you slice it thin or you slice it thick, any way you cut it, it is additional steps that the President has to make, and additional opportunities for somebody to take into court, and things of that nature.

I don't think it says there is no basis for a President saying he is going to veto something and I wouldn't support him just because he threatened a veto. I am sure that I have opposed Presidents who threatened vetoes before. My attitude was to let them veto it because I didn't think it was sound, or I didn't think there was a rationale for it.

I am not afraid to say that one should look past that. I think it is going to be extremely difficult to go before the American people to explain why we insist on passing something that the President says he won't sign. But it is even more important that we look at the underlying rationale.

I have been on the Governmental Affairs Committee ever since I have been in the Senate. The thing I leave the Senate with—the sentiment, the idea, the notion, the feeling—is how difficult it is to make even a little change in the way Government works.

We have seen from Department to Department to Department overlap, duplication, billions of dollars wasted, $20 billion in 1 year, dysfunction, inability to incorporate information technology systems that private industry has been able to do for years, and human capital crises. We are going to be losing 45 percent of our workforce in about 5 years. We are keeping the wrong people and losing the right people. And we can't pay people what we ought to be paying them. We have seen all of that happen in the operation of government services, money, and so forth. It will hurt us if we incorporate all of that into this new homeland security bill.

You take all of that history, all those GAO reports, all of those IG reports we have seen year after year saying the Government is a mess in many respects, and it cannot pass an audit. It is a management mess. People say "Tut, tut." And you see an article in the paper every once in a while.

We bring them down and chastise them. They go back for another year. The next year they come back, they are still on the high-risk list and nothing has changed.

Take that in context then to the President. We are at war. We now perceive the need to organize our Government—at least a part of our Government—in a different way. We see that old systems in many respects simply need to be redone.

We have a President who the American people are behind and support, and we still can't make any change in our system in terms of how we manage this new Department, in terms of a civil service system that Paul Volcker down at Brookings—it is not a conservative, liberal thing—Paul Volcker and everybody agrees is a broken system that underwhelms itself at every task it takes. And we still, at long last, even in light of this history of failure, even with the loss of thousands of Americans, even if we agreed on the need to reorganize, can't make any changes in a system that is at the heart of the changes that need to be made.

The right people with the right pay and the right motivation and right accountability at the right place at the right time is what it is all about. Yet we are endangering—as we endanger as we speak—not being able to pass a bill to do one thing at long last.

I fear for my country. Once this issue is over, I fear that it will be so difficult to make any changes in the way the Government operates that it is going to collapse administratively of its own weight. There is enough fault to go around. There are a lot of years. This did not happen overnight. But that is the only way, apparently, that we can change anything around here. We cannot come together and agree on changes that need to be made, apparently.

I fear for my Government because if we cannot administer these departments, and we cannot make them run, we cannot get the right kind of people in the right places, none of this other stuff will work.

It all gets back to personnel. You say: Well, we're OK 90, 95 percent. That 5 percent is the nut that holds the propeller on the airplane. It is just a little nut—bolt, let's say—it is very small in weight in comparison to the weight of the airplane, but it is just what holds everything together.

It is a depressing situation when, in light of all this, at long last, we are hung up on some of these issues. The other side says: Well, you shouldn't be hung up. You ought to agree with us. And we are saying the same thing. But I will just pass on the merits of the case for a moment.

We are not making much progress on doing things differently than we have done before, except with regard to the President's national security authority—we ought to diminish that somewhat.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Will the Senator yield the floor without losing his right to the floor for a moment?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank my friend from Tennessee.

I want to take a moment to try to answer the very good question the Senator from Utah has asked which is, regardless of what our positions are on this particular amendment—Nelson-Chafee-Breaux, a bipartisan amendment—hasn't the President said he would veto the bill if it was attached? I have not heard that specifically with regard to this amendment. Maybe I missed it. And I am glad I have not heard it because of the history I want to recite now.

The President, or somebody in the White House—maybe the President himself—said if the bill, as it came out of our committee, had the provisions with regard to Federal employees, homeland security workers, in it, that the President probably would veto the bill.

I must say when that was said and the media asked me about it. I said: I can't believe the President would veto this bill based on that difference because we agree on 90 to 95 percent of the components of the bill. It is creating a new Department. We all agree it is urgent. Let's get it done. We can argue about this.

As a matter of fact, Governor Ridge was good and honorable enough to say to me at a meeting about this subject a week or 2 ago: I do remember at the beginning you, Senator LIEBERMAN, said to me, Please, let's not get into a fight over civil service. Let's pass the bill. And then we can come back in 6 months—in fact, our committee bill requires the new Secretary to come back in 6 months.

OK. We went ahead. We adopted the Voinovich-Akaka bipartisan reform on civil service in our committee bill. But we did not give the President any of the waivers he asked for and other provisions of civil service.

On the question of this extraordinary authority that Presidents have had since President Carter to remove collective bargaining rights, we set up essentially an appeals process to a Federal board, the FLRA, of which the President appoints two of the three members. That is the one the President made clear he believed would be a cut in his national security authority and said he would veto.

We came to the floor in a spirit of compromise, with my full encouragement. Senator NELSON and Senator BREAUX began to see if we could find some common ground with the White House and the folks on the other side of the aisle. And there was substantial movement. In fact, I think we have been quite flexible in that regard. We may disagree, but one thing I want to say is, at least as I interpret it, we have ended up with a compromise amendment which does not at all diminish the national security authority of this President or any future President if it is passed.

With regard to civil service, it gives the President new authority to change civil service law. It asks that, as we have done quite successfully with the IRS—and it is done in the public sector all the time—the best way to get changes in work rules is to not shove them down the throats of workers; try to negotiate them.

So this bill says: Try to negotiate them with your workers. And if that does not work, send it to the Federal Services Impasses Panel, which has seven members, all appointed by the current President. So it is not a hostile board.

In regard to the collective bargaining rights, we say now—and there is no appeal to the board I mentioned before. The compromise says the President has to make his case, incidentally, not just job by job; the order is he simply has to claim that the mission and responsibilities of the agency or subdivision have materially changed, as Senator BREAUX said, and the majority of the employees within the agency are involved in national security work. That is final.

Incidentally, there has been one court case, as Senator BREAUX said—we are going to get it, look at it, and maybe enter it in the Record—which said the substantive determination on a question of national security is not reviewable by a court.

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I will.

Mr. BREAUX. I didn't know we had the floor.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Through the courtesy of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Senator does not have the floor. That is OK. I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. I don't want to belabor this any longer. But I say to the ranking member, there is only one case out of the 30 years where the President's authority was ever challenged to do what he did in moving employees around. And in that case, which was a case in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, on the question of whether the President had proved the reason for making the decision that he made, the court said—I will have it printed in the Record—

> The executive order under review cited accurately the statutory source of authority therefor, and purported to amend an earlier order that indubitably was . . . proper. . . .The act does not itself require or even suggest that any finding be reproduced in the order.

I would say, in layman's language, that basically said: Look, once the President says I am doing this because the mission and responsibilities have materially changed, he does not have to make a finding. That statement in itself is a declaration that the court looks to only. It does not require any supporting findings or any other determination other than the President citing the statute by which he has made that decision. And that is the only decision we had on this issue by a court of appeals.

I ask unanimous consent that decision be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This appeal summons us to decide whether a presidential executive order purportedly exerting a statutorily-conferred power is legally ineffective because it does not show facially and affirmately that the President made the determines upon which exercise of the power is conditioned. We hold that the challenged order is entitled [2] to a rebuttable presumption of regularity, and on the record before us we sustain it.

Since 1962, collective bargaining has been available to most federal employees. n1 In 1978, Congress enacted the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Act, n2 the first legislation comprehensively governing labor relations between federal managers and employees, Congress did not, however, include the entire federal workforce within this regime. The Act itself exempted several federal agencies from coverage; n3 additionally Section [*725] 7103 (b)(1) authorized the President, under specified conditions, to make further exceptions:

The President may issue an order excluding any agency or subdivision thereof from coverage under this chapter if the President determines that—

(A) The agency or subdivision has as a primary function intelligence, counterintelligence, investigative, or national security work; and

(B) The provisions of this chapter cannot be applied to that agency or subdivision in a manner consistent with national security requirements and considerations. n4

In 1979, President Carter issued Executive Order 12171 n5 which, after paraphrasing Section 7103(b)(1), eliminated a number of agencies and subdivisions from coverage. In 1986, President Reagan promulgated Executive Order 12559, which undertook to amend the 1979 order to exclude certain subdivisions of the United States Marshals Service. n6 Appelles then instituted an action in the District Court attacking the legality of the latter order. The court rejected their claim that federal marshals are not engaged in protection of the national security, and consequently that the order was invalid on this account, ruling instead that judicial authority to reassess the facts underlying the order was lacking. n7 The court concluded, however, that it retained "general power to ensure that the authority was correctly invoked," n8 and that this necessitated measurement of the order by the conditions specified in Section 7103(b)(1). n9 The court held that inclusion in the order of the President's determinations was a condition precedent to lawful exercise of the power, n10 only in this way, the court felt, could it be demonstrated [4] that the circumstances contemplated by the Act existed. n11 The court further held that Executive Order 12559 was not saved merely by the fact that it sought only to amend the 1979 order, which did contain the recitation * * * necessary, n12 Accordingly, the court granted summary judgment in favor of appellees, n13 and appellants came here.

n6 In relevant part, Exec. Order No. 12,559 provides:

By the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and statutes of the United States of America, including Section 7103(b) of Title V of the United States Code, and in order to excempt certain agencies or subdivisions thereof from coverage of the Federal Labor-Management Relations Program, it is hereby ordered as follows: Executive Order No. 12171, as amended, is further amended by deleting Section 1–209 and inserting in its place:

Section 1–209 Agencies or Subdivisions of the Department of Justice:

We first must address appellants' contention that the case is moot. In 1988, after the District Court ruled, the President issued Executive Order 12632, which provides for the same exclusions that Executive Order 12559 does, and contains all that the court deemed essential. n14 Since [*726] the 1988 order conforms fully to the court's standard, the question areas whether a controversy still exists. Appellants, while maintaining that the 1986 order remains [6] valid, assert that the 1988 order fully resolves the dispute over validity of the 1986 order, and urge us to vacate the District Court's judgment and dismiss the appeal. n15

Important collateral consequences flowing from the 1986 order lead us to the conclusion that the controversy remains very much alive. Since issuance of the 1986 order, the Marshals Service has unilaterally abrogated the collective bargaining agreement as to affected deputy marshals, thereby depriving them of grievance procedures and other benefits, and has terminated checkoff of union dues, to the serious financial detriment of the union. n16 On this account, appellees have filed unfair labor practice charges with the Federal Labor Relations Authority, n17 which is holding the charges in abeyance pending the outcome of this appeal. n18 Resolution of the charges depends up the validity of the 1986 order—the precise question now before us.

In these circumstances, it cannot be said that the 1988 order has "completely and irrevocably eradicated the effects of the alleged violation" n19—the annulment of Executive Order 12559. n20 We accordingly put the suggestion of mootness aside and turn to the merits.

n20 Id. The Government urges us to dispose of all collateral consequences by treating the 1988 order as a "curative act" and extending its vitality as such back to the date of the 1986 order. It suffices to point out that curative governmental action is not to be given such retroactivity as to demolish intervening vested rights—here those asserted by appellees with a view of remediation. See, e.g., Hodges v. Snyder, 261 U.S. 600, 603–604, 43 S. Ct. 435, 436, 67 L. Appellants argue that the District Court improperly imposed upon the President a requirement not supported by the Act. n21 They insist that a presumption of regularity surrounded the promulgation of Executive Order 12559, and thus that there was no need to explicate findings by the President. n22 Appellants also claim that any infirmity in the order is rendered immaterial by the fact that it simply amended the 1979 order, which incorporated findings of the sort believed to be necessary. n23 n21 Brief for Appellants at 9, 13.

Appellees contend that the 1986 order did not comply with the Act. n24 They insist that Congress designed the findings as preconditions to the President's resort to the exemption authority; that the courts are the instrumentalities for ensuring that the authority is properly exercised; and that the courts must see some proof that these prerequisites were satisfied. n25 Appellees point to other cases in which courts have invalidated executive action that did not satisfy statutory demands. n26

In National Federation, this court invalidated an attempt by the President to define the "public interest," with respect to the pay of certain federal workers, "without reliance on the explicit standards" set by Congress. 207 U.S. App. D.C. at 100, 645 F.2d at 1017. In NTEU, this court issued a declaratory judgment that the President's failure to perform an express, statutory and non-discretionary duty violated his constitutional obligation to faithfully execute the laws. 160 U.S. App. D.C. at 326–336, 350, 492 F.2d at 592–603, 616. In Levy, the Ninth Circuit held that an executive order had to comport with the authorizing statute to be valid. 651 F.2d at 1282. Appellants do not take issue with these unexceptional holdings, and we merely observe that they land no assistance in solving the problem confronting us. [9]

[*727] Section 7103(b)(1) makes clear that the President may exclude an agency from the Act's coverage whenever he "determines" that the conditions statutorily specified exist. n27 That section does not expressly call upon the President to insert written findings into an exempting order, or indeed to utilize any particular format for such an order. The District Court, by mandating a presidential demonstration of compliance wish the section, engrafted just such a demand onto the * * *.

We deem the familiar presumption of regularity decisive here. It "supports the official acts of public officers and, in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary, courts presume that they have properly discharged their official duties." n28 This presumption has been recognized since the early days of the Republic. In the summer of 1812, President Madison exercised a statutorily-conferred power to call forth state militiaman "whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe." n29 In Martin v. Mott, n30 a militiaman objected on the ground that the order did not show facially that the President [10] had determined that there was an imminent danger of invasion. p31 The Supreme Court responded:

It is the opinion of the Court, that this objection cannot be maintained. When the President exercises an authority confided to him by law, the presumption is that it is exercised in pursuance of law. Every public official is presumed to act in obedience to his duty, until the contrary is shown; and a fortiori this presumption ought to be favorably applied to the chief magistrate of the Union. It is not necessary to aver, that the act which he may rightfully do, was so done. n32

Over the many years since Martin v. Mott, the presumption of regularity has been applied in a variety of contexts, n33 and [*728] it is clearly applicable to the case at bar. The executive order under review cited accurately the statutory source of authority therefor, and purported to amend an earlier order that indubitably was * * * not itself require or even suggest that any finding be, reproduced in the order. No more than the District Court have appellants suggested any actual irregularity in the President's factfinding process or activity. In these circumstances, we encounter no difficulty in presuming executive regularity. We cannot allow a breach of the presumption of regularity by an unwarranted assumption that the President was indifferent to the purposes and requirements of the Act, or acted deliberately in contravention of them.

n33 The cases doing so are legion. The following are typical: INS v. Miranda, 459 U.S. 14, 18, 103 S. Ct. 281, 283, 74 L. Ed. 2d 12, 16–17 (1982) (specific evidence is required to overcome presumption that public officers have executed their responsibilities properly); Citizens to preserve Overton Park, Inc. v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 415, 91 S. Ct. 814, 823; 28 L. Ed. 2d 136, 133 (1971) (where statute prohibited approval by Secretary of Transportation of federal financing for construction of roadways through parks unless there was no feasible and prudent alternative route, and Secretary approved financing for such a project without making formal findings, Secretary's decisionmaking process was entitled to presumption of regularity); Michigan v. Doran, 439 U.S. 282, 290, 99 S. Ct. 530, 536, 58 L. Ed. 2d 521, 528 (1978) (in extradition hearing, presumption of regularity insulates demanding state's probable cause determination from review in asylum state); Philadelphia & T. Ry. v. Stimpson, 39 U.S. (14 Pet.) 448, 458, 10 L. Ed. 535, 541 (1840) (where statute required certain conditions to be met before corrected patent could issue, signatures of President and Secretary of State on corrected patent raised presumption that all requisite conditions were satisfied, despite absence of recitals so indicating on face of patent); Udall v. Washington, Va. & Md. Coach Co., 130 U.S. App. D.C. 171, 175, 398 F.2d 765, 769, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1017, 89 S. Ct. 620, 21 L. Ed. 3d 561 (1968) (Secretary of Interior's determination that limitation of commercial bus service on portion of George Washington Parkway was required to preserve area's natural scenic beauty was entitled to presumption of validity, and burden was upon challenger to overcome it); National Lawyers Guild v. Brownell, 96 U.S. App. D.C. 252, 255, 225 F.2d 552, 555 (1955), cert, denied, 351 U.S. 927, 76 S. Ct. 778, 100 L. Ed. 1457 (1956) ("we cannot assume in advance of a hearing that a responsible executive official of the Government will fail to carry out his manifest duty" by reaching a final decision on a matter before complete record required by law was compiled). [12]

In ruling to the contrary, the District Court relied heavily upon the prevailing opinion of the Supreme Court in Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan. n34 There the Court, focusing on what it regarded as an excessive statutory delegation of legislative power to the President. n35 set for naught an executive order issued pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act by striking down the authorizing provision of the statute, n36 The Court held in the alternative that even if the statute was valid, the order would still be ineffective because it did not set forth express findings on the existence of conditions prerequisite to exercise of the authority conferred. n37 The Court observed that to hold that [the President] is free to select as he chooses from the many and various objects generally described in the [relevant] section, and then to act without making any finding with respect to any object that he does select, and the circumstances properly related to that object, would be in effect to make the conditions inoperative and to invest him with an uncontrolled legislative power. n38

Just what situations this declaration encompasses may to many remain quite obscure. That one situation, however, is beyond its ken is crystal clear. The majority opinion cautioned that the Court was "not dealing with . . . the presumption attaching to executive action. . . . We are concerned with the question of the delegation of legislative power." n39 The Court cited approvingly several cases, including importantly Martin v. Mott, in which the presumption of regularity was applied. n40 Our proper course, then, is evident; we are to abide the Court's admonition that was Panama Refining does is in applicable here, and that, as in Martin v. Mott, the presumption of regularity is pivotal. Indeed, the Supreme Court has never given Panama Refining the interpretation it received in the District Court, nor, so far as we can ascertain, has any other court.

We hold that Executive Order 12559 is effective, and has been from the date of its promulgation. The judgment of the District Court is accordingly reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

So ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. GRAMM. Is our Senator aware, while our colleague from Louisiana cites a court case that upheld the President's power to grant a waiver under national security, that the Senator's own amendment changes the criterion from national security to terrorism?

Mr. BREAUX. It does not.

Mr. GRAMM. That, in fact, the very standard that the court has upheld is a standard that he changes. It is clear to those who are looking at making this work that a standard based on terrorism is not as strong as a standard based on national security. So I think what we are seeing, over and over again, is one discussion but another reality.

I just ask the Senator if he is aware that part of what is being done is a change from the standard that gives the President the ability to waive on national security concerns to a standard to waive on terrorism concerns, where there is no comparable litigation, and where there are no comparable precedents?

Mr. THOMPSON. In answer to that, the Senator is correct in that the Nelson language does not mention national security in the section that I am looking at that I think is the operable section and requires that the duty of the "majority of the employees" be engaged in "intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative work," and that all of it, or any of it, must be "directly related to terrorism investigation."

Mr. GRAMM. That is right.

Mr. THOMPSON. If it is not related to terrorism, the President does not have the authority, the way this is drafted. But I suppose what I wonder is if, in effect, what we are saying—and the Senator is right; we are comparing apples and oranges, it sounds like with this prior case—but if what we are saying is that we want to make it so the President's actions are not judicially reviewable at all, why are we having this debate?

I assume it is because we have an additional hurdle in there that every once in a while an honest President just couldn't make, such as the job changing. If the President is going to say, I have the authority, I can say whatever I want to say, I guess he could do that then. But if the President really does want to go to the trouble of determining whether or not the jobs of a majority of the people inside of an agency have changed, then that would be a situation where the President could not morally make such a determination.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. GRAMM. Is the Senator also aware that making the determination on the basis of terrorism is very different than making the determination on the basis of national security? In fact, the roots of the President's national security powers go back to the Constitution. It is unclear how the courts would interpret or define terrorism.

Let me ask the following question. I think the Senator made a relevant point. If we all want the President to have national security powers, why are we having this debate? If you want to take the clothing off this amendment, is the Senator aware that in the last provision in the amendment that it strikes a provision in the pending substitute that guarantees that any power the President had under national security the day before the terrorist attack, he would continue to have after this bill? Is the Senator aware that provision is stricken by this amendment?

Can the Senator imagine, if our colleagues really, sincerely want the President to have emergency powers, why they would want to strike that provision?

Mr. THOMPSON. In answer to the Senator, I am aware of that. It is because if that section were in there, it would be inconsistent with this section.

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BREAUX. Just to make two quick points. No. 1, it is very clear that the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment is a supplement and not replacing the original section 7103(b)(1). We are not replacing the language talking about national security.

The second point, the debate on the floor has been the question about how difficult it would be for the President to make a showing that the mission and responsibilities of the agency have materially changed. I would say very clearly that the only court case in 30 years that has ever challenged the President's authority in making this determination said very clearly that this section makes clear that the President may exclude an agency from the act's coverage whenever he determines that the conditions statutorily specified exist. This section does not expressly call upon the President to insert any written findings into his exempting order or, indeed, to utilize any particular format for such an order.

That is as clear as you can say it. When the President says these conditions exist, that is all he has to show, period. That is the end of it.

I hope that will address the concerns of the ranking minority member about the President having to make findings and do things that he is incapable of doing. This case, the only case interpreting this, says he doesn't have to make any findings. It is left up to him. When he says, I have determined that these conditions exist, I can do it, that is not reviewable. The national security statute is still in place. It is still there. It has not been removed.

Our amendment is an amendment to the existing 7103. The national security language is still in place. It is not struck by our amendment in any way.

The President makes the determination and his determination is not reviewable by court based on the fact that these conditions do not exist. It is very clear.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, how in the world can we say that the Nelson amendment is a supplement to the current law, when the current law says the President may, and the Nelson amendment says the President may not? Square that one with me.

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. In a moment. The current law says the President may issue an order if he determines that the agency or subdivision has a primary function of intelligence, counterintelligence, investigative, or national security work. The Nelson amendment says no agency shall be excluded because of the President's authority, unless the determination is made that the mission and responsibility of the agency or subdivision has materially changed.

You call that supplemental to, or whatever you want to call it, but it was not there before.

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. THOMPSON. For a majority of the employees, current law says the agency has a primary function. The amendment says the majority of the employees within the agency have as their primary duty. The current law says, intelligence, counterintelligence, investigative, or national security. The amendment says intelligence, counterintelligence, or investigative work directly related to terrorism.

You can call it anything you want on the Senate floor, but the fact is, the current law is designed to give the President authority. The amendment is designed to limit the President's authority. It could not be any simpler.

I yield for a question, if I may.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator retains the floor.

Mr. BREAUX. For one moment, just to respond specifically to the language in the existing statute that says the President can, if he does certain things. Our language says, he cannot do it unless he does certain things. The end result is exactly the same. Our language says that if the President makes a determination that these things exist, he can do whatever he needs to do in this area. The language in the existing statute simply phrases it differently, by saying the President can do this if he shows the following. The end result is exactly the same.

Mr. THOMPSON. May I ask the Senator, if the end result is exactly the same, why does he insist on proposing this amendment?

Mr. BREAUX. There are two different points to be made here. The first point is, the way the language was drafted it was intended to do the same thing by saying the President can take action if he does certain things. The answer to that question is, absolutely, yes. It is phrased differently. One is in the negative. One is in the positive. But the end result is that the President can do these things if he shows the following.

The amendment we have says, for the first time in history, you are not talking about moving 5 people or 10 people or 100 people; you are talking about moving thousands and thousands of people. Over 100,000 people are going to be changed. At least we ought to show that the majority of them have something to do with this issue. That is an additional requirement. It is one that he determines.

Mr. THOMPSON. Maybe we have finally settled it. I heard the phrase "additional requirement." You can argue that because this is such a massive job, we ought to hamstring the President a little bit or you can argue because this is such a massive job that we should not.

But the Senator is absolutely correct in that he has laid on an additional requirement. That is the only thing I think we have been trying to establish.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Let me say something first and then ask the question. The effect of the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment is to add these two criteria for a judgment by the President in the specific case of the 43,000 currently unionized employees who will be moved to the new Department of Homeland Security. That is all.

The reason it does that is there is some apprehension, even though they have been doing these jobs for years and no previous President has found they are inconsistent with national security and being a member of the union, they want the President to make that determination. But here is the point I want to make about the court case.

There is actually no lessening of the President's authority because the underlying statute says in title 5 7103(b)(1):

> The President may issue an order excluding any agency or subdivision thereof from coverage under this chapter—

Which is the collective bargaining chapter.

Mr. GRAMM. Seventy-one?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. It is 7103(b)(1). Then it says:

> if the President determines that—

And in the current statute which relates to the entire Federal workforce, it says:

> the agency . . . has as a primary function, intelligence, counterintelligence, investigative, or national security work, and the provisions of this chapter—> cannot be applied to that agency . . . in a manner consistent with national security. . . .

Collective bargaining—

The Nelson-Breaux-Chafee amendment adds two other factors solely with regard to the employees who will be transferred to the new Department: The missions and responsibilities, not of the individual jobs but the agency or subdivision of change, and a majority of the employees within the agency have as their primary duties activities related to terrorism.

Here is the point I want to make as I read it. That is why I think there is not even a hair of difference between us in what we are saying. The basic operative point here is the language in the current statute—"if the President determines that." It is up to the President to determine the standards under the current law and the two standards for employees transferred to the new Department that Nelson-Chafee-Breaux adds. The Federal court has said the President's determination under this statute is not reviewable. That goes not just for national security, it goes for the two basic underlying and the two additional requirements that are added under this provision for employees of the new Department.

This is not effectively appealable. In other words, Senators Nelson, Chafee, and Breaux tried to come up with an amendment which responded to the concerns expressed by the White House and our colleagues on the floor that in some way the committee's bill in this regard was lessening the national security powers of the President by subjecting it to an appeal to the Federal Labor Relations Authority. We cut that out now.

I must say, I believe because we are so interested in getting this done we have been quite flexible on this side. I ask my colleagues on the other side, particularly the Senator from Texas, to take a close look at this because of the urgency of creating a homeland security agency. Let's try to find common ground and agree the President has essentially unassailable authority under this provision, exactly what he wants. It gives a small degree of what might be called due process to Federal homeland security workers against an arbitrary action by a President.

Frankly, under this wording and based on that court decision, the odds are a President could act arbitrarily here, too, if he invoked national security.

I thank the Senator from Tennessee for yielding. I guess my question is: Does the Senator not agree with me?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, let me pose a question to my friend from Connecticut. Is it the Senator's determination that this language he quoted under subsection (2) that "The President may issue an order suspending any provision of this chapter . . . if the President determines that the suspension is necessary in the interest of national security," is it the Senator's understanding that would supersede the new requirement that he find the responsibilities of the agency have materially changed?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Looking at that section—incidentally, the language, the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment amends decisions made under 7103(b)(1). (b)(2) I think gives the President authority to suspend any provision of the chapter specifically with respect to any installation or activity located outside the United States of America.

It is not diminished at all, not really affected at all.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Senator points out the provision I just quoted is with respect to an agency or activity located outside.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. In responding to the Senator from Tennessee, my reading of that section (2) is simply to restate the President's authority, not only with regard to employees of the Federal Government within the United States of America and the District of Columbia but outside the United States of America and the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, that is a big difference. I do not think it has anything to do with employees inside the United States of America. I think that section only has to do with employees outside the United States of America.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I think that is right.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. Which would leave us, once again, in a situation where the President is having to make a new determination because there is "concern"—concern we did not have with regard to any of these other Presidents, but we have concern with this President at this time. One can argue it is minimal. One can argue it is almost the same.

We are creating some interesting legislative history here. I wonder how anybody can ever contest the President after this discussion, quite frankly, but if that is the case, why in the world do we want to announce to the world we want to spend 2, 3, 4 days arguing over whether or not to diminish the President's authority a little bit or whether or not to put up an additional hurdle before him, when he is saying to us and the world—presumably, I do not know how onerous this is going to be; perhaps it will not be very onerous at all. It is just not right. It is just not right to diminish the President's authority or to put up additional requirements of him at this time.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to make a comment without the Senator from Tennessee losing the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have been here for an hour and a half now listening to this debate, listening to the argument going back and forth, and the conclusion I think I hear from the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Connecticut is an interesting one. It may not be the conclusion they really think they came to, but the conclusion I hear them saying, particularly in the final statements that took place, is they put this in the amendment to give the labor unions a sense of security but, in fact, that security is not there, so we can vote for the amendment with a clear conscience; that they did what the unions wanted them to do so they would not feel nervous about being put into this new Department, but reading their interpretation of the law, they are saying it really does not make any difference.

The last comment from the Senator from Connecticut that even an arbitrary and capricious action by a President—and he made it clear he did not expect this President to do that, and I appreciate his graciousness in that, but then in a hypothetical, an arbitrary or capricious action by a President could still go unchecked under this amendment and, therefore, we ought to embrace it.

If that is, in fact, the case—I will look at it very closely with some help from people who are burdened with a legal education, as I am not—if that is, in fact, the case, I think the Senator from Connecticut has just exposed himself to a little criticism from the unions.

How can he have misled them into thinking he was doing something substantive on their behalf and at their behest if, in fact, it is not substantive and the President would get everything he wants?

Of course, the same question arises from the White House. If, in fact, the White House is seeing no substantive change and this is more of a cosmetic kind of a thing, why are they threatening to veto?

So I am now going to leave the floor and go to lunch. I have some time scheduled later in the afternoon when I will talk about something else, but I have found this to be a very interesting exchange. Without in any way attempting to diminish the sincerity, integrity, or intelligence of those who have engaged in the debate on both sides, it strikes me a little like the medieval debate about the number of angels who can dance on the head of a pin.

If, in fact, as the Senator from Louisiana said and then the Senator from Connecticut summarized, the net effect of this amendment in this area is to not change the law or ultimately take any of the President's power away——

Mr. GRAMM. If that were the effect.

Mr. BENNETT. The question arises, why are we doing it? Either there has been a misleading of the unions so they feel a false sense of security that they do not really get or there is, in fact, some substantive change that we are supposed to not notice on this side of the aisle.

As I say, I do not challenge the intelligence, the integrity, or the motives of anybody who has engaged in this debate, but as a layman, standing here for an hour and a half, listening to the debate go back and forth, I draw that conclusion. I find myself quite perplexed over the intensity with which this battle has been fought if indeed that is where we are.

I see the Senator from Connecticut is on the floor, and I will be happy to yield to him for whatever comment he may wish to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair. I want to respond, and then I will yield the floor. I know other Members in the Chamber wish to speak.

I appreciate what the Senator from Utah has said because I think he has come to the nub of it. Part of what this dialogue has reflected is how much people on our side, including the folks from the Federal worker organizations, want to get this bill passed. There has been a substantial change from the original wording of the committee bill, which did allow an appeal to the Federal Labor Relations Authority from the decision of the Secretary—or administration in these cases.

Effectively what we have done is to add two more criteria for the President to base his decision on as to whether union membership is inconsistent with national security, but we have not diminished the President's authority to make that decision. In other words, the same high authority he has had, sustained by the court decision we have cited and the two criteria that are there now, he has that same power under the two we have added.

The Senator asks: What have we done then? By adding two more standards, what we have done is to establish a kind of protection against truly arbitrary use by some future President of this extraordinary power the statute gives. What is the protection against arbitrary? The President has to make the case that he has determined, and let me read from the Nelson-Breaux-Chafee amendment: Mission and responsibilities of the agency or subdivision has materially changed—and this is only with regard to these employees who have now been moved to this Department; the President's authority remains unchanged with regard to every other Department—and that a majority of employees within the agency or subdivision have jobs directly related to terrorism.

I agree with the Senator. I have forgotten the word he used, and I wish I could recall it, but the Senator is wondering now why we are spending all of this time arguing about this. In my opinion, we should not. We should be adopting the whole bill and sending it to a conference committee so we can get it done soon and everybody, beginning with the President, can claim a victory in the name of national and homeland security.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Connecticut, the chairman of the committee, for his attitude and his approach to this. I will, in good faith, go back and examine it. In honesty, though, I must indicate I am not sure examining it is going to change my position, for this reason: The Senator from Connecticut has magnanimously, and I think accurately, said he does not believe our current President will abuse this power, and he has referred to some future arbitrary President.

Nonetheless, he says there will be some kind of review. At the risk of sounding paranoid myself, I think that is enough of an opening, enough of a crack in the door, for some future union leader, who might not have the same kind of motives that are being attributed to our current President, to go through that opening and, for reasons totally unrelated to the mission of the Department, reasons totally unrelated to the protection of the American homeland, decide that he or she wants to pick a fight with the President and set in motion a series of hearings and activities within the civil service procedure.

I do not know how many other Members of this body have served in the executive branch and been involved in civil service procedures. I have. I went into the executive branch thinking I knew something about personnel. I had hired and fired, I had been involved in difficult challenges, and I thought I understood the process. I was the biggest babe of all the babes in the woods when I got into that circumstance. I ended up with an employee who was totally incompetent, totally unqualified for the position into which I innocently and foolishly placed her. I immediately tried to get rid of her.

I served in the administration for 2 years. Then I left the administration, and while I was in my private life, I got a phone call saying I had been summoned to a civil service hearing on the case of this woman X number of years after I had left the Government. I went to her hearing, and I testified in her hearing as to the situation. I was astounded that it was 3 or 4 years—whatever the amount was—after we had initiated the action to remove her from the position for which she was totally unqualified. It had dragged on that long. I had finished my service in the executive branch. I was out in private practice. I was called back in to testify, and it was made clear to me that this hearing was by no means going to be dispositive of the case; it would go on beyond that.

If there are additional hurdles being placed on the President's authority in this Department by this amendment, in all good faith, with a sincere attempt on the part of my friends who are working on this amendment to try to come to a resolution, my hesitancy stems from that experience. If indeed some labor leader decides he or she wants to pick a fight with the President and use those additional hurdles for some motive unconnected with national security, I am not comfortable giving them that opportunity, particularly when they do not have it now.

The argument is being made, they are being transferred into a new Department and so they need to be protected. The statement by the Senator from Connecticut, that I quoted back to him and he said I was probably right, is this is being done to give them a sense of protection and comfort but that substantively it is not any different. It may very well be that at the end of the day, after it goes through the courts, substantively it will not be any different. The position taken by the Senators from Louisiana, Connecticut, and Nebraska will be exactly right. But if that day comes after 6 years of adjudication and fooling around, with a Department that must be almost at hair-trigger capacity to deal with the threat, I am not going to accept that. That is my concern. To say at the end of the procedure the President will not have lost any power, all he will have had to do is go through some additional procedures to exercise his power and therefore nothing is threatened, is to say we are not focusing on the mission of the Department.

The whole reason we are creating the Department is so we will have faster response time, so we will have better coordination on a threat that did not exist when these situations were created in the first place.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I am happy to yield, with the understanding I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. I suggest the Senator from Utah makes a good point in terms of not wanting this to go through an endless review process that will take years. It can take a substantial amount of time and tie in knots the entire operation. The reason that is unlikely, and most likely impossible, is the court case, the one case in 30 years, where it is made clear that if the President performs by making all the points that would be required by law, that is essentially nonreviewable.

All that is being proposed here is that there are two additional requirements that can be met, as well, and if the President dots the i's and crosses the t's and in good faith makes a determination that the court is not going to review it. It is important the court would not review it if he did not dot all the i's or cross the t's. I expect this President and the future President to do the right thing under the law.

That being the case, there is absolutely no reason to believe this will be tied up in court or there will be endless appeals by those who feel aggrieved by the determination. That is why it is important, whether you transfer these individuals or you go with the status quo, this body in the past and I think this body today has dealt with establishing requirements that must be met so that when they are met, due process has been achieved, the courts are not going to meddle in this process, and they are not going to review the administrations of the Congress when it comes to national security.

Mr. BENNETT. I thank my friend from Nebraska. But he comes back to the basic statement I made to the Senator from Connecticut. If in fact this is not really changing anything, and in fact there will be no significant delays, and if in fact the President has not lost any power, why is the amendment being offered? Why don't you just say if, in fact, nothing is going to change, we will not change it? And the issue that has been raised again and again is that the Senator from Texas put that exact statement in his amendment, he and the Senator from Georgia, that says nothing in this bill shall diminish the existing power of the President and the amendment before the Senate makes it very clear that statement has to go.

There has to be, by definition, some diminution of the power of the President.

I remember in such few Supreme Court cases I have reviewed one situation where the Court was confused what Congress was doing—surprising the Court would ever be unclear what we do; it is always so clear—the Court came down on the one side of the case with this comment. It said: We cannot assume that Congress committed a vacuous act. Therefore, they must have intended to have changed something or they wouldn't have passed this.

That is where we are here. We must, if we adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, be assuming some diminution of the President's power. If not, why are we doing it?

Once again, I am perfectly willing to talk about diminution of the President's power if it is arbitrary and capricious and if it is damaging to the due process of employees. But this Department is not the place to experiment with that. This Department is the Department that is geared for quick action, for quick protection of Americans under attack, and of all places where the President's ability, the Secretary's ability to move quickly should not be hampered by additional requirements, this is the place. This is the Department where that should not happen.

To turn that proposition on its head and say that the President's power is as it is in every other Department, but it will be slowed down in this Department, is something I don't understand.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. If I thought this would slow down the process, if I thought this was a diminution of the President's authority to make determinations, I would not offer it.

It is important to distinguish between the threshold requirement and the President's power. If you want to defeat this, people will say it diminishes the President's power. It does not diminish the President's authority to make determinations. It does not, through the court cases, diminish the President's power and authority to make certain determinations.

In this particular situation, the threshold decision about whether or not the President meets that decision without regard to the President's power to make the decision that there has been a material change, that clearly is a reasonable requirement in this particular situation because you are moving one group from their current situation to another situation. The question will be, Is there a material change as it relates to those responsibilities that are set out? It does not diminish the President's power or authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. BENNETT. I will yield the floor. The Senator from Texas wants to get into this, and I am more than happy to facilitate that for him.

Let me close my statement with this comment. By virtue of my own background and my committee assignments, I happen to find myself in front of groups made up of executives perhaps more often than not. I asked this question, whenever this subject comes up, to the executives that are talking to me about this Department.

The first question: Have any of you ever been involved in a major corporate merger? Immediately, the smiles start around the room as the understanding of the implications of that question get through to them. They nod, yes.

I ask: Has it been a pleasant experience? In every case, the answer is no. Mergers are always difficult.

Here is a merger involving 170,000 employees gathered together from some 22 different agencies, each with its own culture, background, personnel procedures, and understanding. Anyone who thinks Government employees live in a monolithic world, regardless of which agency they work in, lives in "Alice in Wonderland." Every agency has its own culture and its own way of doing things, and it is almost impossible to get them to deal with each other.

Then I say to them: If you were tapped by the President to be the chief executive officer of this new agency and you were told the employees who came into the agency in the process of it being created brought with them, by law, all of the personnel procedures and activities they had in their previous agencies, would you take the job?

I have not found a single volunteer yet. Basically, aside from the legalities of this—which, again, as a layman I hear the lawyers arguing back and forth—aside from the legalities, that is what drives me in this debate. I want to view this as an agency which is governable when it is created.

As I said on the floor before, I lived through the creation of the Department of Transportation and all of the difficulties connected with bringing those groups together—a big Department but, compared to this, relatively small. I was at the shoulder of the second Secretary of Transportation, John Volpe, as he wrestled with those problems. I saw firsthand how essential it was for him to have flexibility in a variety of ways which the organized government employees unions did not want to give him. He got it in the creation of that Department by congressional mandate, and he was able to do what he was able to do by virtue of that.

I was not around, but I can read about the creation of the Department of Defense, which was on the scale that we are talking about here. It is not beyond the importance of our understanding how significant this challenge is going to be for us to recognize that the first Secretary of Defense committed suicide under the pressures of trying to make this all work. The Department of Defense probably never did work until after the Goldwater-Nichols Act, some 15 or 20 years after it was formed.

Let us understand as we go forward that we should be erring on the side of giving the Secretary and the President more flexibility, more authority, more ability to move quickly rather than less.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I do not know how much you learn by having this job, but one thing you learn is patience.

Let me say it is probably a good thing I didn't get the floor earlier because I would have gotten up and accused my colleagues of insulting my intelligence. But now I realize that the authors of this amendment have not the foggiest idea of what this amendment is about or what it does.

Let me just start. There are a lot of points I want to make, but let me just begin with some English points. Before we get to legal points or security points, let's just talk about the English language.

Our colleague from Nebraska said: I wouldn't do the amendment if I thought it limited the President's power.

I would like to ask him to read the words of his amendment, on page 12, under the section that has to do with the President's labor-management powers. Remembering the President has the power in the name of national security to not put people out of the unions. That is a made-up term that the opponents of the President use over and over and over again. It is totally false. Nobody can take people out of unions. What it does is set aside work rules that inhibit the ability of the Department to do the job of providing national security. So the President has this exclusionary authority under the name of national security.

Our colleague from Nebraska, Senator NELSON, says his amendment does not reduce the President's power. Let me start with the English language, and let me read line 10 on page 12. This is a heading, and the heading is: "Limitation On Exclusionary Power."

If it is not limiting the President's power, what is it doing?

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRAMM. Let me make my point. I have listened here for 2 hours, trying to get the floor.

If this is not limiting his exclusionary power, this is false advertising. It does, in fact, go on and limit his power. But that is not the end of it.

Then, on page 14, you have a new section heading, and what do you think the first words of it are? "Limitation Related To Position Or Employees."

Our colleague from Utah said he is not a lawyer and this is a hard debate. I am not a lawyer either although I guess over the years you learn how to read legal documents. But I do know a little bit about the English language. When heading after heading after heading is about limitation of power, you are talking about limiting power.

Let me just start from the beginning because our colleague from Utah came over, listened to a lot of things that didn't make any sense to him, and he made a point. The point was, either this amendment does nothing or the authors of the amendment are not explaining what the amendment does.

I will—certainly to my satisfaction, hopefully to others'—convince people that this amendment does a great deal. This is not some cosmetic change, where members of organized labor are being deceived. It looks to me as if they wrote the amendment and they knew exactly what they were doing. Let me start with just some obvious points.

Besides the fact that the amendment is full of sections with the word "limitations" in the title, the amendment strikes the following language from the pending Gramm-Miller substitute. Let me read the language. You heard our colleague from Nebraska say we are not trying to take power away from the President. Let me read you the language they strike.

The language reads as follows:

> notwithstanding any other provision of this act . . .

I think people understand English. That means no matter what this act says.

The language they strike says:

> . . . nothing in this act shall be construed to take away the statutory authority of the President to act in a manner consistent with national security requirements and considerations as existed on the day of the terrorist attack on September 11, 2001.

In other words, no matter what else this amendment said, if it had not struck this language, the President would have the same national security power after this bill became law that he had on that horrible day, September 11. But guess what. This language is stricken by the amendment of the Senators. If they were not changing the President's powers, why did they strike this provision? They struck this provision because they may not know they are changing the President's powers but the people who wrote the amendment know they are changing the President's powers. And if they did not strike this provision, then everything they did in limiting his power would be nullified.

Let's just start with what they did. Let me remind my colleagues of something that the opponents of the President desperately want you to forget. The President, in terms of waiving these labor agreements that limit his ability to hire new people, move people, and to put the right person in the right place is also limited by these agreements that restrict the ability to change policy concerning carrying firearms, to change the physical makeup of inspection areas at customs, and to deploy a Border Patrol agent in an area where there is no laundry.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Will the Senator yield for a very brief question?

Mr. GRAMM. I will be happy to yield, but let me just get through my basic points, and I will be happy to yield. I want some coherence to it.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. It is a factual question. I think the Senator is confusing the situation.

Mr. GRAMM. Let me go ahead and yield if the Senator is going to talk.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. The Senator refers to the power of the President in reference to waiving elements of collective bargaining agreements. That is not affected by this section. I think it is the right to join unions or remain in unions the President can override here, not elements of the collective bargaining agreement.

Mr. GRAMM. Let me reclaim my time. It is the collective bargaining agreement and elements of it that the whole waiver is about. And I will get back to that.

Let me go back to my point. The President did not ask for any additional authority in the name of homeland security to waive collective bargaining agreements. He never asked for additional power because every President since Jimmy Carter has had that power and every President since Jimmy Carter has used that power.

You might ask yourself, if the President never asked for that power, why are we debating it? Why are we debating the President's waiver power if he didn't even ask for new power?

The reason we are debating it is the underlying Lieberman amendment and the amendment that is proposed by Senator NELSON take power away from this President that every President since Jimmy Carter has had.

We are in the remarkable circumstance that terrorists have attacked America. They killed thousands of our people. We are writing a bill to give the President the tools he needs to fight and win the war. The first provision in this bill is to take away from the President powers that every President since Jimmy Carter has had. It almost sounds unbelievable. But believe it.

A second point that is interestingly enough even more unbelievable: Under this bill and this amendment, the members of Government who are moved into the Homeland Security Department would find themselves in a position that the President, in the name of national security, has fewer powers in hiring the right person, putting them in the right place, and moving them than he does at the Labor Department or the Office of Personnel Management or any other part of the Government. Interestingly enough, this bill and their amendment limits the President's emergency powers—not for the Government as a whole but only for the Department of Homeland Security.

My third point is that we have heard this talk about these court rulings. It is a very good point. But, unfortunately, it makes the case against their amendment. These court rulings are on the basis of national security. The Constitution gives the President power as Commander in Chief.

When the President in the past has made a ruling based on national security—Senator BREAUX made the point, repeated by Senator NELSON—those decisions have not been judicially reviewable or the court has deemed them not to be judicially reviewable. That is a pretty substantial power. But it is a power rooted in the Constitution.

Guess what they do with this amendment. They change the President's power so the President has the power to move only in terms of their waiver—not on the basis of national security but on the basis of terrorism.

Terrorism is not mentioned in the Constitution. Terrorism has not been litigated. Maybe it will be litigated and the power will be upheld. But the Office of Personnel Management, the experts in this area, the person who will probably be the Secretary, and the President of the United States, believe that changing the President's waiver power and basing it on terrorism rather than national security is a diminution of his power.

If somebody didn't think so, why is it being done?

Let me go my fourth point. We have heard a lot of discussion but let me try to get down to the facts. Again, we are all entitled to our own opinions. We are not all entitled to our own facts.

There are 20,000 union members among the 170,000 people who are going to be moved into this Department. There are 20,000 other people who are covered by collective bargaining. But they are not union members.

Under this amendment, rather than the President having his broad exemptive power to put the right persons in the right place at the right time, the President would now have to enter into negotiations. So we set up the Department. We are trying to get moving. We are trying to prevent another attack. We are trying to prevent Americans from dying. This is pretty serious business, in other words.

What does the new Secretary have to do? He shows up, and 170,000 people are moved. He comes into his office. What is the first thing he has to do under this amendment? Double the number of people at the principal ports of entry? No. Change the disposition of agents to keep nuclear weapons from being brought into New York Harbor? No.

The first thing the President has to do is to enter into binding arbitration with a labor union that represents 20,000 of the 170,000 people who work for the Secretary.

Under this amendment, 20,000 union members and their unions would negotiate on behalf of 170,000 people, and 20,000 of them aren't even members of the union.

Talk about a power grab—this is an extraordinary power grab.

Before the Secretary can do anything, he has to enter into binding arbitration with these 17 unions that are representing 20,000 of the 170,000 people in this Department, and only 20,000 of them are union members. He has to enter into a binding arbitration with those unions that will bind the work rules for 150,000 people who are not even union members.

What happens if the unions won't agree to the change in rules that would change the disposition of people in the Department to try to prevent a terrorist attack? What happens? You have binding arbitration. So here we are trying to protect people's lives, and rather than sending agents where we need them to go, we are in binding arbitration.

Then a panel, which has the historic role of making decisions about whether a governmental department had the right to cancel a Christmas party or not, is now going to be making a decision governing the running of the Homeland Security Department.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question on that point?

Mr. GRAMM. Yes. I would be happy to.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I served in the Federal Government bureaucracy for about 15 years as a Federal attorney and as a U.S. attorney. Trust me, Federal employees, as Senator BENNETT said, have tremendous rights.

I was rather shocked, in connection with some of the things Senator GRAMM has been saying, to read some recent developments.

After September 11, is the Senator aware that the Customs Service wanted to require its inspectors—management—at 301 ports of entry to wear radiation detection pagers to help detect attempts to import nuclear and radiological materials across our borders, and that the National Treasury Employees Union—members of which are some of my good friends—objected saying that wearing the pagers should be voluntary and fought to invoke collective bargaining on the issue, which would have taken at least a year to resolve?

Mr. GRAMM. First of all, I have to say to my colleagues that I am not aware of that case. But I am aware of the case at the Boston airport where Customs wanted to change the makeup of the inspection room to make it more efficient, and the National Treasury Employees Union appealed it to the FLRA, and they sided against Customs and the changes were not made.

I am also aware that when there was an effort by INS to put more agents at the airport at Honolulu because of the large number of flights coming in and more inspectors were needed. In this case, the labor union representing the INS employees in Honolulu filed a case with FLRA saying it violated their contract to hire more agents. Guess what. The FLRA ruled in their favor.

Maybe someday you could get it straightened out. But what happens if by not getting it straightened out in time somebody's mama or somebody's child ends up being killed?

Mr. SESSIONS. Is the Senator aware that after September 11 the Customs Service signed a cooperative agreement with several foreign ports because we are concerned about ports being used to ship weapons of mass destruction here, and the best way to do it is to identify that as a foreign port before it gets here—that they signed a cooperative agreement allowing our inspectors to preinspect cargo abroad before it sailed here.

The Customs Service wanted to send its best agents to these ports because these are sensitive foreign assignments, and the National Treasury Employees Union objected, saying that internal union rules should determine who should be sent on these assignments, not the Customs Service managers.

Mr. GRAMM. I am aware of the case where an effort was made, in terms of foreign deployment, to pick the most able people because you have a limited number of people. That decision was overridden by the FLRA. They said you had to send the most "senior" people in terms of seniority.

I would say these are exactly the kinds of problems the President is trying to deal with. The President is not trying to deny people the ability to pay union dues, if they choose. The President is not trying to discriminate against people based on race, color, creed, national origin. The President is trying to put the best person in the best place at the right time. The Senator has just outlined several examples of where we have not been able to get the job done in the past, and even where we have gotten the job done, that it has often been 14 months later.

The point is, these terrorists—and we know there are thousands of them—are not taking a sabbatical while we are having this debate.

Mr. SESSIONS. If the Senator will yield, in reference to Senator BENNETT's comments, merging these agencies is a difficult task. They come with different backgrounds and legal prerogatives and cultures that they have had. As a U.S. attorney, I represented every Federal agency in my district, which would include the Corps of Engineers, the Coast Guard, Treasury, Customs, the INS, the DEA, the FBI—every agency that was there. They all have a little bit different rules.

If we are going to form a new agency, we ought not diminish the President's power because it is going to be difficult enough as it is to bring this thing together in a coherent whole.

I believe the Senator is making a good point. I have listened to the debate that has gone on for some time. It seems to me quite clear the amendments that have been offered—the objections that have been made to your bipartisan bill, the Gramm-Miller bipartisan bill—have been designed to diminish the Executive's ability to coordinate quickly that new critical agency for our defense.

I thank the Senator for his leadership on it. I think it is important. The President should not allow his office and the office of future Presidents to have an even more difficult time than we already have with personnel.

For example, I have had many agency heads come to me and ask me about criminal activity by Federal employees. And I would say: Why don't you just fire them? They would say: You don't know how hard it is. We have a criminal case. Please prosecute this case; otherwise, we will be years removing this person.

It is amazing sometimes for the public to learn how difficult it is to manage in a Federal agency. It is far more difficult than private agencies. In the end, it hurts good employees of which there are so many of them out there. It keeps them from being promoted, and it undermines the ability of the agency to be effective.

I thank the Senator for his courageous leadership.

(Mrs. CLINTON assumed the chair.)

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, let me finish up my remarks because I have spoken a long time.

Although I could give a lot of concrete examples, let me just give a couple of them: Under current law, the President has the ability, by declaring a national emergency, to change the work rules for the Border Patrol. And every President since President Carter has had that power. This amendment would take away these emergency powers from the President because under a current agreement which the Border Patrol operates, there cannot be any prolonged deployment of Border Patrol agents in areas that do not have a series of amenities, including drycleaners.

Under existing law, the President would have the ability to declare a national emergency and move Border Patrol agents to areas where there was a critical threat. He would not have that power under this amendment. Let me explain why.

In order for the President to be able to use his emergency powers, the President would have to find, after the Department is created, that the position and duties of the person had been materially changed. By the way, you guessed it, the first word of the heading on page 14 of this amendment is "Limitation"—"imitation Relating To Positions Or Employees". Who are we limiting here? The President. Every one of these headings on limitation represents a limitation of the President's power.

Let me give you an example. A Border Patrol agent is a Border Patrol agent, and after the creation of this Department, they will still be a Border Patrol agent.

I asked that the amendment be changed to say that either the function had changed or the threat had changed. That proposal has not been accepted.

What it would mean here is that if the President tried to use his powers to station a Border Patrol agent, on a prolonged basis, on one of the many areas along the border that did not have restaurants, churches, or drycleaners, there could not be a waiver to station them in that area. Now, I represent more of the border than any other Senator besides my colleague from Texas and I know that there are many such areas.

The problem is that while they are doing the same thing, the threat is different. Before it was a bale of marijuana or a box of cocaine or an illegal alien we were talking about. Today we are talking about an anthrax capsule or a chemical weapons vial or a biological agent thermos or a nuclear device. But yet, under this amendment, the President would not have the power to make that necessary change.

Our colleagues say a Border Patrol agent is still a Border Patrol agent and nothing has changed.

Madam President, everything has changed. After 9/11, the world has changed, but not the thinking of the President's opponents. It has not changed.

So let me sum up by simply pointing out why this amendment is unacceptable to the President, why he has said he would veto a bill that contained this amendment, and why we can't fight and win the war on terrorism with this amendment as part of the law.

Now, there is no guarantee that we are going to be successful in stopping terrorism with a good plan, but General Eisenhower once said: A good plan does not guarantee success, but a bad plan does guarantee failure.

This is what this amendment does. It takes away power that every President since President Carter has had and used. It sets a higher standard for using national security powers in the one agency of Government that is designated to protect the homeland security than it does any other Department of Government. So OPM would still have the same emergency powers that are denied to the President for homeland security, but he would not have them here. The whole standard by which the President could intervene is changed from national security to terrorism.

We take a system where we in essence say to the President: OK, you want these 170,000 people brought together in one agency. We want you to give up national security power. If you will give it up, we will put together the Department. In other words, we will put it together if we can take away your power to actually run it.

What this amendment would do is allow unions that have only 20,000 members out of the 170,000 people that will be brought into the agency, and it makes them the bargaining agent for all 170,000. We are going to hire somebody to fight terrorism. He is going to think he is coming in to fight terrorism, and he is immediately going to be in binding arbitration. And then, if the unions won't agree to his plan, it goes to a labor board that has the historic function of deciding whether a department can cancel Christmas parties or the color of uniforms or things of that nature. We set up an unworkable system.

Finally, powers the President says he must have, powers related to labor-management relations and appeals, are taken away. So the amendment before us is no effort at compromise. I don't doubt the goodwill of the people who have offered it. But the plain truth is, it is further away from where the President can go than the last time we were discussing this issue.

There has been only one compromise, and that compromise is the Gramm-Miller substitute which made 25 changes in the President's bill and preserved for Congress the power of the purse. It also did restrict the President's emergency powers but in ways that made sense. We said the President can't be arbitrary and capricious. We said the President cannot discriminate on the basis of race, color, creed, national origin, and the list goes on. But the bottom line is that we realized we were fighting a war against vicious killers and the President needed the power to get the job done.

We need to give the President that power. Our colleagues talk about the President using that power. The way it is now restricted, the only thing the President can use the power for is to fight terrorism, to put the right person in the right place at the right time.

My point is, this amendment is not significantly different from the underlying bill in that it takes away powers the President already has, and it does not give him the flexibility he needs. The President has said he would veto it.

In the end, if we want to get a bill, the logical thing we should do is try to reach a compromise. I do not see this as a compromise. I don't see anything in it that is a compromise. It takes power away from the President he has today. I believe it is totally unacceptable.

I have given the authors of the amendment, in working with the White House, the changes they would have to make for the President to be able to accept it. I hope they will consider them. But the problem is, in order to give the President the power he needs to fight and win the war on terrorism, you have to change business as usual in Washington.

If there has ever been an amendment that was committed to the status quo of business as usual, don't change anything, this is it. The amendment and the underlying bill are really based on the premise that government is to serve the people who work for the government, not to serve the people of this country, and the rights of these workers, as we have defined them in a bill that is now over 50 years old in its fundamental components. This is the equivalent of operating a horse and buggy on an interstate highway. When we are talking about protecting the lives of our people and homeland security, this amendment and the underlying bill still hew too much to the idea business as usual is more important than an effective program to help the President fight and win a war on terrorism.

We are apparently going to have a cloture vote tomorrow. That cloture vote is going to fail. It is a gimmick and a game being played to try to deny the President the right to have an up-or-down vote on his proposal. Our colleagues who oppose the President have every right under the rules of the Senate to do what they are doing. I am not complaining about it. I am just trying to be sure people understand. If they can invoke cloture, they could put the President's program into a straitjacket where he does not get a straight up-or-down vote, where the first vote will be on this amendment which basically cuts the heart out of the President's program so people who oppose the President never have to vote up or down on the President's program.

Our colleagues who oppose the President have the right to do this. I am not complaining about it. It is completely within the rules of the Senate. But I don't believe under the circumstances it is defensible.

Basically, those of us who support the President are going to resist. We are going to deny cloture, and we are going to continue until the President gets an up-or-down vote.

I don't think this is going to confuse anybody. I know sometime later today and probably in the morning, someone is going to stand up and say: Well, don't the people who support the President want to bring the debate to an end and give the President a vote?

I don't believe people are going to be deceived. It is easy to give the President a vote. All you have to do is to set a time when the President's proposal can be voted on. That is all you have to do.

Under these circumstances, we are not going to let business-as-usual practices in the Senate prevail. We are not going to let the President be denied an up-or-down vote on his proposal.

It may be those who oppose the President will be successful. It may be they can defeat the President. It may be they can pass a bill the President has sworn to veto. It may be they can prevent the President from having a Department of Homeland Security in this Congress. They may do that. But what they cannot do is deny the President a vote.

There was earlier a unanimous consent request propounded concerning allowing a vote on the pending amendment. So no one is confused, I would like to ask unanimous consent that at 11 a.m. on Tuesday, there be an up-or-down vote, yes or no, on the President's program, which is the Gramm-Miller substitute.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from Texas retains the floor. Has he given up the floor?

Mr. GRAMM. I have spoken beyond my limit of knowledge. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, while the Senator from Texas is on the floor, I want to renew a unanimous consent proposal I made earlier when he was off the floor which would give him the up-or-down vote he wants on the President's proposal. It is highly unusual. He is asking to deprive the Senate of the opportunity to amend. No one is infallible, but to give him the offer.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately upon the disposition of Senator NELSON's amendment, Senator GRAMM be recognized to offer a further second-degree amendment, which is the text of the President's proposal as contained in amendment No. 4738, and that the Senate then vote immediately on his amendment.

That should give the Senator from Texas what he wants—an up-or-down vote on the President's proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. Reserving the right to object, Madam President, getting to amend the President's proposal before he gets a chance to have a vote is not giving the President an opportunity for an up-or-down vote. I have to object, though I will say we are going to have a vote on the President's proposal. Why not set it for 11 o'clock on Tuesday? Let's have the vote. If you can defeat the President, then you will make many special interests in Washington happy. If you cannot, we will have a bill. But at least we will settle the issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. So my question back to the Senator from Texas is why deprive the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Louisiana the opportunity to have a vote on their amendment?

Mr. GRAMM. If the Senator will yield, I will respond. Madam President, it is obvious to a blind man that there have to be some people on the side of the aisle of the Senator from Connecticut who do not want to vote against the President's homeland security bill, and if you can amend it first with an amendment confusing people as to what you are really doing, then they are off the hook. You all are not doing this because it is fun. Obviously, you have your plan in mind. I have mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Texas objecting?

Mr. GRAMM. I object.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, does the Senator from Texas understand that under the unanimous consent request I have proposed the vote would be on the President's proposal, the Gramm-Miller substitute, unamended, second degree?

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I have a lot of problems, but one of them is not not understanding. I understand perfectly that if people could be convinced—there is no sense getting into the details. I think we have overdone it. The President wants an up-or-down vote on his bill, and we are going to hold out for that vote. If you can defeat the President, you have defeated the President. But we want an up-or-down vote, and the way we have things structured in a parliamentary sense, you would have to get cloture on their amendment to vote on it, and you are not going to be able to get it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I regret the objection of the Senator from Texas, and I fear what it reflects is an understanding that, primarily because of the courage of the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. CHAFEE, who has created a common ground compromise preserving the President's national security powers and giving some, frankly, minimal due process to homeland security workers, that our friends on the other side do not have the votes anymore because they do not have the votes. They are going to filibuster effectively the adoption of a homeland security bill as amended by the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment.

The Senator from Texas himself has said that 95 percent of his proposal is the same as our underlying committee proposal. The biggest difference between us is with regard to the rights of the homeland security workers and the right of the President to maintain national security powers. This compromise does it. I am disappointed——

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield so I can agree with him?

Mr. LIEBERMAN.——and I fear the White House is now blocking the early adoption by the Senate of legislation that would create a Department of Homeland Security.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I will, for a question.

Mr. GRAMM. It is true our bills are 95 percent the same. It is like you are giving the President this nice, new, shiny truck, only yours does not have a steering wheel. That is the fundamental difference. There is only 5 percent. It is like the plane that does not have the bolt that holds the tail on. That is the fundamental difference.

Look, we are not holding it up. We are ready to vote. Set the vote for Tuesday. Let's have an up-or-down vote and see where we are.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, in responding to the Senator, the vehicle that we would give the President has a great steering wheel. About the only thing that is probably changed is the color of the plastic on the rear lights. The differences, as elucidated in previous debate, are so minimal as to certainly be not worth blocking the creation of a Department of Homeland Security which is urgently needed because the terrorists are still out there.

I see my friend from Nebraska on the floor. He is a lead sponsor of the amendment. He has been waiting a while to speak. I will yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Madam President, the Senator from Texas has made a number of points that I think I will try to respond to as briefly as I possibly can but at the same time respond to the suggestions.

First of all, I am new to this Washington-style posturing and spin doctoring, but I think I am getting the hang of it—maybe slowly, but I am beginning to get the hang of it.

I agree that we are not entitled to our own set of facts. We may have interpretations, we may even have our own thoughts about a set of facts, but we are not entitled to characterize those facts differently just because we choose.

When one looks at a letter or a statement, the statement and/or the letter will speak for itself. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from Governor Ridge, dated September 5, 2002, to Senator LIEBERMAN in which he says:

> . . . the President seeks for this new Department the same management prerogatives that Congress has provided other departments. . . .

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 5, 2002.

Senator JOSEPH I. LIEBERMAN,
Chairman, Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LIEBERMAN: During the past several months you and I have engaged in both public advocacy and private efforts to create a Department of Homeland Security. I have read your article in Tuesday's Washington Post and would like to respond to some of the observations and conclusions. You and I agree that the events of September 11, 2001 tragically underscore the critical need to reorganize a significant portion of the Executive Branch of government and to create a Department whose primary responsibility is securing the homeland. I certainly agree with your observation that never before has there been government "disorganization so consequential and the case for change so compelling."

It is critical to our mutual effort however, to do more than simply realign the many departments and agencies included in the Senate measure under one new Cabinet-level department. This new department must be equipped with the flexibility and agility to respond effectively to threats against this country and to move people and resources in response to those threats. The President has made it clear that the bill as presently written fails to achieve these critical objectives in several ways.

In your article you refer to the President's concerns with your bill as "detours," "secondary" issues, and "unnecessary roadblocks." I am at a loss to understand why the President's insistence that, as Commander-in-Chief, he be the final arbiter of this country's national security interests is a "detour" in this debate. Similarly, I am puzzled as to why his resolve that his new Secretary be given the flexibility to move people and resources in response to terrorist threats is being characterized as a "secondary" issue. In fact these very issues are critical to the success of this new Department.

The Administration believes that the new Secretary must have the freedom to put the right people in the right job, at the right time, and to hold them accountable. He or she must have the freedom to manage and the freedom to reorganize. One of the inescapable truths of this new war on terrorism is that we know that we cannot conduct "business as usual." I was surprised at your assertion that "the president's pleas for additional 'flexibility' would give his administration unprecedented power to undercut the civil service system, rewrite laws by fiat and spend taxpayers' money without congressional checks and balances." This is simply inaccurate. Senator, the President seeks for this new Department the same management prerogatives that Congress has provided other departments and agencies throughout the Executive Branch. For example: budget transfer authority ranging from one to seven percent is granted in various forms to several departments, including the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Energy; reorganization authority was granted with the establishment of the Department of Energy and Education and government-wide reorganization authority was previously enjoyed by every President until 1984; and, personnel flexibility is currently enjoyed by the Federal Aviation Administration, the Internal Revenue Service, and the Transportation Security Administration.

Furthermore, the new Department of Homeland Security, as well as its new Secretary, will be fully accountable to Congress and subject to especially intensive reporting requirements and Congressional oversight.

Your conclusion that "the President and the Secretary of Homeland Security would, in fact, have more flexibility to run an efficient, effective and performance-driven department than the law now provides" is contrary to the literal language of the bill itself. As written the Senate bill places severe restrictions on the Secretary's ability to manage the Department and fails to provide the authority that the Secretary needs to effectively secure the homeland. Through a variety of separate provisions, the Senate legislation clearly prohibits the new Secretary from reorganizing, reallocating or delegating most of the agency functions in the new Department. It would preclude, for example, even the most basic consolidation of Federal inspectors at our border entry.

Moreover, the idea that "With the powers in existing law and new ones added in our bill, the administration would be able to promptly hire new talent, swiftly move employees around, discipline and fire poor performers" is seriously misleading. While the Senate bill introduces very narrow changes to the personnel system, such modest reforms and corrections are woefully inadequate to meet the President's basic goal of creating a workforce at the Department of Homeland Security with the flexibility, mobility, and agility needed to protect our nation from multiple and constantly changing threats. In fact, the Senate bill leaves in place a 50-year-old, rigid, statutorily mandated, and unalterable personnel system. This kind of organizational rigidity in the face of an agile and aggressive enemy is unacceptable to the Administration.

Your op-ed also mistakenly claims that the Senate bill would allow the President to "remove employees from collective bargaining units when national security is at stake." In fact, the Committee proposal includes language on Federal Labor Relations which would significantly restrict the President's existing, government-wide authority to prohibit collective bargaining for reasons of national security. The bill would in effect deny the President this authority over the Department of Homeland Security—an illogical result given that the President will continue to have the authority for every other department and agency of the Federal government. As every President since Jimmy Carter has shown, there are times where the needs of national security must take precedence over collective bargaining. Each of these Presidents—both Democrats and Republicans—has used this authority precisely and with restraint. It is unfathomable—and again simply unacceptable—that the Senate would choose a time of war to weaken the President's authority to protect national security.

While we continue to have considerable substantive disagreements with the measure presently before the Senate, as you begin the debate to establish the Department of Homeland Security, we must keep in mind the common goal of an accountable, effective agency with the resources and authorities necessary to protect the American people. At the end of the day, we must resolve out differences to reflect our mutual obligation to protect our special interest—America.

With Respect,

GOVERNOR TOM RIDGE,
Homeland Security Advisor.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Madam President, he points out the Internal Revenue Service, which is exactly what we have included in this amendment, hardly opposing the President unless, Heaven forbid, Director Ridge opposes the President. He suggested it.

Then, Madam President, I do not need to enter—it is already a matter of record—the remarks of the good Senator from Texas in which he suggested that the current situation might be remedied by including the IRS formula that was included in the reorganization of the IRS.

I would not suggest for a minute that he opposes the President.

We have had some explanations or recharacterizations of what these documents mean. The recharacterization does not change the language, does not change the meaning, but now what seems to have changed is the goalposts have been moved, the rules have been changed, and now in good faith we proposed what we thought the White House and others, who were suggesting we ought to do it differently, we thought, what they were asking for.

As with mischaracterizations, I think anybody today watching us would feel as if they have been watching a little bit of "Alice in Wonderland." This is the only place I can imagine where if you have an amendment, you are an opponent of the President. I am not an opponent of the President. I do not oppose the President. I am here trying to find a way to close the gap.

I would like to find the steering wheel for the car of the good Senator from Texas so that it is 100 percent complete, not 95 percent complete, as the example he gave before.

I am intrigued by mischaracterization, but I am not persuaded by it, and nor will my colleagues be persuaded by it as well.

The Senator from Texas referred to page 12 of our amendment and read from it the language he said was now taking away authority of the President. The title is: "Limitation on Exclusionary Authority." He says we are excluding the President's authority. The truth is, this is just a reference to existing law, and it has to have some sort of a heading.

Let's move away from the heading and see what this particular provision does. It says no agency that is transferred to the Department will be excluded from the coverage of chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code 7103(b)(1).

What does that have reference to? The President's authority. It says the agency will not be exempt from the President's authority.

What is that President's authority this has reference to? It says that the President may issue an order excluding any agency or subdivision thereof from coverage under this chapter if the President determines the agency or subdivision has as their primary function intelligence, counterintelligence, investigative or national security work, and the provisions of this chapter cannot be applied to that agency or subdivision in a manner consistent with national security requirements and considerations.

It also says that the President may issue an order suspending any provision of the chapter or activity if somebody is located outside of the United States and the District of Columbia. The truth is, this reference incorporates the President's current authority. It does not exclude it. It does not change it. It does not limit it.

What I agree with, which the Senator does point out, is it does then set some additional tests the President ought to apply in making a determination. That is not limiting authority. That is saying these are the tests that ought to be considered and have to be considered before the order is issued. The President has the same authority as before, but now it has a reference to dealing with there being a material change in the responsibility.

The good Senator has also made a suggestion maybe we ought to look at wording that says "or the threats have changed." When the good Senator suggests a change to the existing law, he is not opposing the President, but when we make a suggestion, we are opposing. I think we have to use the same terminology and say we are both trying to improve the existing situation.

If the Senator from Texas makes a suggestion we add language, I am not going to suggest he is opposing the President. I am not even going to suggest he is opposing me. He is trying to make something he disagrees with better, but it does not make us opponents.

What we have heard today is a lot of discussion with a lot of hyperbole and changing the rules as we go along. Of course, I think anybody watching from the outside looking in will not be misled by this kind of spin-doctoring or this kind of labeling.

My hope is we can set aside partisan discussions and talk about the essence of what it is we are about. What we are about is finding a way to close the gap.

I have said to the Senator from Texas, and I say it again, if there is language—and we are looking at his suggestion there—that will make this clearer and stronger, we are very much in favor of considering that. But I do not think it will make either of us opponents of the President if we agree on that language, which is different from the current Gramm-Miller bill that is referred to as the President's bill.

So I think we must, in fact, put aside who is opposing and let us start talking about how we can amend, improve and close the gap so the good Senator's car will have its steering wheel and he can drive forward.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NICKLES. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. I had a brief conversation privately with the Senator from Oklahoma, and while the Senator from Texas is in the Chamber, I say we have a vote scheduled for 3:45 this afternoon. It would seem to me the most logical and sensible thing to do, since we have been told by several people on the other side of the aisle we are not going to get cloture tomorrow when we vote an hour after we come in, instead of having the vote at 3:45 on the cloture that is now set we should have it on the amendment the Senator from Texas said we will not get cloture on, which makes more sense.

If we are not going to get it tomorrow, it would seem it would be in everyone's best interest, with all the things going on in Washington tomorrow, we have the vote today and allow people who are concerned about some of the things that might take place tomorrow in the District to be able to go to their home in the suburbs or in the District or back to the States.

If the Senator is right that we will not get cloture—and if, in fact, we did get cloture, it would allow a lot of people not to be here because the 30 hours runs and, of course, we have one hour at a pop. I am not going to formally ask at this time, but I ask the distinguished Republican assistant leader to see what he could do about working that out. It seems to me it would be in the best interest of the Senate and it would be in the best interest of those we are trying to work to some finality in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I will be happy to work with him on trying to schedule things that are convenient for all colleagues.

I rise today to make a few comments I really wish I did not have to make. Yesterday, the majority leader of the Senate made a very strong, impassioned speech. I missed most of it, but I caught a lot of it last night on "Nightline." I caught a transcript of it and then I saw it again. I will read part of it. Senator DASCHLE said: I can't believe any President or administration would politicize the war. But then I read in the paper this morning, now even the President, the President is quoted in the Washington Post this morning as saying that the Democratic—the Democratic-controlled Senate is not interested in the security of the American people.

Senator DASCHLE was reading from The Washington Post. Unfortunately, though, he did not quote The Washington Post correctly and he certainly did not quote the President of the United States correctly.

It is a very strong accusation saying the President of the United States would politicize the war and he quotes the President of the United States, but he quoted the President of the United States inaccurately.

One, we should keep politics off the floor of the Senate, particularly when we are talking about issues of very significant importance such as war, war resolutions, or a resolution dealing with Iraq, which has been a troublesome spot for the United States. We have had several debates and discussions on Iraq. We should not be playing partisan politics. I do not think we should be attacking the President of the United States on a quote in the Washington Post, which may or may not be accurate. The way it was stated by Senator DASCHLE was inaccurate, and I will read the President's quote from the Washington Post which was alluded to, and then I will again read Senator DASCHLE's quote and we will see directly they are not the same.

What the President said when he was in New Jersey on September 24 was:

> So I asked the Congress to give me the flexibility necessary to be able to deal with the true threats of the 21st century by being able to move the right people to the right place at the right time, so we can better assure America we're doing everything possible. The House responded, but the Senate is more interested in special interests in Washington and not interested in the security of the American people. I will not accept a Department of Homeland Security that does not allow this President, and future Presidents, to better keep the American people secure.

The President goes on to say:

> And people are working hard in Washington to get it right in Washington, both Republicans and Democrats. See, this isn't a partisan issue. This is an American issue. This is an issue which is vital to our future. It'll help us determine how secure we'll be. Senator GRAMM, a Republican, Senator MILLER, a Democrat, are working hard to bring people together. And the Senate must listen to them.

That is what the President said, and to take out of that a statement that says the Democratic-controlled Senate is not interested in the security of the American people, is not what the President said. If someone is making a statement that receives a lot of attention, there must have been notification to the press this is going to be a very important statement, and to make a statement misquoting the President of the United States on an issue like this and accuse him of politicizing the war, when the issue was homeland security, I think is a real injustice to the President of the United States and to the quality and flavor of debate we should be having in the Senate.

We should not be politicizing a debate dealing with war and talking about international repercussions. And there are repercussions when we make speeches, particularly when the Democrat leader makes a speech. I cannot help but think the headlines that came out as a result of his speech brought about some comfort for those who really oppose the United States policies or those who are opposed to formulating an international coalition the administration is presently trying to put together in the United Nations, in Europe, and in the Middle East.

This President, like his father, was trying to build an international coalition. I can't help but think when they read that the Democrat leader of the Senate is accusing the President of politicizing the war and misquoting the President, that gives them a lot of ammo. That gives them a lot of justification for Saddam Hussein or others to say: See, I told you they are just politicizing this war. They want to do this for political purposes, when that was not what the President said.

Again, when I first heard of this I thought, well, let me find out what the President said. I am a friend of the President's. I am willing to defend him, but I wanted to see what he had to say. I know the President very well and I said, I can't believe he would say Senate Democrats are not concerned about national security because that is not factual.

But then when I read these comments, not only did he not say it, he didn't say anything close to it. Then in the next sentence down he said:

I wish Senator DASCHLE would have read that. I wish he would have read that he compliments both Senator GRAMM, a Republican, and Senator MILLER, a Democrat, and he never once said what was said on the floor yesterday. He never once said Senate Democrats are not interested in national security. He didn't say it. But that was the attack that was made yesterday.

I just think of the international repercussions, and I am thinking of this enormous challenge to build an international coalition, one that President Bush 1 was able to do in 1990 and 1991, an enormous coalition, but it was not easy to build. It is a coalition, I might mention, that was put together, and very successfully, in 1991, that dissipated over the next 8 years and is now gone. So President Bush, this President Bush at the present time, is trying to rebuild the coalition. Then to be attacked by the majority leader, misquoting him, I think is very inappropriate.

I also wish to make a comment about Vice President Gore.

Before I do that, I want to read another. The President made two speeches. I scanned both. I didn't want to misstate what the President said. I like to be factually accurate. If I ever misquote anybody, it will be a mistake.

So I read the President's speech that he made at another event. This goes to the same subject. I believe this was made on September 25th.

> Right now in the Senate the Senate feels like they want to micromanage the process, not all Senators but some Senators. They feel they have to have a pile of books this thick that will hamstring future administrations how to protect our homeland. I am not going to stand for it.
>
> I appreciate John's vote on a good homeland security bill. And the Senate must hear this, because the American people understand it. They should not respond to special interests—they ought to respond to this interest: protecting the American people from a future attack.

Again, he didn't say anything about the Democrat Senate not supporting national security.

But there was a real political statement made the other day. That was by former Vice President Al Gore. Again, I would like to think that Presidents and former Presidents and former Vice Presidents wouldn't undercut the existing President and Vice President on the floor—while they are trying to build coalitions. That is exactly what the former Vice President did. Former Vice President Gore, in speaking to, a group of Democrats or a group of people in San Francisco, had a lot of outlandish things to say.

I read—well, he is trying to garner support from the political left or right, and I guess he has that right to do so. But I would think he would have the dignity to try to maintain the dignity of the Office of Vice President and not undermine an existing administration that has a difficult challenge to try to rebuild a coalition. This is one of the things Vice President Gore said on September 23:

> To begin with, to put things first, I believe we ought to be focusing on efforts first and foremost against those who attacked us on September 11 and who have thus far gotten away with it.

For Vice President Gore to say that is grossly irresponsible, and is very inconsistent, I might say, with some of the things he had to say in the past.

It is very troubling to me, when I look at the previous administration and what they did or didn't do in response to previous acts of terrorism, for him to be blaming this administration for not being aggressive enough in fighting the war on terrorism, and I see terrorist attacks that happened during Vice President Gore's administration, President Clinton's administration, and I look at the response they had against terrorism and I say, Where is it?

For him to be critical of this President when this President has made an aggressive effort to combat terrorism and basically eliminating it—going into Afghanistan, helped in liberating the Afghan people, dispersing al-Qaida, going after and rounding up and killing hundreds of terrorists—for the Vice President to be critical of this administration is mind-boggling.

I remember when the U.S. Embassies were bombed in Kenya and Tanzania on August 7, 1998; 224 people were killed, including 12 Americans, almost all of those were employees of the United States. Five thousand people were wounded.

And what did we do? Well, we lobbed a few cruise missiles hoping maybe we would get Bin Laden and then we didn't do anything else. That was in August of 1998. Yet we didn't do anything, after that for the next couple of years; the previous administration did nothing.

And then the U.S.S. Cole was attacked on October 12, the year 2000; 17 U.S. sailors were killed; 39 were wounded. The entire ship could have sunk.

What did we do? Nothing.

President Clinton said:

> If, as it now appears this was an act of terrorism, it was a despicable and cowardly act. We will find out who was responsible and hold them accountable. If their intention was to deter us from our mission in promoting peace and security in the Middle East, they will fail utterly.

President Clinton, as a result of the bombings of the U.S. Embassies, on August 7 of 1998 said:

> These acts of terrorist violence are abhorrent. They are inhuman. We will use all the means at our disposal to bring those responsible to justice no matter what or how long it takes.

That was President Clinton's remarks, and I would assume Vice President Gore would agree with those remarks, but we didn't do anything. And we didn't follow up. We did lob a few cruise missiles, but we didn't stay after Bin Laden. We could have. We could have sent some special forces. We could have sent some airplanes over there. We could have been very aggressive in trying to hunt down the people who killed hundreds of people in those two attacks, but we didn't do it. We flat didn't do it. As a result, some of the people who planned those two activities also planned and carried out the airplane bombings in the World Trade Center and the Pentagon and in the fields of Pennsylvania—probably headed towards the Capitol—because we didn't follow up. We didn't pursue them as aggressively as we should have in 1998, 1999, 2000.

Then to have the former Vice President be critical of this administration, that has moved aggressively to combat terrorism and go after the terrorism—I am very troubled by that. Very troubled by it, indeed. We are all entitled to our opinions. We are all entitled to state what we think should be done. But I happen to be one who believes that when you are in a war, you should be working together and not try to undermine the President of the United States.

I am afraid, as a result of both the comments that were made by the majority leader and the comments that were made by the former Vice President, I think it does undermine our united efforts to combat terrorism and to go after those people who are directly responsible.

Finally, I want to make a couple of other comments. In dealing with the bill we have before us, Senator GRAMM has mentioned that he has an amendment, supported by the President, endorsed by Senator MILLER. I compliment them for their work on this issue. Unfortunately, the amendment tree is filled. I don't want to get too bogged down in the parliamentary jargon, but I am looking at this tree. I want to read a quote Senator DASCHLE once said in June. He said:

> I announced at the very beginning of my tenure as majority leader I will never fill the tree to preclude amendments. I am going to hold to that promise.

That was made on June 10. I happen to be one who doesn't like filling the tree, either. But this tree is filled and why is it filled? It is to deny people a vote, the Senator from Texas and Georgia having a right to a vote on their amendments next. They want to obscure it so we vote on other amendments first.

Then the issue of cloture—we are going to have a vote tonight or we are going to have a vote tomorrow. Well, the purpose of cloture is to deny them the vote and it is to falsely allude to—maybe people on this side of the aisle are filling the tree, which is false. We are not filibustering the Interior bill.

I said that several times, and I happen to consider myself a person of my word. I will let you know if I am filibustering a bill. The Senator from Nevada knows me pretty well. I will let him know if I am filibustering a bill. He will know it. No one is filibustering this bill. Well, "We are going to file cloture." They know they have to get 60 votes for cloture. They won't have it today and they won't have it tomorrow.

The Senators from Texas and Georgia introduced the President's package. It has been modified to accommodate a lot of Senators and to make sure we don't have anything that would be intrusive against public employees. It has a lot of protections in it. It is a well-thought-out amendment and is very similar to many of the adoptions made in the House of Representatives. They are entitled to their vote. Will cloture deny them that opportunity? This amendment would not be germane postcloture. It would fall.

I have said repeatedly that they are entitled to their vote, and they are going to get their vote.

I urge my colleagues, we could do a lot better in legislating if we didn't fill trees, if we didn't file cloture every other day, and if we worked together to come up with a reasonable alternative to allow people to vote on this alternative, to vote on the Gramm-Miller alternative, to vote on other alternatives and be finished with the bill.

The same thing with the Interior bill—if we had a vote on the various proposals dealing with fire. Let us vote. That is what we are paid to do. Let us vote. I urge my colleagues, let us not use the floor of the Senate to be accusing this President of politicizing the war; the Vice President as well. I think that undermines the Senate and is not worthy of debate in the Senate.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NICKLES. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. I just want to say this: I agree with what the Senator said in respect to the appropriations bills. We had this talk—those of us who agreed on appropriations bills. He is ready to vote on them. So am I.

I hope the leadership will attempt to get some of the other appropriations bills up. Let us see who is holding up appropriations bills. We have to do the Health and Human Services bill. We have that. We have all of these bills backed up, and not a single one of the 13 appropriations bills has been sent to the Senate.

I thank the Senator for making that point. He is ready. Let us vote on those bills.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I do know that when we have appropriations we have disputes on amendments. The way to dispose of those amendments is not to file cloture because it won't work. The way to dispose of those amendments is to, if you do not like it, move to table it, or accept it. Maybe you accept it, or drop it. But you deal with the amendment.

I am embarrassed that we have been on two bills for 4 weeks and we have made so little progress. We have spent the entire month of September, and the end of the fiscal year is next month, and we haven't passed one appropriations bill this month—not one. We have only had three or four votes on each bill—both the Interior bill and the homeland security bill. That is pretty pathetic progress.

As a result, we have only passed three appropriations bills out of the Senate. It is maybe one of the worst records we have had in a long time. That is not acceptable.

I can't help but think if the majority or minority would get together and say let us bring up these bills, move them quickly; let us table nongermane amendments; let us get our work done; that it would help make the process work a lot better.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I, as every Senator who serves here, came to the Senate for the purpose of being a public servant and to try to do things that help our respective States and the country. That is why we are here. People at home, in many instances, are somewhat jaundiced of the process. They think things we do here are political in nature and in the negative sense, and that we are really not here for the good of the country. I don't want to believe that. But there were times when even I became suspect about what is going on here.

TOM DASCHLE, the majority leader of the Senate, came to the floor twice yesterday. He was concerned because blazed across the country in the newspapers is something that has not been said once, but during the last month the President of the United States has said on six different occasions—four times at fundraisers—that the Senate—specifically on occasion Senate Democrats—weren't concerned about national security.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REID. I yield for a question.

Mr. NICKLES. I just want to correct the record and say I have scrutinized the President's speech. And I have never seen where this quote—I just gave it to the clerk—this quote comes from Monday. I looked at the President's speech. I have the President's speech. I will enter it into the RECORD. But it did not say the Democratic-controlled Senate is not interested in the security of the people.

Again, we have to be factually accurate. If we are going to quote the President of the United States and accuse him of politicizing the war, let us have an accurate quote. You can't take only part of a newspaper, the part that says the Democrat Senate—I guess what was not in quotes. But it was read on the floor like it was quotes; like it was a direct quote from the President. The President did not say that. Even the Washington Post didn't say it. You can't say, well, the Washington Post had it wrong; that the Washington Post inferred that he meant the Democrat Senate. But that is not what he said.

When it is something of this significance, when it has international repercussions, and when it can undermine our efforts in trying to get countries such as Egypt, Jordan, Germany, Italy, and others to be on our side; to say the President said the Democratic-controlled Senate is not interested in national security, when he didn't say it, is a real injustice.

Mr. REID. Folks listen. Listen. Six times within the past month—four times at fundraisers—the President said the same thing.

When the majority leader came to the floor, he said a number of things.

First of all, he quoted correctly that at a fundraiser, Dowd, one of the Republican pollsters, was quoted, and I quote:

> Number-one driver for our base motivationally is this war.

Then, of course, we go to Karl Rove. Karl Rove, prior to the President being elected, no one knew who he was. We in Nevada knew him because he is from Nevada. But now everybody knows Karl Rove because he is known as the President's closest confidant. Of course, in June a floppy disk was found at Lafayette Park, right across from the White House. No one has denied that Karl Rove said what was on this floppy disk. Basically, it said focus on the war. There is the key point that should be centered on White House desire to maintain a positive issue environment. That positive issue environment is focus on the war and not on the stumbling economy.

Then we go to Andrew Card. Andrew Card said from a marketing point of view, you don't introduce new products in August.

Then we have the Vice President, and then we have the President. OK. Now.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REID. No. I will not.

Today, the Republican National Committee—of course, who leads the Republican National Committee? It is the President of the United States. Just like when we have a Democratic President, he is the leader of the Democratic National Committee. We have e-mail now. For some people, e-mail is not what we are used to. But we have an e-mail. Who was this e-mail sent to? It was sent to GOP team leaders. And it also gives you information if you want to become a GOP team leader. Who do you get to become one? We know how. Money.

What does this say? Maybe this is what this is all about—fundraising; seeing if they can raise some more money for the midterm elections.

> Tell Your Senators to support President Bush's Homeland Security. Democrat Senators Put Special Interests Over Security.

Among other things, this said the Senate is more interested in special interests in Washington and not the security of the American people.

It goes on to say.

> This bipartisan approach is stalled in the Senate because some Senate Democrats have chosen to put special interest, Federal Government employee unions, over the security of the American people.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REID. I will not yield until I finish. Just be patient.

Madam President, this is what it is all about—raising money for the midterm elections and accusing me of being not for the interests of this Nation.

I was the first Democrat to publicly support this President's father. I came to this floor right here—first Democrat—to say go to Iraq and do what you have to do. And to accuse me of not being for the Nation's security—as Senator DASCHLE pointed out, back here is a man who is missing an arm that was blown off when he was in the Second World War. As he said, he was a very young man. MAX CLELAND came in. He has one arm. He is missing both legs and an arm. He is not for the security of this Nation?

Talk to FRITZ HOLLINGS, a man nearly 80 years old, who was in World War II as an officer and fought in combat.

DANNY AKAKA. Now, most of us here don't have Congressional Medals of Honor like DAN INOUYE has. And let us not forget JOHN KERRY and TOM CARPER. But vicariously I have served in the Senate and the House of Representatives trying to do what I could to have this a secure nation. And to have anyone accuse me of not being for a secure nation is accusing me of not being patriotic. That is not right.

They can accuse me of being too liberal on an issue, too conservative on an issue, being a big spender, not spending enough, but don't accuse me—I didn't come back here to be called names. That is what I am being called.

Now, you can criticize TOM DASCHLE all you want, but, remember, the American people know he is right. You can't do what has been done.

We want to pass homeland security. This is a good man, Senator LIEBERMAN. He is one of the most conservative people we have in the Democratic caucus. He started working on this bill before September 11. Does he not want this bill? Of course he wants this bill.

We are being told we can't have cloture. Why did we file cloture? Because for 4 weeks we have been trying to pass a bill for this President, whose chairman of the Republican National Committee is sending out this trash.

So I think we should debate the issues. I am proud of TOM DASCHLE for standing up and bringing attention to what is going on.

What is going on? That the No. 1 driver for the Republicans is the war. It should not be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I will just repeat to my colleague, you may find a quote from the RNC, and I am sure we could finds things from the Democratic National Committee to be quite partisan. What I stated was that the President did not state what was alluded to yesterday on the floor when the majority leader said that, quote: the Democratic Senate is not interested in the security of the American people.

That is what he said. I am just saying, quite frankly, the President of the United States did not say it. I reviewed the entire speech.

I ask unanimous consent to have that speech printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESIDENT CALLS ON CONGRESS TO ACT

Army National Guard Aviation Support Facility, Trenton, NJ, September 23, 2002

The President: Thanks a lot for coming out this morning. It is my honor to be—it is my honor to be back in New Jersey. I want to thank you all for coming out. I want to thank the people of the New Jersey Army and Air National Guard for your hospitality. (Applause.) I'm here to talk about how best to make America a stronger country, a safer country, and a better country for all of us.

There is an old bridge over the Delaware River that says: Trenton makes, the world takes. (Applause.) It talks about the work ethic of the people of this part of our country, it talks about the creativity, it talks about the true strength of America. The true strength of America are our fellow citizens. The strength of our country is the people of America. And I'm honored to be with such hardworking people. (Applause.)

Congress can help. Congress needs to work hard before they go home. Congress needs to get some things done, which means a homeland security department, a budget that reflects our priorities. They've got to make sure they don't overspend your money. They've got to remember, everything they do must go to make sure America is a stronger and safer and better place. (Applause.)

I want to thank Brigadier General Glenn Rieth for opening up this hangar and for inviting me to this base. I want to thank all the Guard personnel who serve the United States of America. I want to thank you for your service, I want to thank you for your sacrifice. (Applause.) I want to thank your governor for being here today. I appreciate Governor McGreevey being at the steps of Air Force One. I'm thankful for his hospitality. I appreciate him coming to say, hello, and I'm honored he's here today to hear this speech. Governor, thank you for coming.

I appreciate members of the congressional delegation. Congressmen Ferguson, Saxton and Smith from New Jersey, thank you all for being here. (Applause.) I want to thank Bob Prunetti who is the Mercer County Executive, for greeting me here, as well. And I want to thank you all for coming.

Here's what's on my mind: I want our people to work here in America. Any time somebody who wants to work can't find a job, it means we've got a problem in this country. And we will not rest until people can find work. A stronger America means a strong economy. A stronger country means that our good, hardworking Americans are able to put food on the table for their families.

Now, we're making progress. Listen, interest rates are low, inflation is low, we've got the best workers in the world. We've got the best, hardest workers and smartest workers in the world. We've got the ingredients for growth. But what has taken place so far is not good enough for me. And I hope it's not good enough for the Congress. What's happening in the economy is not good enough for a stronger America. And Congress can help.

Listen, I come from the school of thought that says, if you've got an economic problem—and remember, for the first three quarters of my administration we were in negative growth; the stock market started to decline in March of 2000; economic growth started to show down in the summer of 2000; we were in recession in the first three quarters of 2001.

In order to make sure the country was stronger, I pulled this page out of the economic textbook, the page that says, if you let people keep more of their own money, they're going to spend it on a good or a service. If they spend it on a good or a service, somebody will produce the good and service. And if somebody produces a good or service, some American is more likely to find work. The tax relief came right at the right time for economic growth and jobs. (Applause.)

And if Congress wants to help in job creation, they need to make the tax relief permanent. They need to make the tax relief permanent so our New Jersey small businesses and entrepreneurs can plan for the future. After all, most growth of new jobs comes from small businesses all across America.

Congress also must understand they've got to pass an energy bill. You see, an energy bill will be good for jobs. An energy bill will be good for national security. We need an energy bill that encourages consumption [sic], encourages new technologies so our cars are cleaner, encourages new renewable energy sources, but at the same time encourages increase of supply here at home, so we're less dependent on foreign sources of crude oil. (Applause.)

Congress needs to get some work done before they go home. And one of the most important things they can do is to pass an antiterrorism insurance bill. See, we need an insurance bill to cover potential terrorist acts, so that hard hats in America can get back to work. And I want a bill on my desk that says we care more about the working people and less about the trial lawyers. We want a bill that puts the hard hats back to work, not enriches the trial lawyers here in America. (Applause.)

In order to make sure our country is stronger and our economy grows, Congress must be wise with your money. Notice I said "your money." When it comes time to budgeting and appropriations, which means spending, sometimes in Washington they forget whose money they're talking about. You hear them talking about the government's money. No,the money in Washington is not the government's money, the money in Washington is your money. And we better be careful about how we spend your money. And if Congress overspends, it's going to a problem for making America's economy continue to grow. And so my message to Congress is: remember whose money you're spending.

Now, one of the problems we have is that any time you're worried about spending, you set a budget. That's what you do. The Senate hasn't been able to do so. They don't have a budget, which means it's likely they're going to overspend. See, every idea in Washington is a good idea. Everybody's idea sounds good, except the price tag is generally in the billions. In order to make sure the country is stronger, we need fiscal responsibility in Washington, D.C. We need to make sure that Congress does not overspend. Without a budget, they're likely to overspend.

They set deadlines on you, when it comes to paying-your IRS, paying your taxes. There ought to be a deadline on them in order to get a budget passed and to get bills passed. Now, because they haven't been able to move, they're going to send my desk soon what looks like what they call a temporary spending bill. And that temporary spending bill should not be an excuse for excessive federal spending. The temporary spending bill ought to remember whose money they're spending. A temporary spending bill ought to be clean, so that we don't overspend as the economy is trying to continue to grow. What we need in Washington is fiscal responsibility, fiscal sanity. We need to set priorities with your money. And the most important priority I have is to defend the homeland; is to defend the homeland from a bunch of killers who hate America. (Applause.)

It's very important for the school children here to listen to what I'm about to say. You're probably wondering why America is under attack. And you need to know why. We're under attack because we love freedom, is why we're under attack. And our enemy hates freedom. They hate and we love. They hate the thought that this country is a country in which people from all walks of life can worship an almighty God any way he or she fits. They hate the thought that we have honest and open discourse. They hate the thought that we're a beacon of liberty and freedom.

We differ from our enemy because we love. We not only love our freedoms and love our values, we love life, itself. In America, everybody matters, everybody counts, every human life is a life of dignity. And that's not the way our enemy thinks. Our enemy hates innocent life; they're willing to kill in the name of a great religion. (Applause.) And as long as we love freedom and love liberty and value every human life, they're going to try to hurt us. And so our most important job is to defend the freedom, defend the homeland—is to make sure what happened on September the 11th doesn't happen again, we must do everything we can—everything in our power—to keep America safe.

There are a lot of good people working hard to keep you safe. There are people at the federal level and at the state level, a lot of fine folks here at the local level, doing everything we can to run down every lead. If we find any kind of hint, we're moving on it—all within the confines and all within the structure of the United States Constitution. We're chasing down every possible lead because we understand there's an enemy out there which hates America.

I asked the Congress to work with me to come up with a new Department of Homeland Security, to make sure that not only can this administration function better, but future administrations will be able to deal with the true threats we face as we get into the 21st century. A homeland security department which takes over the hundred different agencies and brings them under one umbrella so that there's a single priority and a new culture, all aimed at dealing with the threats.

I mean, after all, on our border we need to know who's coming into America, what they're bringing into America, are they leaving when they're supposed to be leaving America. (Applause.) Yet, when you look at the border, there are three different federal agencies dealing with the border: there is Customs and INS and Border Patrol. And sometimes they work together and sometimes they don't—they don't. They've got different work rules. They've got different customs. Sometimes they have different strategies. And that's not right.

So I asked Congress go give me the flexibility necessary to be able to deal with the true threats of the 21st century by being able to move the right people to the right place at the right time, so we can better assure America we're doing everything possible. The House responded, but the Senate is more interested in special interests in Washington and not interested in the security of the American people. I will not accept a Department of Homeland Security that does not allow this President, and future Presidents, to better keep the American people secure. (Applause.)

And people are working hard in Washington to get it right in Washington, both Republicans and Democrats. See, this isn't a partisan issue. this is an American issue. This is an issue which is vital to our future. It'll help us determine how secure we'll be.

Senator Gramm, a Republican, Senator Miller, a Democrat, are working hard to bring people together. And the Senate must listen to them. It's a good bill. It's a bill I can accept. It's a bill that will make America more secure. And anything less than that is a bill which I will not accept, it's a bill which I will not saddle this administration and future administrations with allowing the United States Senate to micro-manage the process. The enemy is too quick for that. We must be flexible, we must be strong, we must be ready to take the enemy on anywhere he decides to hit us, whether it's America or anywhere else in the globe. (Applause.)

But the best way to secure our homeland, the only sure way to make sure our children are free and our children's children are free, is to hunt the killers down, wherever they hide, is to hunt them down, one by one, and bring them to justice. (Applause.)

As far as I'm concerned, it doesn't matter how long it takes. See, we're talking about our freedom and our future. There's no cave deep enough, as far as I'm concerned; and there's no cave deep enough, as far as the United States military is concerned, either. I want you all to know, if you wear the uniform of our great country, I'm proud of you. I've got confidence in you. I believe that you can handle any mission. (Applause.)

No, it's a different kind of war than our nation has seen in the past. One thing that's different is oceans no longer keep us safe. The second thing is, in the old days, you could measure progress by looking at how many tanks the enemy had one day, and how many he had the next day, whether or not his airplanes were flying or whether or not his ships were floating on the seas. It's a different kind of war. And America has begun to adjust its thinking about this kind of war.

See, this is the kind of war where the leaders of the enemy hide. They go into big cities—or as I mentioned, caves—and they send youngsters to their suicidal death. That's the kind of war we're having. It's not measured in equipment destroyed, it's going to be measured in people brought to justice. And we're making progress. I had made it clear to the world that either you're with us or you're with the enemy, and that doctrine still stands. (Applause.) And as a result of the hard work by our United States military and the militaries and law enforcement officers of other countries, we've arrested or brought to justice a couple thousand or more. Slowly but surely, we're finding them where we think they can hide.

We brought one of them in the other day. He thought he was going to be the 20th hijacker, or at least he was bragging that way. I don't know if he's bragging now. But, see, he thought he was immune, he thought he was invisible, he thought he could hide from the long arm of justice. And like many—about the like number haven't been so lucky as the 20th hijacker. They met their fate.

We're getting them on the run, and we're keeping them on the run. They're going to be—as part of our doctrine, we're going to make sure that there's no place for them to alight, no place for them to hide. These are haters, and they're killers. And we owe it to the American people and we owe it to our friends and allies to pursue them, no matter where they try to hide.

And that's why I asked the Congress for the largest increase in defense spending since Ronald Reagan was the President. I did so because I firmly believe that any time we commit our troops into harm's way, you deserve the best pay, the best training and the best possible equipment. (Applause.) I also asked for a large increase because I wanted to send a clear signal to the rest of the world that we're in this for the long haul; that there is no calendar on my desk that says, by such and such a day we're going to quit, that by such and such a day we will all have grown weary, we're too tried, and therefore we're coming home.

That's not the way we think in America. See, we understand obligation and responsibility. We have a responsibility to our children to fight for freedom. We have a responsibility to our citizens to defend the homeland. And that only means—not only means dealing with real, immediate threats, it also means anticipating threats before they occur, before things happen. It means we've got to look out into the future and understand the new world in which we live and deal with threats before it's too late.

And that's why I went into the United Nations the other day. And I said to the United Nations, we have a true threat that faces America; a threat that faces the world; and a threat which diminishes your capacity. And I'm talking about Iraq. That country has got a leader which has attacked two nations in the neighborhood; a leader who has killed thousands of people; a leader who is brutal—see, remember, we believe every life matters and every life is precious—a leader, if there is dissent, will kill the dissenter; a leader who told the United Nations and the world he would not develop weapons of mass destruction, and for 11 long years has stiffed the world.

He looked at the United Nations and said this is a paper tiger, their resolutions mean nothing. For 11 years he has deceived and denied. For 11 years he's claimed he has had no weapons and, yet, we know he has.

So I went to the United Nations and said, either you can become the League of Nations, either you can become an organization which is nothing but a debating society—or you can be an organization which is robust enough and strong enough to help keep the peace; your choice.

But I also told them that if they would not act, if they would not deal with this true threat we face in America, if they would not recognize that America is no longer protected by oceans and that this man is the man who would use weapons of mass destruction at the drop of a hat, a man who would be willing to team up with terrorist organizations with weapons of mass destruction to threaten America and our allies, if they wouldn't act, the United States will—we will not allow the world's worst leaders to threaten us with the world's worst weapons. (Applause.)

I want to see strong resolutions coming out of that U.N.; a resolution which says the old ways of deceit are gone; a resolution which will hold this man to account; a resolution which will allow freedom-loving countries to disarm Saddam Hussein before he threatens his neighborhood, before he threatens freedom, before he threatens America and before he threatens civilization. We owe it to our children and we owe it to our grandchildren to keep this nation strong and free. (Applause.)

And as we work to make America a stronger place and a safer place, we always must remember that we've got to work to make America a better place, too—a better place. And that starts with making sure every single child in America gets a great education. (Applause.) Make sure that every child—make sure that we focus on each child, every child. It says we expect and believe our children can learn to read and write and add and subtract. As a society, we will challenge the soft bigotry of low expectations.

We believe every child can learn, every child matters, and therefore we expect to be told whether or not the children are learning to read and write and add and subtract. And if we find they're not, if we find there are certain children who aren't learning and the systems are just shuffling through as if they don't matter, we must challenge the status quo. Failure is unacceptable in America. Every child matters, and no child should be left behind in this great country. (Applause.)

A better America, a better America is one which makes sure that our health care systems are responsive to the patient and make sure our health care systems, particularly for the elderly, are modern. We need prescription drug benefits for elderly Americans. The Medicare system must be reformed, must be made to work so that we have a better tomorrow for all citizens in this country. (Applause.)

A better America is one that understands as we're helping people go from dependency to freedom, from welfare, we must help them find work. A better America understands that when people work, there is dignity in their lives. A better America is America which understands the power of our faith-based institutions in our country. It's in our churches and synagogues and mosques that we find universal love and universal compassion. (Applause.)

You know what's really interesting about what's taking place in America is this: the enemy hit us, but out of the evil done to America is going to come some incredible good, because of the nature of our soul, the nature of our being. On the one hand, I believe we can achieve peace. Oh, I know the kids hear all the war rhetoric and tough talk, and that's necessary to send a message > to friend and foe alike that we're plenty tough, if you rouse this country, and we're not going to relent.

>
> But we're not going to relent because my desire is to achieve peace. I want there to be a peaceful world. I want children all across our globe to grow up in a peaceful society. Oh, I know the hurdles are going to be high to achieving that peace. There's going to be some tough decisions to make, some tough action for some to take. But it's all aimed at making America safe and secure and peaceful, but other places around the world, too. I believe this—I believe that if our country—and it will—remains strong and tough and we fight terror wherever terror exists, that we can achieve peace. We can achieve peace in the Middle East, we can achieve peace in South Asia. We can achieve peace.
>
> No, out of the evil done to America can come a peaceful world. And at home, out of the evil done to our country can come some incredible good, as well. We've got to understand, in America there are pockets of despair and hopelessness, places where people hurt because they're not sure if America is meant for them, places where people are addicted. And government can help eradicate these pockets by handing out money. But what government cannot do is put hope in people's hearts or a sense of purpose in people's lives. That's done when neighbor loves neighbor. That's done when this country hears the universal call to love a neighbor just like you'd like to be loved yourself.
>
> No, out of the evil done to America is coming some incredible good, because we've got citizens all across this land—whether they be a part of our faith-based institutions or charitable institutions—citizens all across this land who have heard the call that if you want to fight evil, do some good. if you want to resist the evil done to America, love your neighbor; mentor a child; put your arm around an elderly citizen who is shut-in, and say, I love you; start a Boy Scout or Girl Scout troop; go to your Boys and Girls Clubs; help somebody in need.
>
> No, this country, this country has heard the call. This country is a country full of such incredibly decent and warm-hearted and compassionate citizens that there's people all across New Jersey and all across America who without one government act, without government law are in fact trying to make the communities in which they live a more responsive and compassionate and loving place.
>
> Today I met Bob and Chris Morgan, USA Freedom Corps greeters, who coordinate blood drives right here in New Jersey for the American Red Cross. Nobody told them they had to do that. There wasn't a law that said, you will be a part of collecting blood. They decided to do it because they want to make America more able to address emergency and help people in need. Whether it's teaching a child to read, whether it's delivering food to the hungry or helping those who need a—housing, you can make a huge difference in the lives of our fellow Americans.
>
> See, societies change one heart, one conscience, one soul at a time. Everybody has worth and everybody matters. No, out of the evil done to America is going to come a compassionate society. (Applause.) Now this great country will show the world what we're made out of. This great country, by responding to the challenges we face will leave behind a legacy of sacrifice, a legacy of compassion, a legacy of peace, a legacy of decency for future generations of people fortunate enough to be called an American.
>
> There's no question in my mind—I hope you can tell, I'm an optimistic fellow about our future. I believe we can overcome any difficulty that's put in our path. I believe we can cross any hurdle, climb any mountain, because this is the greatest nation on the face of the earth, full of the most decent, hardworking, honorable citizens.
>
> May God bless you all, and may God bless America. Thank you, all. (Applause.)

Mr. NICKLES. I read the speech.

Read the next paragraph. I have read the one paragraph. Read the next paragraph. The Senator from West Virginia will be interested in this. I will read the two relevant paragraphs again:

> The House responded, but the Senate is more interested in special interests in Washington and not interested in the security of the American people.

He didn't say the Democrats in the Senate. He didn't say what was stated on the floor. Let's be factual. Let's be honest. Let's say exactly what was said. Let's not construe and say something else.

Let me go on. The President said:

> I will not accept a Department of Homeland Security that does not allow this President, and future Presidents, to better keep the American people secure.
>

That is in the President's speech. That doesn't sound very partisan to me.

> See—

This is again the President:

> See, this isn't a partisan issue. This is an American issue. This is an issue which is vital to our future. It'll help us determine how secure we'll be.
>
> Senator GRAMM, a Republican, Senator MILLER, a Democrat, are working hard to bring people together.

That is not a partisan speech. That is not flailing all Senate Democrats. That is not accusing all Senate Democrats as being unpatriotic. Quite far from it.

So to stand on the floor and say, well, the President said that six times in the last few days, I don't believe is factually accurate. And to send signals to our allies and our adversaries that this is politicizing the war, or that some people think we might be, is politicizing the war, and it is wrong. And it sends the wrong signal. It sends all kinds of wrong signals, and it shouldn't be done.

If you are going to quote the President of the United States, not his election committee, not some mysterious tape that shows up someplace, but if you are going to quote the President of the United States, you ought to quote him accurately. And that was not done. And it is probably one of the harshest attacks I have ever seen on a sitting President of the United States in my 22 years in the Senate—the harshest. And at a time when we are in the process of trying to build an international coalition, the timing could not be much worse.

Also, I am bothered that people would say: Well, he said it. I'm just sure he did.

Well, he didn't say it. And if somebody has a quote—an accurate quote—that shows I am incorrect, I will stand here and say, oops, I'm wrong, because I believe more than anything my integrity means more to me than whatever somebody else says. I want to be factually accurate.

Before I came down yesterday to the floor, I said: Give me a transcript of the speech. I wanted to see exactly what it said. I didn't want to say: It didn't sound like something President Bush would say to me. And I have heard him give many campaign speeches. I know him pretty well. That doesn't sound like him. Where is it in his speech? Oh, he didn't say that.

He even went on to say both Democrats and Republicans are working to pass a good bill. And he never castigated all Senate Democrats as being unpatriotic or not interested in national security—he didn't say it.

Surprisingly enough, just because something is in the Washington Post does not make it right. The Washington Post was not even quoted accurately. I mean, come on now. This is a serious issue.

I want to conclude with a statement.

The Senate of the United States is a great institution, and I don't think it behooves us to quote a flier from the Republican National Committee, or the Democrat National Committee, and play a lot of politics, and say let's see what we can pull out of these documents. We are talking about a quote from the President not these fliers and statements from other people.

I can pull out more quotes right now from President Clinton and Vice President Gore stating their efforts to repudiate Saddam Hussein, the need for strong enforcement of resolutions, and on and on, that they never enforced—that they never enforced.

There were 16 resolutions passed in the United Nations dealing with Iraq, and the previous administration talked tough, lobbed a few bombs, a few cruise missiles, but we never enforced them. The net result is there have been no arms control inspections going on in Iraq for the last four years.

It is a lot more dangerous today than it was four years ago.

When I read these previous statements, both by President Clinton and Vice President Gore, about how we have to get tough against Iraq, and then we didn't do anything, it makes me wonder: Wait a minute, what is going on?

So now we are saying we should adopt a resolution that is not too far different than what we adopted unanimously in 1998 with almost no debate, and people are acting like: Wait a minute, the sky is falling. Or they try to move an issue from homeland security into the war on Iraq. I don't know if that is deliberate or just a mistake, but there is a real problem there. You can't be sending mixed signals to our potential adversaries and/or our potential allies, when we are trying to get people on our side, and misquote the President of the United States on something that important.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NICKLES. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Of course, I am working with colleagues on both sides of the aisle and with the White House to see that we can fashion a strong resolution giving the President authority to take whatever actions are necessary in Iraq.

But will the Senator from Oklahoma help me understand, what did the President mean when he said, at a fundraiser for Mr. Forrester, in New Jersey, Monday: "And my message to the Senate is: You need to worry less about special interests in Washington and more about the security of the American people"? At a welcome ceremony in Trenton, Monday, he said: "The House responded, but the Senate is more interested in special interests in Washington and not interested in the security of the American people."

At a meeting with Cabinet members on Tuesday, the President said: "My message, of course, is that—to the senators up here that are more interested in special interests, you better pay attention to the overall interests of protecting the American people."

Then, finally, on Tuesday, at a fundraiser for Mr. THUNE, from South Dakota: "I appreciate John's vote on a good homeland security bill. And the Senate must hear this, because the American people understand it: They should not respond to special interests. They ought to respond to this interest: protecting the American people from a future attack."

So I say the problem here is we have a disagreement about how to best protect homeland security workers or whether to protect them, and also how to preserve the authority of the President over national security. That is a good-faith dispute which we are having.

But I think the concern is that the President was questioning the patriotism of those who do not agree with him on that issue.

Mr. NICKLES. I will be happy to respond to my colleague. I actually read both of those quotes. I put one in the RECORD. I will put both quotes in the RECORD so the American people can see this.

I read the President's comments. You only read one line. I read three paragraphs—he never said, "The Democrats in the Senate are not interested in national security." That was the maddening quote. He never said it—never said it. Yet it was accepted that he said it. That is wrong. It was stated on last night's TV, stated in this morning's floor debate. I heard one or two people say he impugned the integrity of the entire Democratic caucus. No, he didn't. Read what the President said. He even complimented Democrats. He said both Republicans and Democrats are working hard to pass a good bill.

There are consequences to words. Words are important. I read the President's statements both at the Forrester event and the Thune event. They were not offensive, and they never stated what was said on the floor of the Senate. They were misconstrued somehow, some way. That is unfortunate because there are consequences to our words.

There are some people who listen. There are headlines. I haven't read what the European papers have said, but I don't look forward to that because I am afraid it sends the wrong signals.

I do agree with my colleagues, we should improve the quality of debate in the Senate. If we ever quote anybody, we should quote them accurately. We should never impugn the motives or integrity of any Member. That has happened more frequently around here than it should. Nor should we impugn the motives or integrity of the President of the United States. Certainly if we are going to quote the President, an equal branch of Government, we should do it accurately. That wasn't done in this case.

I don't think we should be reading from campaign flyers because we could do that all day long. We don't want to turn this into a political brawl. We want to legislate. We need to pass a Department of Homeland Security bill. We need to work out the issues. There is a legitimate debate, a difference of whether or not we should change the President's power or authority in dealing with employees. Should he have a national security waiver? Every President, going all the way back—most people said since Jimmy Carter—I believe to John F. Kennedy, has had a national security waiver in dealing with employees. The President of the United States needs flexibility to put people in, do different things.

Senator GRAMM has shown me a complaint filed by a union that was upset because of higher notification status—they didn't negotiate that with the union. That is absurd. The President should not have to negotiate with the union; if he feels compelled to issue a higher security threat to the Nation's people, he should not have to negotiate that with the union. One union has already filed a complaint, I guess before the NLRB, about that.

Again, I will not impugn the integrity or the motives or the patriotism of a colleague because they may have a difference with me on that particular issue.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NICKLES. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BYRD. I want to inquire as to how long the Senator believes he will be needing the floor.

Mr. NICKLES. I will conclude very shortly.

Mr. BYRD. I am not complaining.

I would also like to quote George Romney, who used to be Governor of Michigan.

Mr. NICKLES. I remember George Romney.

Mr. BYRD. Here is what he said: I didn't say that I didn't say it. I said that I didn't say that I said that. I want to make that perfectly clear.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate the chairman of the Appropriations Committee for his enlightening the debate.

I will yield the floor.

Again, I want to help restore the dignity and integrity of Senate debate. I want to help repair some of the damage that might have been done between the legislative branch and the executive branch. It is critically important. I say this mindful that I used to be one of the leaders when there was a Democrat in the White House. I didn't agree with President Clinton many times, and I stated so on the floor with great energy many times. I may have crossed the line sometimes. I am not sure. But I think it is very important that we respect the office of the President of the United States and that we not misquote the office of the President of the United States, nor that we ever misquote colleagues.

I am very insistent that we be accurate in our positions, our statements, our numbers, our quotes. If not, it is demeaning to the body.

Vice President Gore's speech to a San Francisco group was very demeaning to the office of the former Vice President because I think it undercuts the existing administration's dealing with some problems that were left by the previous administration.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Will the Senator respond to a question briefly?

Mr. NICKLES. I am happy to.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I agree with everything the Senator has said. We have so much important work to do. We ought to go about it, even when there are differences of opinion, not impugning—to use his term—each other's motives.

Would the Senator not agree that the processes of government would also be made not only more productive but more respectable if the President himself would not impugn the motives of Members of Congress of either party when they disagree with him?

Mr. NICKLES. I will tell my friend and colleague, I just read the quotes. I don't think he was impugning our motives. He did not say Senate Democrats. If there is anything else from this dialog and speech, I hope the press and others will realize, the President never said, "Senate Democrats aren't interested in national security." That is a misquote, and I am afraid a misquote that has done some damage. Hopefully, it can be repaired.

I listened to the President. I don't think I have heard him impugn the motives of colleagues.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The deputy majority leader.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I want printed in the RECORD this statement from this e-mail, the title of which is "Urgent: Effectively defending our homeland at stake." This was sent out today. It quotes the President of the United States, George W. Bush. It says:

> The House responded, but the Senate is more interested in special interests in Washington and not interested in the security of the American people.

That is a quote, supposedly, that the Republican National Committee sent out quoting President Bush. It goes on further in another paragraph to say:

> This bipartisan approach is stalled in the Senate because some Senate Democrats have chosen to put special interest, federal government employee unions over the security of the American people.

I want that in the RECORD. That is what is sent out today as a fundraiser from the Republican National Committee, the leader of which is the President of the United States, George W. Bush.

I ask unanimous consent to print the document in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Effectively Defending Our Homeland at Stake!

"I asked Congress to give me the flexibility necessary to be able to deal with the true threats of the 21st century by being able to move the right people to the right place at the right time, so we can better assure America we're doing everything possible. The House responded, but the Senate is more interested in special interests in Washington and not interested in the security of the American people. I will not accept a Department of Homeland Security that does not allow this President, and future Presidents, to better keep the American people secure." —President George Bush, September 23, 2002.

President Bush has called on the Senate to pass the bipartisan plan by Senators Gramm and Miller that creates a homeland security agency with the flexibility and freedom to manage the needs to keep America safe. This bipartisan approach is stalled in the Senate because some Senate Democrats have chosen to put special interest, federal government employee unions over the security of the American people. Instead of providing President Bush with the power he needs to protect the homeland, these Senate Democrats would strip the Presidency of a vital national security tool every President since John F. Kennedy has had—the power to suspend collective bargaining agreements during times of national emergency. Learn why this is critical to our homeland defense: http://www.gopteamleader.com/myissues/view issue asp?id=3;

This week the Washington Post exposed why some Democrat Senators have put special interests over our national interests by reporting that "lawmakers are loath to cross them just weeks before critical elections," saying that Democrats have received "$50 million in donations in this cycle" alone. Tell these Democrat Senators that our homeland security is more important than partisan politics and that they need to support the bipartisan bill endorsed by President Bush. We need a single homeland security agency that:

Protects the President's existing National Security authority over the federal workforce:

Gives the new Secretary of Homeland Security the flexibility and freedom to manage to meet new threats;

Protects every employee of the new department against illegal discrimination, and builds a culture in which federal employees know they are keeping their fellow citizens safe through their service to America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Did the Senator want me to yield to him?

Mr. GRAMM. I wanted to put something in the RECORD.

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the distinguished Senator without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, we were debating homeland security at one point earlier today. A perfect example of the kind of problem I am concerned about has just come to my attention. That is a complaint that has been filed by the National Treasury Employees Union against a system that we are all familiar with. When there is concern about a potential terrorist attack, the Government has set up threat priorities. Green is a low threat, blue is a guarded threat, yellow is an elevated threat, orange is a high threat, and red is a severe threat.

We have just gotten word that the National Treasury Employees Union—and I want to put this in the RECORD—has filed a complaint basically contending that this system of ratings violates their union contract because the Department was required to negotiate with them before it sent out a warning system.

I also want to put in the RECORD the statement from the White House release on it that said:

> In effect, the union is saying that the Customs Service has no right to implement the President's homeland security direction without entering into lengthy negotiations. And since the Customs Service went ahead anyway, it is now suing the Customs Service in the Federal Labor Relations Authority.

This is a case that just happened that we ought to be looking at as we write this bill.

I thank the Senator for yielding. To save money for the taxpayers, we produced one document on one side of the paper, and the other document on the other side of the paper. So when we put it in the RECORD, look on both sides of the paper. I ask unanimous consent that these documents be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

United States of America, Federal Labor Relations Authority—Charge Against an Agency

1. Charged Activity or Agency: United States Customs Service, 1300 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Room 2.3–D, Washington, DC 20229, (202) 927–2733, fax. (202) 927–0558.

2. Charging Party (Labor Organization or Individual): National Treasury Employees Union, 901 E. Street, NW, Suite 600, Washington, DC 20004, (202) 783–4444, fax. (202) 783–4085.

3. Charged Activity or Agency Contact Information: Sheila Brown, Director Labor Relations, 1300 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20229, (202) 927–3309, fax. (202) 927–0558.

4. Charging Party Contact Information: Jonathan S. Levine, Asst. Counsel for Negotiations, 901 E St., NW, Suite 600, Washington, DC 20004, (202) 783–4444, fax. (202) 783–4085.

5. Which subsection(s) of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a) do you believe have been violated? (See reverse) (1) and (5).

6. Tell exactly WHAT the activity (or agency) did. Start with the DATE and LOCATION, state WHO was involved, including titles.

On or about August 20, 2002, Customs issued a Customs Alert Protective Measures Directive without first notifying NTEU and affording it the opportunity to negotiate in violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1) and (5).

TIMELINE

March 11: President signed Homeland Security Policy Directive 3 (Attachment A), which called for the creation of the five-level Homeland Security Advisory System. The key idea of this system was that federal state, and local agencies would adopt standardized protective measures for the different threat levels. This began a formal 135 day comment period.

July 26: Attorney General Ashcroft and Governor Ridge reported to the President that the system was ready to put into effect.

July 28: The White House directed all agencies to conform their protective security conditions to the new five tiered system.

August 20: The Commission of Customs, Judge Rob Bonner, complied with this directive from the President by issuing a Customs Alert Protective Measures directive to the entire customs Service (Attachment B).

September 10: The President decided to raise the threat level from yellow (level 3) to orange (level 4). The Customs Service and many other federal, state, and local security agencies responded by increasing their protective measures to the next level. Virtually all experts agreed this is a better system that what we had before.

September 18: The National Treasury Employee Union, which represents some officers of the Customs Service, filed a grievance with the Federal Labor Relations Authority (Attachment C) against the customs Service for issuing the directive.

[Their grievance reads: "On or about August 20, 2002, Customs issued a Customs Alert Protective Measures Directive without first notifying and affording it the opportunity to negotiate in violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1) and (5)." (5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1) and (5) is the standard statute under which ULP grievances are customarily filed.)]

> In effect, the union is saying that the Customs service has no right to implement the President's homeland security direction without entering into lengthy negotiations. And since the Customs Service went ahead anyway, it is now suing the Customs Service in the Federal Labor Relations Authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

IRAQ

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, amidst the wall-to-wall reporting on Iraq that has become daily grist for the Nation's news media, a headline in this morning's USA Today leaped out from the front page: "In Iraq's arsenal, Nature's deadliest poison."

The article describes the horrors of botulinum toxin, a potential weapon in Iraq's biological warfare arsenal. According to the Journal of the American Medical Association, botulinum toxin is the most poisonous substance known. We know that Saddam Hussein produced thousands of litres of botulinum toxin in the run up to the Gulf war. We also know where some of the toxin came from. Guess. The United States, which approved shipments of botulinum toxin from a nonprofit scientific specimen repository to the government of Iraq in 1986 and 1988.

I recently asked Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld about these shipments during an Armed Services Committee hearing a week ago. I repeat today what I said to him then: In the event of a war with Iraq, might the United States be facing the possibility of reaping what it has sown?

The threat of chemical and biological warfare is one of the most terrifying prospects of a war with Iraq, and it is one that should give us serious pause before we embark on a course of action that might lead to an all-out, no-holds-barred conflict.

Earlier this week, British Prime Minister Tony Blair released an assessment of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program which contained the jolting conclusion that Iraq could launch chemical or biological warheads within 45 minutes of getting the green light from Saddam Hussein.

The British government assessment, while putting Iraq's chemical and biological capabilities in starker terms than perhaps we have seen before, closely tracks with what U.S. officials have been warning for some time: namely, Saddam Hussein has the means and the know-how to wage biological and chemical warfare, and he has demonstrated his willingness to use such weapons. By the grace of God, he apparently has not yet achieved nuclear capability.

On the matter of biological warfare, Gen. Richard Myers, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee last week that many improvements have been made to the protective gear worn by American soldiers and to the sensors used to detect chemical or biological agents.

But according to the USA Today article on botulinum toxin, U.S. troops would be just as vulnerable to botulinum toxin today as they were during the Gulf war.

This is what the article states:

> There's still no government-approved vaccine, and the only antitoxin is made by extracting antibodies from the blood of vaccinated horses using decades-old technology.

Last year's anthrax attack on the U.S. Senate gave all of us in this Chamber firsthand experience with biological warfare and new insight into the insidious nature of biological weapons. And that attack—hear me now—involved only about a teaspoon or so of anthrax sealed in an envelope. The potential consequences of a massive bioweapons attack against American soldiers on the battlefield boggle the imagination.

My concerns over biological warfare were heightened last week when I came across a report in Newsweek that the U.S. Government had cleared numerous shipments of viruses, bacteria, fungi, and protozoa to the Government of Iraq in the mid-1980s, at a time when the U.S. was cultivating Saddam Hussein as an ally against Iran. The shipments included anthrax and botulinum toxin.

Moreover, during the same time period, the Centers for Disease Control, CDC, was also shipping deadly toxins to Iraq, including vials of West Nile fever virus and Dengue fever.

This is not mere speculation. I have the letters from the CDC and the American Type Culture Collection laying out the dates of shipments, to whom they were sent, and what they included. This list is extensive and scary anthrax, botulinin toxin, and gas gangrene to name just a few. There were dozens and dozens of these pathogens shipped to various ministries within the Government of Iraq.

Why does this matter today? Why do I care about something that happened nearly 20 years ago when Saddam Hussein was considered to be a potential ally and Iran's Ayatollah Khomeni was public enemy No. 1 in the United States? I care because it is relevant to today's debate on Iraq. This is not yesterday's news. This is tomorrow's news.

Federal agencies have documents detailing exactly what biological material was shipped to Iraq from the United States. We have a paper trail. We not only know that Iraq has biological weapons, we know the type, the strain, and the batch number of the germs that may have been used to fashion those weapons. We know the dates they were shipped, and the addresses to which they were shipped.

We have in our hands—now get this—the equivalent of a Betty Crocker cookbook of ingredients that the U.S. allowed Iraq to obtain and that may well have been used to concoct biological weapons. At last week's Armed Services Committee hearing, Secretary Rumsfeld said he has no knowledge of any such shipments, and doubted that they ever occurred. He seemed to be a little affronted at the very idea that the United States would ever countenance entering into such a deal with the devil.

Secretary Rumsfeld should not shy away from this information. On the contrary, he should seek it out if he does not know it. Let's find out. No one is alleging that the United States deliberately sneaked biological weapons to Iraq under the table during the Iran-Iraq war. I am not suggesting that. I am confident that our Government is not that stupid. It was simply a matter of business as usual, I suppose. We freely exchange information and technology including scientific research with our friends. At the time, I suppose, Iraq was our friend. If there is any lesson to be learned from the Iraq experience, it is that we should choose our friends more carefully, see further down the road and exercise tighter controls on the export of materials that could be turned against us. Today's friend may be tomorrow's enemy.

This is not the first time I have advocated stricter controls on exports. In fact, I added an amendment to the 1996 Defense Authorization Act that was specifically designed to curb the export of dual-use technology to potential adversaries of the United States.

In the case of the biological materials shipped to Iraq, the Commerce Department and the CDC have lists of the shipments. The Defense Department ought to have the same lists so that the decisionmakers will know exactly what types of biological agents American soldiers may face in the field. Doesn't that make sense? Shouldn't the Defense Department know what is out there, so that the generals can know what counter-measures they might need to take to protect their troops?

I believe the answer to those questions is yes, and so I am sending the information I have to Secretary Rumsfeld. He said he did not have any such information so I am going to send it to Secretary Rumsfeld. No matter how repugnant he finds the idea of the U.S. even inadvertently aiding Saddam Hussein in his quest to obtain biological weapons, the Secretary should have this information at hand, and should make sure that his field commanders also have it.

The most deadly of the biological agents that came from the U.S. were shipped to the government of Iraq by the American Type Culture Collection, ATCC, a non-profit organization that provides biological materials to industry, government, and educational institutions around the world. According to its own records, the ATCC sent 11 separate shipments of biological materials to the government of Iraq between 1985 and 1988. The shipments included a witches brew of pathogens including anthrax, botulinum toxin, and gangrene.

Meanwhile, the CDC was shipping toxic specimens to Iraq—including West Nile virus and dengue fever—from January 1980 until October 13, 1993.

The nexus between the U.S.-approved shipments of pathogens and the development of Iraq's biological weapons program is particularly disturbing. Consider the following chain of events: In May of 1986, the ATCC reported the first shipments of anthrax and botulinum toxin to Iraq. A second shipment including anthrax and botulinum toxin was sent to Iraq in September of 1988.

At approximately the same time that the first shipment was sent in April of 1986, Iraq turned from studying literature on biological warfare to experimenting with actual samples of anthrax and botulinum toxin. The turning point, according a report to the United Nations Security Council from the U.N. weapons inspection team, came when "bacterial strains were received from overseas" and delivered to an Iraqi biological weapons laboratory.

In April of 1988, the U.N. weapons inspectors reported that Iraq began research on the biological agent Clostridium perfringens, more commonly known as gas gangrene. Clostridium perfringens cultures were among the materials shipped to Iraq by the ATCC in both 1986 and 1988.

These are only a few examples of the pathogens that Iraq is known to have imported from the United States. It is not known how many of these materials were destroyed following the Persian Gulf war, or how many Iraq continues to possess, whether they are still viable, or whether in its pursuit of biological weapons, Iraq has developed ways to extend the shelf life of toxic biological agents. There is much that we do not know about Iraq's biological warfare program. But there are two important facts in which we can have great confidence: Iraq has biological weapons, and Iraq obtained biological materials from the United States in the 1980s.

I asked Secretary Rumsfeld, at last week's Armed Services Committee hearing, whether we might be reaping what we have sown in Iraq, in terms of biological weapons. The question was rhetorical, but the link between shipments of biological material from the United States and the development of Iraq's biological weapons program is more than just an historical footnote.

The role that the U.S. may have played in helping Iraq to pursue biological warfare in the 1980s should serve as a strong warning to the President that policy decisions regarding Iraq today could have far reaching ramifications on the Middle East and on the United States in the future. In the 1980s, the Ayatollah Khomeni was America's sworn enemy, and the U.S. Government courted Saddam Hussein in an effort to undermine the Ayatollah and Iran. Today, oh, how different. Saddam Hussein is America's biggest enemy, America's greatest enemy, America's most dangerous enemy, and the U.S. is said to be making overtures today to Iran.

The Washington Post reported today that the President is expected to authorize military training for at least 1,000 members of the Iraqi opposition to help overthrow Saddam Hussein. The opposition groups include the Kurds in the north, and the Shiite Muslims in the south.

The decision to provide military training to Iraqi opponents of Saddam Hussein would mark a major change in U.S. policy, ending a prohibition on lethal assistance to the Iraqi opposition. It is not a decision that should be undertaken lightly.

Although administration officials told the Post that initial plans called for modest steps that would allow members of the Iraqi opposition to provide liaison to the local population and perhaps guard prisoners of war, the officials did not shut the door on providing training and equipment for more lethal activities.

"Nobody is talking about giving them guns yet," one official was quoted as saying. "That would be a dramatic step, but there are many dramatic steps yet to be taken."

Has the administration adequately explored the potential ramifications of creating ethnic armies of dissidents in Iraq? Could the U.S. be laying the groundwork for a brutal civil war in Iraq? Could this proposed policy change precipitate a deadly border conflict between the Kurds and Turkey? Could we perhaps be setting the stage for a Shite-ruled Iraq that could align itself with Iran and result in the domination of the Middle East by hard-line Shiite Muslims along the lines of the Ayatollah Khomeni?

These are legitimate questions. They are troubling questions. And they should be carefully thought through before we unleash an open-ended attack on Iraq. We had better think about these questions. We better ask these questions. The administration had better listen and so had the American people.

There are many outstanding questions that the United States should consider before marching in lockstep down the path of committing America's military forces to effect the immediate overthrow of Saddam Hussein. The peril of biological weapons is only one of those considerations, but it is an important one.

Has it been thought out? Has it been discussed? Has the administration said anything to Congress about this, whether or not the administration has explored these questions? Here are the questions. Don't say they were not asked. The more we know now, the better off our troops will be in the future.

Decisions involving war and peace—the most fundamental life and death decisions—should never be rushed through this Senate. I say that again. Decisions involving war and peace—the most fundamental of life and death decisions—they affect your sons and daughters out there, your blood. Such decisions should never be rushed through, never be rushed through or muscled through in haste.

Our Founding Fathers understood that and they wisely vested in the Congress—not in the President, not in any President, Democrat or Republican—the power to declare war.

We are going to discuss this. There is going to be a discussion of it. It is not going to be rammed through all that fast.

Congress has been presented with a Presidential request for authorization to use military force against Iraq. We now have the responsibility to consider that request, consider it carefully, consider it thoroughly, and consider it on our own timetable. I urge my colleagues to do just that and avoid the pressure—avoid the pressure to rush to judgment on such an important and vital and far-reaching and momentous matter.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at the conclusion of the vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the Lieberman substitute amendment, regardless of the outcome, the Senate stand in recess until 5:15 p.m. today; further, notwithstanding rule XXII, the vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the Gramm-Miller amendment No. 4738 occur at 5:30 today, with the time between 5:15 and 5:30 equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees; and that second-degree amendments to the Gramm-Miller amendment may be filed until 6 p.m. today.

When this vote is completed, we will be in recess until 5:15. Both parties are having conferences. Following that, there will be 15 minutes of debate and then there will be a vote on cloture on the Gramm-Miller amendment.

I would say this has been a long struggle getting to where we are today. I express my appreciation to the manager of the bill, Senator THOMPSON, and of course the person we have heard a lot from in the last several days, my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Texas, Mr. GRAMM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, pursuant to rule XXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

> We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on the Lieberman substitute amendment No. 4471 for H.R. 5005, the Homeland Security bill:
>

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum call under the rule is waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the Lieberman amendment No. 4471 to H.R. 5005, an act to establish the Department of Homeland Security and for other purposes, shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are required under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana (Ms. LANDRIEU) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. LINCOLN). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEAR 2003—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report to accompany H.R. 1646, just received from the House; that the report be considered and agreed to; that the correcting resolution, H. Con. Res. 483 at the desk be agreed to; the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate; and that any statements related to this matter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of September 23, 2002.)

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to present to the Senate the conference report on H.R. 1646, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act for fiscal year 2003.

The bill contains two divisions. Division A is the State Department Authorization Act, and contains authorization of appropriations for the Department of State, and other foreign policy programs, and also contains several policy provisions. Division B contains the Security Assistance Act, which provides authorizations and legal authorities under the Arms Export Control Act and the Foreign Assistance Act.

This bill includes several important items, including the completion of a project that Senator HELMS and I began in 1997, the legislation to authorize payment of our back dues to the United Nations in exchange for reform in that organization. The conference report would facilitate the final installment of $244 million in arrears to the UN and other international organizations. I salute the former Chairman of the Committee, Senator HELMS, for initiating this project six years ago and for sticking with it. It has made a material difference in improving the relationship between the United States and the United Nations.

The bill includes two other provisions important to continuing the improvement of our relationship with the United Nations. First, the bill clears the way for the payment of nearly $80 million in new arrears which have accumulated in the last few years. Second, the bill authorizes the payment of our dues to the UN at the beginning of the calendar year, rather than the current system whereby we pay our dues at the start of the U.S. fiscal year. That late payment of our dues is detrimental, not only to UN operations, but to U.S.-UN relations. I hope the Administration will embrace this provision and request the necessary funds in the fiscal year 2004 budget.

Further, the bill authorizes funding at levels equal to or exceeding the President's budget request for the Department of State, embassy security, contributions for international organizations and international peacekeeping, and international broadcasting. The United States is a great power, and it has substantial responsibilities around the world. In order to meet those responsibilities, it must have a well-funded and well-equipped diplomatic corps. And if we are going to deploy our diplomats around the world, we must protect them. We cannot provide perfect security for our people, but we can and must take all reasonable precautions against known dangers. In 1999, Congress provided an authorization of $4.5 billion over five years—or $900 million per year, for embassy construction and security. This bill adds an additional $100 million to this authorization for fiscal year 2003.

Division B of this bill is the Security Assistance Act of 2002. It includes: foreign military assistance, including Foreign Military Financing and International Military Education and Training; international arms transfers; and many of our arms control, nonproliferation and antiterrorism programs.

This division includes some significant initiatives. For example, several provisions are designed to streamline the arms export control system, so as to make it more efficient and responsive to competitive requirements in a global economy, without sacrificing controls that serve foreign policy or nonproliferation purposes. This is a vital enterprise. U.S. industry depends upon the efficient processing of arms export applications, and U.S. firms lose contracts when the U.S. Government cannot make up its mind expeditiously.

At the same time, however, an ill-advised export license could lead to sensitive equipment getting into the hands of enemies or of unstable regimes. So there is a tension between the need for efficiency and the need not to make a mistake that ends up putting U.S. lives at risk. This bill addresses that tension providing funds for improved staffing levels, information and communications to enable the State Department to make quicker and smarter export licensing decisions. It also raises modestly the prior notice thresholds for most arms sales to our NATO allies, Australia, New Zealand or Japan. On the other hand, this bill adds a prior notice requirement for some sales of small arms and light weapons and strengthens the prior notice requirement for changes in the United States Munitions List.

Division B includes several new nonproliferation and antiterrorism measures. For example, the ban on arms sales to state supporters of terrorism, in section 40(d) of the Arms Export Control Act, is broadened to include states engaging in the proliferation of chemical, biological or radiological weapons.

This bill requires the President to establish an interagency mechanism to coordinate nonproliferation programs directed at the independent states of the former Soviet Union. This provision is based on S. 673, a bill introduced by Senator HAGEL and me with the cosponsorship of Senators DOMENICI and LUGAR. It will ensure continuing, high-level coordination of our many nonproliferation programs, so that we can be more confident that they will mesh with each other. The need for better coordination has been cited in several reports, including last year's report of the Russia Task Force of the Secretary of Energy Advisory Board, chaired by former Senator Howard Baker and former White House counsel Lloyd Cutler.

This bill encourages the Secretary of State to seek an increase in the regular budget of the International Atomic Energy Agency, beyond that required to keep pace with inflation. Because the IAEA's budget for 2003 has already been adopted, this bill authorizes an increase in the U.S. voluntary contribution to IAEA programs. This organization is vital to our nuclear nonproliferation efforts, its workload is increasing, and now it has begun a major program to locate and secure "orphaned" radioactive sources that could otherwise show up in a terrorist's radiological weapon.

Subtitle XIII–B of this bill is the "Russian Federation Debt for Nonproliferation Act of 2002," a provision that Senator LUGAR and I introduced, with the support of Senator HELMS. This subtitle authorizes the President to offer Soviet-era debt reduction to the Russian Federation in the context of an arrangement whereby the savings to Russia would be invested in agreed nonproliferation programs or projects. Debt reduction is a potentially important means of funding the costs of securing Russia's stockpiles of sensitive nuclear material, chemical weapons and dangerous pathogens, of destroying its chemical weapons and dismantling strategic weapons, and of helping its former weapons experts to find civilian careers and resist offers from rogue states or terrorists.

Three months ago, the Bush Administration persuaded the G–8 countries to take a significant step: they agreed to what is known as "10 plus 10 over 10," a commitment to provide the Russian Federation $10 billion in U.S. nonproliferation assistance and $10 billion in assistance from the other G–8 members over the next 10 years. This joint willingness to provide $20 billion opens new possibilities in Russian nonproliferation. It also sends a message to Moscow that working with the West or nonproliferation will be more profitable than selling dangerous technology to Iran.

The G–8 agreement included the important possibility of the leading economic powers using debt reduction to finance this assistance, and the Administration worked with us to ensure that this subtitle gives the President the flexibility he would need if he chose to use debt reduction. Pursuant to the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, he must still obtain appropriations for the cost of reducing any debt pursuant to this section. I have every hope, however, that we will see the day when both the United States and several of our allies use debt reduction to increase our nonproliferation assistance to Russia.

In closing, I thank my colleagues on the conference committee, particularly Chairman HYDE and Representative LANTOS in the other body, and Senator HELMS, for their cooperation in putting together this bill.

I would also like to recognize the hard work of all the staff on both the House and Senate committees, who did much of the preliminary work to prepare the bill for consideration by the conference committee. Equally important, I want to recognize the invaluable contributions and tireless efforts of the Deputy Legislative Counsel in the Senate, Art Rynearson. Mr. Rynearson labored many hours, including all of this past weekend, to assist the Committee staff in preparing and refining the legislative language in the conference report. This report would not have been ready for consideration at this time without his hard work.

This conference report is important to the operation of our U.S. foreign policy agencies. It has received strong approval in the other body. I urge its approval by the Senate.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this legislation is the culmination of a bipartisan effort begun early in the 107th Congress. Senator BIDEN chaired our conference committee and was a tremendous leader in finalizing the bill and ensuring its bipartisan support. I thank him for his leadership of the committee and his friendship over the past 30 years.

Given the strange events of the 107th Congress, this bill in fact had bipartisan authorship. We provided a first draft of this legislation to Senator BIDEN in May 2001, when the Senate leadership changed hands. The bill approved by the conference committee is similar to that draft in many respects. It contains important details that advance our national interest and reflect shifts in priorities that followed the terrorist attacks on our country of September 2001.

The bill allows for the payment of our U.N. assessments in a manner that encourages that organization to embrace improved financial practices and to complete the reforms that were initiated at our insistence, including the critical issue of appropriate representation of American personnel in U.N. positions.

This bill accomplishes a number of other important objectives. It reaffirms Congress's strong support for Israel as an important ally in a turbulent region by recognizing the right of Israel to name Jerusalem as its own capitol and by financial backing to ensure its national security. It promotes stability in the Taiwan Straits by reaffirming our insistence that any resolution of that long-standing conflict must be peaceful and based on the freely expressed assent of the people of Taiwan.

We have, I hope conclusively, clarified the status of the American Institute in Taiwan by requiring that the American flag be flown just as proudly over that Institute as it is over all American diplomatic facilities.

The legislation recognizes the importance of maintaining pressure on the repressive Castro regime in Cuba and moves us toward the goal of liberating the Cuban people. It does this by specifically authorizing continued radio broadcasting to Cuba.

The bill provides Secretary Powell with additional authorities to meet the increasing need for effective American diplomacy in the present crisis and to enhance the capacity of Diplomatic Security agents. It also makes equitable pay, personnel and travel adjustments for the benefit of State Department personnel.

We also extended indefinitely the reporting requirement on international child abductions, reflecting our dissatisfaction with the lack of success in reuniting American parents with their children when they are kidnapped overseas by the other parent. We established new reporting obligations that ensure that Congress is notified when individuals who have previously engaged in terrorist activities are granted visas for entry into the United States.

The progress that Russia has made toward becoming a real democracy has been painful but necessary. This bill emphasizes the establishment in Russia of a free press and the rule of law as indispensable institutions in a functioning democracy. These institutions would focus public attention on dangerous activities that are ignored or condoned by government officials. I expect that these institutions, once firmly established, would have a restraining effect on highly questionable activities, such as Russian support for the Iranian nuclear program, and help curtail the proliferation of weapons technology and expertise, nuclear know-how is just as dangerous as nuclear material. This bill also encourages the Russian Government to make serious contributions to nonproliferation efforts in order to give them a stake in these efforts and complement our efforts in Russia.

The Tibet Policy Act in this bill culminates the Senate's decades-long support for the Tibetan people. It bolsters Administration efforts by specifying investment guidelines to invigorate the Tibetan economy while preserving the distinct identity of the people. Most notably, this will end any dispute over the importance of the Special Coordinator for Tibet by legally mandating such a position.

The Security Assistance portion of this bill contains several important provisions, particularly those regarding the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. While I support the overarching framework of the Russian debt-for-nonproliferation provision in Title XIII, I harbor deep concerns about continued Russian proliferation to such state sponsors of terrorism as Iran. Thus, the Title includes a provision that places restriction on this debt reduction authority by requiring the President to certify that the Russian Federation has made and continues to make "material progress" in stemming the flow of sensitive goods, technologies, material, and know-how related to weapons of mass destruction to states that are international sponsors of terrorism. In this era of uncertainty, it is critical that we address this threat. Following in this vein, the Iran Nonproliferation Act of 2000 has been amended to require additional information be provided in required reports on transfers of weapons or weapons-related technologies to Iran.

With nonproliferation and disarmament issues taking a front seat in this bill, a provision has been included to allow development assistance to be spent for the destruction of surplus stockpiles of small arms, light weapons and other munitions in developing countries. This is indeed an important activity for developing countries as they emerge from periods of civil war or ethnic conflict.

The Security Assistance title of this bill also recognizes that South Asia is a critical theater of operations in our war against terrorism, and encourages the U.S. Government to continue to work on issues of nuclear and missile proliferation in this region. To this end, this section states that it shall be the policy of the United States, consistent with its obligations under the Treaty on the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to encourage and work with the Governments of India and Pakistan to achieve a specific set of nonproliferation objectives by September 30, 2003. The Administration must continue to make this a high priority in its key foreign policy objectives.

Title XI affirms strong support for the profoundly important responsibilities of the Verification and Compliance Bureau to promote compliance analysis and enforce countries' compliance with their legal and political nonproliferation commitments. The title authorizes a larger budget than requested for this Bureau, including $1.8 million for additional personnel to adequately staff the mission of this critical Bureau and to improve verification capabilities. This Bureau is essential to ensuring that treaties and agreements are more than simple parchment, and should be adequately funded to carry out its mission.

Furthermore, I am happy to support a Title XII provision that provides the President with the authority to enter into bilateral or multilateral agreements for post-undergraduate flying and tactical leadership training at facilities in Southwest Asia. This is critical addition for our war against terrorism, as it enables the United States to maintain a positive influence in the region and enables our forces to have access to training and range facilities. Additionally, Title XIV recognizes the important work of the Office of Defense Trade Controls, and supports additional authorities so that it can achieve a greater level of efficiency in processing munitions licenses.

Finally, every Senator knows that no bill is possible without many long hours and hard work by staff. I can't tell these young men and women often enough what a great service they do for the Senate and for the country. I am particularly grateful to Patti McNerney, the Committee's Republican Staff Director, Rich Douglas, the Chief Republican Counsel, Senior Staff Members Mark Lagon and Mark Esper, Republican Counsel Jeff Gibbs, and Professional Staff Members Carolyn Leddy and Maurice Perkins. I am grateful for the work of the rest of the Committee's Republican Staff: Skip Fischer, Walter Lohman, Jed Royal, Jose Cardenas, Brian Fox, Susan Williams, David Merkel, Kelly Siekman, Sara Battaglia, Philip Griffin, Lester Munson, Kris Klaich, Hannah Williams, and Sarah Bardinelli.

The cooperative efforts and hard work of the Democratic Committee staff members, especially Brian McKeon, the Committee's Chief Counsel, Ed Levine, and Jofi Joseph, as well as the current and former staff directors, Tony Blinken and Ed Hall.

Last—but by no means least—I note that Art Rynearson, the Deputy Legislative Counsel of the Senate, has done his usual superb job of putting this conference report into proper legislative form. I say thank you to all.

The conference report was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 483) was agreed to.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now stand in recess until the hour of 5:15 p.m.

Thereupon,, the Senate, at 4:17 p.m, recessed until 5:15 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. REID).

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002—Continued

AMENDMENT NO. 4738

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order previously entered, there are 15 minutes equally divided between the two managers of the bill.

Who yields time?

The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I yield myself up to 3½ minutes.

One of my favorite expressions is: Only in America, this great country of ours. I was thinking, as we approach this debate on the motion to invoke cloture, that only in the Senate, the great deliberative body we are, would we find Members about to do what I fear they are going to do, which is to vote against a proposal that they themselves have made because they want to vote on it without anyone else having a right to amend it. That is where we are.

We have had a good debate. We have the Gramm-Miller substitute amendment to the underlying Senate Governmental Affairs Committee proposal that created the Homeland Security Department. Senator GRAMM and Senator MILLER said their proposal and ours are 95 percent the same. We have a disagreement about how to protect homeland security workers in the new Department and still retain the authority of the President over national security.

Senator BEN NELSON of Nebraska and Senator JOHN BREAUX of Louisiana, working together with Senator LINCOLN CHAFEE of Rhode Island, have found common ground. They presented and crafted an amendment that gives a little bit of reassurance against arbitrary action to the Federal workers before they have their union rights, collective bargaining rights, taken away because the President determines those rights are in conflict with national security. It gives the President some new authority to reform the civil service system but encourages him to try to negotiate those changes with the unions. If that does not work out, then it is decided by a board, where the President appoints all the members. This achieves some due process and fairness for homeland security workers but does not diminish the final word of the President of the United States at all.

In short, with all respect, I say to my colleagues who support Gramm-Miller but who are going to oppose the end of a filibuster of Gramm-Miller, they do not know how to accept a yes to the question they have asked. The Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment says yes to the question they have asked: How can we create a Department of Homeland Security, retain the authority of the President, and still protect some fairness and due process for homeland security workers?

What they are asking for is an up-or-down vote on the Gramm-Miller proposal, the President's proposal, denying us, apparently—the majority of us, now 51—the right to vote on an amendment which, incidentally, is pretty much the exact same amendment Congresswoman CONNIE MORELLA, a Republican of the House, was allowed by the Republican leadership of the House to put on the President's proposal. We can at least offer the same courtesy and rights to three bipartisan Members of the Senate.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I yield such time as the Senator from Nebraska requires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has up to 4 minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Connecticut for this opportunity to speak on this amendment.

Quite frankly, I think my colleague from Connecticut is absolutely right, and I ask my friends on both sides to take yes for an answer because I truly think this amendment will be the kind of yes that has been sought in the past.

I am puzzled, as I think perhaps anybody watching and many of us here today are puzzled, by the characterization of this amendment as being in opposition to the President. Anytime you are trying to close the gap, anytime you are trying to bring about a resolution of compromise, it is hardly an exercise in opposition. I think, if anything, we should be looked at as friends of the process in trying to bring this together.

To also suggest cloture would be inappropriate now is also very startling because I always thought cloture was how we finally brought the end of debate to get a vote for or against legislation to move it forward. Right now it seems the vote against cloture is to stall and have more opportunity for debate.

So if people are a bit puzzled, I can only appreciate that fact because I am puzzled, too.

In this exercise, I have learned a lot about the spin as opposed to the appropriate characterization of letters or of comments on the floor. I thought we were giving Governor Ridge and Senator GRAMM exactly what they were asking for because that is the way I read Senator GRAMM's comments. I presided the day he was presenting them, and I thought I understood him. I am surprised to find out I did not understand what he was saying. I am surprised I cannot read a letter from Governor Ridge in which he says the same management authority that is now provided in the IRS model is what we are after. We provide that in this amendment. Now we find that is not the case, either.

This is a puzzling day for me. It is perhaps puzzling others who are watching it, because when it appears yes cannot be taken for an answer, I do not know what kind of an answer will be appropriate. If there is other language, I have said I will take a look at it, but I do not think the answer is no language. In fact, what we have is an opportunity to present something that ought to close the gap, fill in the last 5 percent, so we have 100 percent legislation that does what the President needs to be able to do and also protects national security.

National security is lost in this debate over nits and little differences of opinion about this piece of the amendment or that piece of the amendment. We can close them, but we have to be able to be in a position to know when they are closed and when enough will be enough.

Right now I would not know even how to begin to try to close this if it remains open, but it seems to me we can vote for cloture and then let's have the opportunity to finish this bill, get an up-or-down vote, as has been requested, move on and make national security the important point it is and have a Homeland Defense Department.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator BURNS is under the time controlled by Senator THOMPSON. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. I congratulate my friends from Nebraska and Connecticut who were just talking. It seems like yesterday we came to this body. You didn't get my goat, either.

We have all been involved in conferences. Anytime we pass legislation in this body and then it is passed in the House, we go to conference. In conference is where we settle our differences. It usually comes down to one or two items where there starts to be an impasse.

Basically, those one or two items were not dealt with in the amendment of my friend from Nebraska. It is still there and even adds another layer or hurdle for the President to jump in the management of this Department before a final decision can be made on the movement of money or personnel and their responsibilities in this particular national security Department.

We have not dealt with the two very important ones, and nobody puts it better than the ranking member of the committee of jurisdiction. So I caution Senators this is a bold attempt to find a compromise, but even though you pass their amendment, it does not deal with the heart of this debate.

So whenever Senators start looking at this, they should look into it deeply, and they will find a compromise was attempted, but it did not get us to where we should be if they think the President should have the flexibility to manage money and personnel in this very important new Department we are creating.

I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this bipartisan substitute, and I am here to urge its adoption as the most effective way to create a new Department of Homeland Security to protect our Nation from the threat of terrorism.

I take this opportunity to highlight four important provisions of the bipartisan substitute that are significant improvements to the committee-endorsed legislation before the Senate.

These provisions address the use of appropriated funds, presidential reorganization authority, and the status of the Coast Guard within the Department.

Section 738 of the bipartisan substitute includes the appropriations-related language that the committee endorsed to maintain the appropriate checks and balances between the legislative and executive branches with respect to the use of appropriated funds.

It improves on that language by authorizing an appropriation of $160 million, and general transfer authority of $140 million, to begin operating the new Department. Both amounts would be subject to reasonable Congressional oversight and decisions.

Section 739 requires the submission of a multi-year spending plan for the Department so that Congress and the American people can fully understand, and support, the magnitude of funds needed to conduct an effective homeland defense.

Senator COLLINS and I authored the Coast Guard language in the bipartisan substitute—Section 761. This language preserves the non-homeland security missions of the Coast Guard and its capabilities to perform those missions.

The language also ensures that the Coast Guard Commandant can report directly to the homeland security secretary without being required to report through any other official of the Department.

I believe this language improves upon the Committee bill by removing the Coast Guard from the Directorate of Border and Transportation Protection—the new directorate—and by making it a freestanding organization—still the Coast Guard—operating within the department and answering directly to the Secretary.

This action ensures that there is no ambiguity about the independent and distinct status of the Coast Guard within the Department, or about the Commandant's direct reporting authority. He will report directly to the Secretary.

Finally, Section 734 provides the President with the authority to propose further reorganization plans for the Department of Homeland Security and to have those plans considered by the Congress under expedited procedures.

This language guarantees that Congress will play a significant role in deciding any further reorganizations, and that these proposals will be debated and acted upon without delay.

I would like to discuss the use of appropriated funds.

The improved appropriations related language and reorganization plan language in the bipartisan substitute recognize that the need to establish the new Department can be addressed while still preserving the Constitution, especially with respect to maintaining Congress's "power of the purse."

That "power" is the primary way Congress holds the executive branch accountable for the use of funds, and it ensures that Congress has a central role in determining how hard-earned tax dollars will be expended.

Section 738 of the bipartisan substitute reinforces existing law on how appropriated funds are used and how property is disposed of. It requires congressional approval of any plans to modify or eliminate any of the organizations being transferred to the new Department.

Congress must approve, in advance, the reallocation of transferred funds away from their originally intended purposes.

Accordingly, the proposed statutory language preserves the statutory and administrative requirements needed to ensure that any funds made available to the new Department are used effectively and efficiently and according to the will of the people as reflected through their elected Senators and Representatives.

Our amendment demonstrates that the necessary funding mechanisms and flexibility already exist to enable the new Department of Homeland Security to perform its mission.

These procedures are embodied in the appropriations process, which can provide the funds needed for the Department without delay through a combination of new appropriations, supplementals, or reprogramming actions.

We already have the opportunity to consider new appropriations to create the Department in several of the funding bills working their way through the congressional process at this very moment. These bills will be considered in some format before September 30 or at least before we recess for the election period.

Funds to continue the operations of the organizations transferring to the Department also will be provided in these appropriations measures.

The bipartisan substitute underscores the importance of providing in the appropriations process the $160 million in new appropriations and the $140 million in general transfer authority.

These allocations total $300 million, which is a very large sum of money. This amount should be more than enough to create the new Department and to provide for any initial staffing, equipment, and other expenses.

I pledge to do my very best to provide these amounts in the appropriations process as needed.

The bipartisan substitute reaffirms the regular appropriations process and that it will work to allocate the needed start-up funding and to prevent disrupting the ongoing operations of the transferred organizations.

With regard to reorganization authority the originally proposed legislation for the Department of Homeland Security would have granted the new Secretary almost unlimited authority to establish, consolidate, alter, or discontinue any organizational units within the Department after giving Congress 90 days notice.

Under the Constitution, Congress has the responsibility to appropriate funds by law for the executive branch departments, agencies, and other organizations that have constitutional responsibilities to execute our laws.

Congress should not allow the many agencies transferring to the Department to be altered, merged, disbanded, or replaced solely and unilaterally by executive branch fiat.

We have the responsibility to ensure that the people's elected Senators and Representatives are part of the process of creating, modifying, or disbanding the organizations that spend the people's hard-earned tax dollars.

Congress's constitutional role in our system of Government is to set priorities for the use of appropriated funds and to oversee their use to ensure that these funds are expended effectively and efficiently.

The creation of a new and effective Department of Homeland Security is a shared responsibility between the executive and legislative branches. For the Department to be successful, both branches of Government—really each branch of Government—must cooperate with each other.

Congress and the executive branch should forge a relationship that is based on the mutual trust and shared compromise that the Framers of the Constitution envisioned in creating a system of checks and balances. Such a relationship is necessary for the effective functioning of the Federal Government.

In section 734, the bipartisan substitute preserves Congress's rightful role in this process by requiring that both the Senate and the House of Representatives approve any proposed reorganization plans under expedited procedures.

With regard to submission of a multiyear homeland security budget plan, section 739 of the bipartisan substitute requires the submission of a multiyear, homeland security spending plan with each budget request for the new Department, beginning with the fiscal year 2005 request.

This section will enable the Congress and the executive branch to fully understand the annual and multi-year funding requirements to make our homeland secure.

It will assist us in determining the most appropriate funding levels to protect the American people from terrorist threats.

The recommended statutory language requires that the Future Years Homeland Security Program be structured as, and include the same type of information and level of detail as, the Future Years Defense Program required by law to be submitted to Congress by the Department of Defense.

We have a section preserving the Coast Guard's mission performance. Finally, section 761 of the bipartisan substitute is highly important language Senator COLLINS and I authored to maintain the structural and operational integrity of the Coast Guard, the authority of the Commandant, the nonhomeland security missions of the Coast Guard, and the service's capabilities to carry out these missions even as it is transferred to the new Department.

In addition to transferring the Coast Guard as an independent, distinct entity reporting directly to the Secretary, the language states that the Secretary may not make any substantial or significant change to any of the nonhomeland security missions and capabilities of the Coast Guard without the prior approval by Congress in a subsequent statute.

The President may waive this restriction for no more than 90 days upon his declaration and certification to the Congress that a clear, compelling, and immediate state of national emergency exists that justifies such a waiver.

The language further directs that the Coast Guard's authorities, functions, assets, organizational structure, units, personnel, and nonhomeland security missions shall be maintained intact and without reduction after the transfer unless the Congress specifies otherwise in subsequent acts. This language does permit the Coast Guard to replace or upgrade any asset with an asset of equivalent or greater capabilities.

It also states that Coast Guard missions, functions, personnel, and assets—including ships, aircraft, helicopters, and vehicles—may not be transferred to the operational control of, or be diverted to the principal and continuing use of, any other organization, unit, or entity of the Department except under limited conditions.

Upon the transfer of the Coast Guard to the Department, the Commandant shall report directly to the Secretary and not through any other official of the Department.

The inspector general of the Department shall annually assess the Coast Guard's performance of all its missions with a particular emphasis on examining the nonhomeland security missions. The detailed results of this assessment shall be provided to Congress annually.

None of the conditions in the recommended language shall apply when the Coast Guard operates as a service in the Navy under section 3 of title 14, United States Code.

The Coast Guard's nonhomeland security missions—and the service's capabilities to accomplish them—are as vital to the 30 coastal and Great Lakes States as are its homeland security missions and capabilities.

No state is better than Alaska for demonstrating the importance of the Coast Guard's nonhomeland security missions.

The United States has a coastline of 96,000 miles. Alaska has a coastline of 47,300 miles, or almost 50 percent, of our Nation's total.

Alaska's fisheries are a billion dollar industry that delivers food to tables all across America and around the world. We harvested 5 billion pounds of seafood last year.

The Coast Guard plays an indispensable role in protecting and supporting this industry, and in promoting the safety of its participants. Just this summer, the Coast Guard dispatched additional assets to the maritime boundary line in the Bering Sea to guard against intrusions by Russian trawlers.

The Coast Guard's nonhomeland security missions are marine safety, search and rescue, aids to navigation, living marine resources—including fisheries law enforcement, marine environmental protection, and ice operations. They all are critical to the well-being of Alaskans, and we rely on the Coast Guard virtually every day for protection and assistance in these mission areas.

The service's homeland security missions are ports, waterways and coastal security, drug interdiction, migrant interdiction, defense readiness, and other law enforcement.

The language in the bipartisan substitute is intended to assure that the important homeland security priorities of the new Department will not eclipse the Coast Guard's crucial nonhomeland security missions and capabilities.

This language modifies the committee provisions to reflect suggestions made by the Commandant and his senior staff after they analyzed the original language at my request.

Our additional language allows the Coast Guard to conduct joint operations more effectively with other entities in the Department, to assign a limited number of Coast Guard military members or civilian employees to these entities for liaison, coordination, and operational purposes, and to replace or upgrade assets or change nonhomeland security capabilities with equivalent or greater assets or capabilities.

With the Bipartisan Substitute, I believe the Coast Guard will be in an even stronger position to carry out both its vital non-homeland security missions and its important homeland security responsibilities.

Finally, there have been claims that the improved statutory language I have highlighted today still may restrict the President's flexibility to establish and operate the new Department.

It is my understanding that the White House was a key participant in the crafting of the Bipartisan Substitute, and that any significant language was reviewed for acceptability by the President's advisors.

The President has stated repeatedly that he supports the language in the Bipartisan Substitute.

In his Radio Address to the Nation last Saturday, September 21, the President specifically stated that the Bipartisan Substitute would, and I quote, "provide the new Secretary of Homeland Security much of the flexibility he needs to move people and resources to meet new threats."

I ask unanimous request to insert into the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks the recent statements by the President and his spokesman that strongly endorse the bipartisan substitute.

I also ask unanimous request that an explanation of the start-up funding authorized in the bipartisan substitute be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1).

Mr. President, the bipartisan substitute underscores Congress's legitimate role in the ongoing process to meet our Nation's homeland security requirements responsibly and effectively. It is a significant improvement over the committee legislation which I did vote for.

I urge the Senate to adopt it without delay.

I thank my friend from Texas, Senator GRAMM, for working with us so closely in adopting the portions of the bill from the substitute I just described. I thank the leadership for their cooperation.

EXHIBIT 1

PRESIDENT ENDORSES GRAMM-MILLER BIPARTISAN SUBSTITUTE

President urges Congress to pass Iraq resolution promptly, September 24, 2002, White House:

It's time to get a homeland security bill done, one which will allow this President and this administration, and future Presidents—give us the tools necessary to protect the homeland. And we're working as hard as we can with Phil Gramm and Zell Miller to get this bill moving. It's a good bill. It's a bill that both Republicans and Democrats can and should support.

President Bush calls on Congress to act on Nation's priorities, September 23, 2002, Army National Guard Aviation Support Facility, Trenton, New Jersey, September 23, 2002:

Senator Gramm, a Republican, Senator Miller, a Democrat, are working hard to bring people together. And the Senate must listen to them. It's a good bill. It's a bill I can accept. It's a bill that will make America more secure. And anything less than that is a bill which I will not accept, it's a bill which I will not saddle this administration and future administrations with allowing the United States Senate to micro-manage the process. The enemy is too quick for that. We must be flexible, we must be strong, we must be ready to take the enemy on anywhere he decides to hit us, whether it's America or anywhere else in the globe.

Radio address by the President to the Nation, September 21, 2002:

In an effort to break the logjam in the Senate, Senator Miller and Republican Senator Phil Gramm have taken the lead in crafting a bipartisan alternative to the current flawed Senate bill. I commend them, and support their approach. Their proposal would provide the new secretary of homeland security much of the flexibility he needs to move people and resources to meet new threats. It will protect every employee of the new department against illegal discrimination, and build a culture in which federal employees know they are keeping their fellow citizens safe through their service to America.

I ask you to call your senators and to urge them to vote for this bipartisan alternative. Senators Miller and Gramm, along with Senator Fred Thompson, have made great progress in putting the national interest ahead of partisan interest.

Press briefing by Ari Fleischer, September 19, 2002:

Mr. FLEISCHER. The President today is going to announce his support for a bipartisan compromise, the Miller-Gramm compromise.

BASIS OF COST ESTIMATE INCLUDED IN BIPARTISAN SUBSTITUTE

The authorization of $160 million to begin departmental operations is based primarily on a CBO cost estimate. That estimate is the best estimate we have.

OMB's position is that no new funds are needed because start-up costs will be paid with funds diverted from agencies transferred to the Department.

However, the transferred agencies will need these funds to accomplish their missions.

Also, Congress should not relinquish its authority and oversight over funding reallocations in the Executive Branch.

Most of the CBO's estimate for FY03 would be spent on one-time costs to hire, house, and equip key personnel to manage the new Department.

There are four major cost categories:

$50 million for salaries and other personnel expenses;

$50 million to rent new space or renovate existing space for about 500 personnel;

$50 million for a basic computer network and telecommunications system; and

$10 million to plan for a more sophisticated computer/communications system to operationally integrate major agencies in the Department.

The 140 million estimate for general transfer authority was created by Committee staff to give the Department a $300 million total for first year operations.

The personnel costs assume that the new management team and its support structure will be phased in over the next two years.

These include the Secretary, his Deputy, the Under and Assistant Secretaries, and key managers such as the General Counsel and Inspector General.

It also includes "corporate". personnel, such as those needed for policy development, legislative affairs, and budget and finance activities.

The office space estimate is based on GSA experience in housing new agencies.

The basic computer, date processing, and telecommunications systems will perform the Department's administrative functions—budgeting, accounting, personnel records, etc.

A more sophisticated and interoperatble computer and communications network to integrate the major operational entities, such as the Coast Guard, INS, Customs, Secret Service, and the Border Patrol, may cost more than $1 billion in later years.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I rise today in strong opposition to the labor provisions in the Gramm-Miller substitute amendment. This approach to homeland security undermines longstanding labor protections and a national commitment to the right to organize.

This amendment seems to rely on the unsupported premise that workers rights are somehow incongruous with national security. There is no objective basis for that view. In fact, I would argue labor protections are directly in our national interest.

The people of the United States trust federal employees to stand at the frontlines in the war on terrorism and protect our nation against the myriad vulnerabilities that we may confront in the years to come. Border guards, INS workers, and customs agents are people who have the patriotic interest of our nation at heart. They guard our waterways and now protect our airports. Just as we are emphasizing the United States' increasing reliance on these workers, it would demonstrate tremendous chutzpah for the United States to remove essential labor protections and question the commitment and responsiveness of these workers to our national challenges. Working Americans have often sacrificed much to save our nation and to subject them to political and unchecked managerial discretion is an abdication of America's long held belief in the political independence of our government operations.

But that is precisely what this amendment would do: eliminate hard fought labor protections as America calls on its employees to take on even greater responsibilities in the War on Terrorism.

For instance, in the name of management flexibility, the substitute amendment being considered here would eviscerate the civil service system, and I fear put all Americans at risk.

The new Department we are discussing today should not be a Republican Department or a Democratic Department but an American Department from start to finish. There is no room for partisan politics when it comes to defending the American people. This cabinet department is being created for security, a truly nonpartisan objective and its operation after its creation should stay that way.

In the event that this substitute amendment is accepted by the Senate, employees of the Department of Homeland Security whose views are out of sync with the official line could be dismissed or transferred with little of no justification. This would have a chilling effect on the ability of employees in this critically important department to perform their jobs with the competence and creativity that everyone would expect.

Furthermore, this amendment could undermine vital whistleblower protections designed to ensure that the Congress and the American public are kept aware of severe problems that might develop in the new Department. The so-called "management flexibility" provisions would have the effect of silencing criticism in official forms, criticism that is desperately needed to improve America's ability to defend its borders and protect its people. In fact, incentives to leak critical views would be drastically increased as official forms would no longer be easily available.

Let us be clear: the primary supporters of this amendment have never been supportive of the various labor protections provided to government employees. They never liked the civil service system, despite the fact that it prevents bureaucratic decisions from getting mired in politics. They oppose the application of Davis-Bacon laws to the new Department, despite the fact that requiring federal government contractors to pay the prevailing wage encourages higher quality work. And they oppose collective bargaining agreements, despite the fact that the underlying legislation allows broad authority for the president to waive collective bargaining rights for job activities directly related to national security. The driver behind this amendment appears to be a political and philosophical view opposing the concepts embedded in the right to organize, not in protecting national security.

The fact is, that this Governmental reorganization provided opponents of labor rights with a golden opportunity to undermine the very protection that they have long opposed. This is not a new approach to a new situation, but an old familiar refrain from opponents of labor policies that empower our federal employees. Supporters of this amendment claim the whole purpose of the change is to increase management flexibility in the interests of national security, but make no mistake: this debate is about an ideological opposition to fundamental components of American labor law.

With all the waiver authority provided the President in Senator LIEBERMAN's bill, it is difficult to see just how this legislation would tie the hands of the President. Few reasonable analyses believe it will.

When tragedy struck on September 11, thousands of firefighters and police officers rushed to the world trade center. They risked life and limb to save their fellow Americans. Their union membership did not make them any less patriotic. Union membership of law enforcement and firefighters across the nation is unquestioned and standard procedure. Their collective bargaining rights did not undermine national security. And their work rules did not stop them from demonstrating a high level of professionalism on that horrific day or any other day.

Mr. President, I for one, do not believe we should allow American workers to lose hard-fought labor protections while we are asking them to take on even greater responsibilities and to assimilate into a new department. Clearly the authors of the Gramm-Miller amendment disagree.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the Gramm-Miller amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Nebraska). Who yields time?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I will be brief. By using cloture, this is an effort to put us into a straitjacket that will guarantee the President will not get an up-or-down vote on his program.

Now one may be against the President; they may believe there are some priorities higher than the life and safety of our citizens. I do not. But whether one agrees with the President or not, when thousands of our citizens have been killed, when we are at war with terrorism, the President of the United States has the right to have an up-or-down vote on his program. That is what we insist on. We will not get that if cloture is voted for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Could I inquire as to how much time we have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three and a half minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, before we vote, it is important we understand the parameters of the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment. Two points: One has to do with the President's national security authority, and the other has to do with flexibility. This amendment is purported to be a compromise. Senator GRAMM has worked diligently, and he and Senator MILLER have made about 25 changes. They have a compromise that is a good one and one the President supports. The compromise represented by the Nelson-Chafee-Breaux amendment is not really a good compromise, with all due respect to those who have made this effort, because of those two areas I mentioned. With regard to the President's national security authority, it changes the current law which says if the President makes a determination the primary function of an agency has to do with national security, he can act under that law to protect the national security.

The changes in the Nelson amendment would make it so the President would have to make a determination the activity involved would have to be related to terrorist activities, and then this additional requirement that the new position to which the people in the agency have been transferred, the majority of those people have essentially had a change in the function of their job and those things are reviewable by courts.

I understood my friend from Louisiana to say and debate awhile ago this court case we were all talking about basically did not give any judicial review. Maybe I misunderstood him because when I look at the case, it is quite clear there is judicial review under current law and under the Nelson amendment. However, under current law, the President only has one hurdle. He has to make a determination with regard to national security.

Under the Nelson amendment, he has to make a determination with regard to terrorism, but he also has to make a determination with regard to the nature of the actual work being carried out by the various employees—the President of the United States. Two challenges now can be made to the President's activity. Now when you go to court, the President has a rebuttable presumption of regulator. There is still jurisdiction there, there is still an additional hurdle. Why in the world do we want to impose an additional hurdle for this President that we have not imposed on prior Presidents? That is No. 1.

Second, with regard to flexibility, the House sent over six areas of flexibility. The Nelson amendment takes two of those areas off the table altogether. The Nelson amendment says the new Secretary cannot touch the labor-management chapter. It says the new Secretary cannot touch the appeals chapter. Both are areas we know need changing. Both are areas we know need improvement. We cannot even negotiate with regard to those areas. They are totally off the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I appreciate the attentiveness of the Chair. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas has asked us to consider what is best for the security of the American people. What is best for the security of the American people is to quickly adopt legislation that creates a Department of Homeland Security to protect them, and not to maintain a stubborn insistence that before you are willing to do that, the President must have an up-or-down vote on his proposal. That is something on which the Republican House did not insist. They gave Members the opportunity to introduce amendments, including one just like this.

I urge my colleagues, vote for cloture. Let's adopt this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. The majority leader asked me to announce this is the last vote today. The next vote will occur at approximately 5 or 5:30 on Monday afternoon.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on the Gramm-Miller amendment No. 4738:

Joseph Lieberman, Max Baucus, Ben Nelson of Nebraska, Dianne Feinstein, Tim Johnson, Patrick Leahy, Jeff Bingaman, Jack Reed, Hillary Rodham Clinton, Jim Jeffords, Debbie Stabenow, Daniel K. Akaka, Harry Reid, Maria Cantwell, Byron L. Dorgan, Herb Kohl.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to say a few words about the Freedom of Information Act compromise that Senators BENNETT and LEAHY and I were able to achieve and which is included in both the Lieberman and Gramm-Miller amendments.

One of the primary functions of the new Department of Homeland Security, DHS, will be to safeguard the nation's infrastructure, much of which is run by private companies. The DHS will need to work in partnership with private companies to ensure that our critical infrastructure is secure. To do so, the homeland security legislation asks companies to voluntarily provide the DHS with information about their own vulnerabilities; the hope being that one company's problems or solutions to its problems will help other companies with problems they may be having with their own critical infrastructure.

Some companies expressed concern that current law did not adequately protect their confidential business information that they are being asked to provide to the new DHS from public disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act. They argued that without a specific statutory exemption they would be less likely to voluntarily submit information to the DHS about critical infrastructure vulnerabilities. However, the Freedom of Information Act and the case law developed with respect to it already provide the protections these companies seek.

The language of our amendment protects from public disclosure the records of concern to these companies ,while preserving the existing rights of public access under FOIA. The amendment would protect from public disclosure any record furnished voluntarily and submitted to DHS that: No. 1, pertains to the vulnerability of and threats to critical infrastructure, such as attacks, response and recovery efforts; No. 2, the provider would not customarily make available to the public; No. 3, are designated and certified by the provider as confidential and not customarily made available to the public.

The amendment makes clear that records that an agency obtains independently of DHS are not subject to the protections I just enumerated. Thus, if the records currently are subject to disclosure by another agency under FOIA, they will remain available under FOIA even if a private company submits the same information to DHS. The language also allows the provider of voluntarily submitted information to change a designation and certification and to make the record subject to disclosure under FOIA. The language requires that DHS develop procedures for the receipt, designation, marking, certification, care and storage of voluntarily provided information as well as the protection and maintenance of the confidentiality of the voluntarily provided records.

The amendment defines the terms "critical infrastructure" and "furnished voluntarily." "Critical infrastructure" is the same as that found in the USA Patriot Act. The term "furnished voluntarily" excludes records that DHS requires an entity to submit and that are used to satisfy a legal obligation or requirement or obtain a grant, permit, benefit, or other government approval. This means that records used to satisfy a legal obligation or requirement or to obtain a grant, permit, benefit or other government approval are ineligible for protection under this amendment. In addition, this language does not preempt state or local openness laws. Finally, the language requires the General Accounting Office to prepare a report tracking the voluntarily submitted information to DHS, the number of FOIA requests for voluntarily submitted information and whether those requests were granted or denied, and recommendations for improving the collection and analysis of information held by the private sector.

It is important to protect the public's right to access information as the White House's recent national strategy for homeland security points out. The White House report also notes that any limitation on public disclosure must be done "without compromising the principles of openness that ensure government accountability." I agree. We must move cautiously when enacting any legislation to withhold information that is not already exempt from disclosure under FOIA and national security classifications.

The principles of open government and the right-to-know of the people are cornerstones upon which our country was built. We cannot and will not hastily and foolishly sacrifice them in the name of protecting them. This compromise achieves the balancing that is needed between openness and security. I thank Senators BENNETT and LEAHY for their work on developing this amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, in the wake of the terrorist attacks of September 11, bipartisan support in the Senate grew for the concept of a Cabinet-level officer with a new department to coordinate homeland security. In fact, Chairman LIEBERMAN of the Governmental Affairs Committee and Senator SPECTER must be commended for their hard work and prescience in introducing legislation within weeks of the attacks to create a new Department of Homeland Security.

The administration initially differed with this approach. Instead, the President invited Governor Ridge to serve as the Director of a new Office of Homeland Security. I invited Governor Ridge in October, 2001, to testify before the Judiciary Committee about how he would improve the coordination of law enforcement and intelligence efforts, and his views on the role of the National Guard in carrying out the homeland security mission, but he declined.

Without Governor Ridge's input, the Judiciary Committee continued oversight work that had begun in the summer of 2001, before the terrorist attacks, on improving the effectiveness of the U.S. Department of Justice, the lead Federal agency with responsibility for domestic security. This task has involved oversight hearings with the Attorney General and with officials of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Immigration and Naturalization Service. In the weeks immediately after the attacks, the Committee turned its attention to hearings on legislative proposals to enhance the legal tools available to detect, investigate and prosecute those who threaten Americans both here and abroad. Committee members worked in partnership with the White House and the House to craft the new antiterrorism law, the USA PATRIOT Act, which was enacted on October 26, 2001.

We were prepared to include in the new anti-terrorism law provisions creating a new cabinet-level officer heading a new Department of Homeland Security but did not, at the request of the White House. Indeed, from September, 2001 until June, 2002, the Administration was steadfastly opposed to the creation of a Cabinet-level Department to protect homeland security. Governor Ridge stated in an interview with National Journal reporters on May 30 that if Congress put a bill on the President's desk to make his position statutory, he would "probably recommend that he veto it." That same month, the White House spokesman also objected to a new Department and told reporters, "You still will have agencies within the federal government that have to be coordinated. So the answer is: Creating a Cabinet post doesn't solve anything."

In one respect, the White House was correct: Simply moving agencies around among Departments does not address the problems inside agencies such as the FBI or the INS—problems like outdated computers; hostility to employees who report problems; lapses in intelligence sharing; lack of translation and analytical capabilities; along with what many have termed, "cultural problems." The Judiciary Committee and its subcommittees have been focusing on identifying those problems and finding constructive solutions to fix them. To that end, the Committee unanimously reported the FBI Reform Act, S.1974, to improve the FBI, especially at this time when the country needs the FBI to be as effective as it can be in the war against terrorism. Unfortunately, that bill has been stalled on the Senate floor by an anonymous Republican hold.

The White House made an abrupt about-face on June 6, 2002, on the issue of whether our national security could benefit from the creation of a new Department of Homeland Security. This was the same day that the Judiciary Committee was continuing its oversight responsibility and was scheduled to hear from FBI Director Robert Mueller and FBI Special Agent Coleen Rowley, who was highly critical of the manner in which FBI Headquarters handled the investigation of Zacarias Moussaoui.

Thirty minutes before the nationally televised testimony from an FBI agent about intelligence failures before the September 11 terrorist attacks, word emerged from the White House that the President had changed his position and announced that he supported the formation of a new Homeland Security Department along the lines that Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator SPECTER had suggested, though the draft of the President's proposal was not yet completed. Indeed, press reports that day indicate that "Administration officials said the White House hoped to use the reorganization to deflect attention from the public backbiting that broke out among federal agencies as Congress began investigating intelligence failures surrounding the Sept. 11 attacks." Washington Post, June 6, 2002, at 12:52 PM.

Two weeks later, on June 18, 2002, Governor Ridge transmitted a specific legislative proposal to create a new homeland security department. It should be apparent to all of us that knitting together a new agency will not by itself fix existing problems. In writing the charter for this new department, we must be careful not to generate new management problems and accountability issues. Yet the Administration's proposal would have exempted the new department from many legal requirements that apply to other agencies. The Freedom of Information Act would not apply; the conflicts of interest and accountability rules for agency advisors would not apply. The new Department head would have the power to suspend the Whistleblower Protection Act, the normal procurement rules, and to intervene in Inspector General investigations. In these respects, the Administration asked us to put this new Department above the law and outside the checks and balances these laws are put there to ensure.

Exempting the new Department from laws that ensure accountability to the Congress and to the American people makes for soggy ground and a tenuous start—not the sure footing we all want for the success and endurance of this endeavor.

Specifically, the administration's June proposal contained, in section 204, a new exemption requiring nondisclosure under the Freedom of Information Act, FOIA, of any "information" "voluntarily" provided to the new Department of Homeland Security by "non-Federal entities or individuals" pertaining to "infrastructure vulnerabilities or other vulnerabilities to terrorism" in the possession of, or that passed through, the new department. Critical terms, such as "voluntarily provided," were undefined.

The Judiciary Committee had an opportunity to query Governor Ridge about the Administration's proposal on June 26, 2002, when he testified in his capacity as the Director of the Transition Planning Office for the proposed Department of Homeland Security. At that hearing, a number of Senators made clear that the President should not play politics with the proposal to create a new Department. One senior Republican member of the Judiciary Committee put it bluntly that action on the new Department should take place "without political gamesmanship," I share that view.

We all wanted to work with the President to meet his ambitious timetable for setting up the new department. We all know that one sure way to slow up the legislation would be to use the new department as the excuse for the Administration to undermine or repeal laws it did not like or to stick unrelated political items in the bill under the heading of "management flexibility." We all want the same end goal of an efficiently operating Homeland Security Department, but as the same senior Republican member of the Judiciary Committee advised at the June 26 hearing, for the sake of getting the new department underway, "[t]here may well be areas of debate or issues that we in Congress need to save for another day."

At that hearing, I cautioned the administration not to use the proposal for the new Department of Homeland Security to: No. 1, increase secrecy in government by creating a huge new exemption to the Freedom of Information Act for private sector security problems; No. 2, weaken whistleblower protections for dedicated Government workers who help fight Government waste, fraud and abuse; or No. 3, cut wages and job security for hardworking Government employees.

Governor Ridge's testimony at that hearing is instructive. He appeared to appreciate the concerns expressed by Members about the President's June 18th proposal and to be willing to work with us in the legislative process find common ground to get the legislation done. On the FOIA, he described the Administration's goal to craft "a limited statutory exemption to the Freedom of Information Act" to help "the Department's most important missions [which] will be to protect our Nation's critical infrastructure." Governor Ridge explained that to accomplish this, the Department must be able to "collect information, identifying key assets and components of that infrastructure, evaluate vulnerabilities, and match threat assessments against those vulnerabilities."

The FOIA already exempts from disclosure matters that are classified; trade secret and commercial and financial information, which is privileged and confidential; various law enforcement records and information, including confidential source and informant information; and FBI records pertaining to foreign intelligence or counterintelligence, or international terrorism. These already broad exemptions in the FOIA are designed to protect national security and public safety.

Indeed, the head of National Infrastructure Protection Center, NIPC, testified over 5 years ago, in September, 1998, that the private sector's FOIA excuse for failing to share information with the Government was, in essence, baseless. He explained the broad application of FOIA exemptions to protect from disclosure information received in the context of a criminal investigation or a "national security intelligence" investigation, including information submitted confidentially or even anonymously. This is from the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Technology, Terrorism, and Government Information, "Hearing on Critical Infrastructure Protection: Toward a New Policy Directive," on March 17 and June 10, 1998. The FBI also used the confidential business record exemption under (b)(4) "to protect sensitive corporate information, and has, on specific occasions, entered into agreements indicating that it would do so prospectively with reference to information yet to be received." NIPC was developing policies "to grant owners of information certain opportunities to assist in the protection of the information (e.g., by sanitizing the information themselves) and to be involved in decisions regarding further dissemination by the NIPC." In short, the former administration witness stated:

> Sharing between the private sector and the government occasionally is hampered by a perception in the private sector that the government cannot adequately protect private sector information from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). The NIPC believes that this perception is flawed in that both investigative and infrastructure protection information submitted to NIPC are protected from FOIA disclosure under current law.

Nevertheless, businesses have continued to seek a broad FOIA exemption. I expressed my concern that an overly-broad FOIA exemption would encourage government complicity with private firms to keep secret information about critical infrastructure vulnerabilities, reduce the incentive to fix the problems and end up hurting rather than helping our national security. In the end, more secrecy may undermine rather than foster security.

Governor Ridge seemed to appreciate these risks and said he was "anxious to work with the Chairman and other members of the committee to assure that the concerns that [I had] raised are properly addressed." He assured us that "[t]his Administration is ready to work together with you in partnership to get the job done. This is our priority, and I believe it is yours as well."

Almost before the ink was dry on the Administration's earlier proposal, on

July 10, the Administration proposed to substitute a much broader FOIA exemption that would (1) exempt from disclosure under the FOIA critical infrastructure information voluntarily submitted to the new department that was designated as confidential by the submitter without the submitter's prior written consent, (2) provide limited civil immunity for use of the information in civil actions against the company, with the likely result that regulatory actions would be preceded by litigation by companies that submitted designated information to the department over whether the regulatory action was prompted by a confidential disclosure, (3) preempt state sunshine laws if the designated information is shared with state or local government agencies, (4) impose criminal penalties of up to one year imprisonment on government employees who disclosed the designated information, and (5) extend antitrust immunity to companies that joined together with agency components designated by the President to promote critical infrastructure security.

Despite the Administration's promulgation of two separate proposals for new FOIA exemption in as many weeks, in July, Governor Ridge's Office of Homeland Security released The National Strategy for Homeland Security, which appeared to call for more study of the issue before legislating. Specifically, this report called upon the Attorney General to "convene a panel to propose any legal changes necessary to enable sharing of essential homeland security information between the government and the private sector."

The need for more study of the Administration's proposed new FOIA exemption was made amply clear by its possible adverse environmental, public health and safety affect. Keeping secret problems in a variety of critical infrastructures would simply remove public pressure to fix the problems. Moreover, several environmental groups pointed out that, under the Administration's proposal, companies could avoid enforcement action by "voluntarily" providing information about environmental violations to the EPA, which would then be unable to use the information to hold the company accountable and also would be required to keep the information confidential. It would bar the government from disclosing information about spills or other violations without the written consent of the company that caused the pollution.

At the request of Chairman LIEBERMAN for the Judiciary Committee's views on the new department, I shared my concerns about the Administration's proposed FOIA exemption and then worked with Members of the Governmental Affairs Committee—and in particular, with Senator LEVIN and Senator BENNETT—to craft a more narrow and responsible exemption that accomplishes the Administration's goal of encouraging private companies to share records of critical infrastructure vulnerabilities with the new Department of Homeland Security, without providing incentives to "game" the system of enforcement of environmental and other laws designed to protect the nation's public health and safety.

I commend Chairman LIEBERMAN and Senators LEVIN and BENNETT and their staffs for diligently working with me to refine the FOIA exemption in a manner that satisfies the Administration's stated goal, while limiting the risks of abuse by private companies or government agencies.

Specifically, section 198 on "Protection of Voluntarily Furnished Confidential Information" of the Lieberman Amendment to H.R. 5005 reflects the compromise solution we reached with the Administration and other Members interested in this important issue. This section exempts from the FOIA certain records pertaining to critical infrastructure threats and vulnerabilities that are furnished voluntarily to the new Department and designated by the provider as confidential and not customarily made available to the public. This provision improves on the Administration's July 18 proposal in the following ways:

First, section 198 limits the FOIA exemption to "records" submitted by the private sector, not "information" from the private sector. Therefore, if companies provide information to the new Department that is documented in an agency-created record, that record will be subject to the FOIA and not exempt simply because private sector information is referenced or contained in the record. Moreover, this section makes clear that portions of records that are not covered by the exemption should be released pursuant to FOIA requests, unlike the Administration proposals which would have allowed the withholding of entire records if any part is exempt.

Second, section 198 limits the FOIA exemption to records pertaining to "the vulnerability of and threats to critical infrastructure (such as attacks, response, and recovery efforts)" not all "critical infrastructure information."

Third, section 198 does not provide any civil liability or antitrust immunity that could be used to immunize bad actors or frustrate regulatory enforcement action.

Fourth, section 198 limits the FOIA exemption to records submitted to the new Department of Homeland Security, as in the administration's initial June 18 proposal, since the stated goal of the exemption is to help that Department provide a centralized function of collection, review and analysis of critical infrastructure vulnerabilities. Records submitted by private companies to other agencies are not covered by the new exemption, even if the same document is also submitted to the new Department.

Fifth, section 198 does not preempt state or local sunshine laws.

Sixth, section 198 narrowly defines "furnished voluntarily" to ensure that records submitted by companies to obtain grants, permits, licenses or other government benefits are not exempt, but are still subject to the FOIA process.

This section is a significant improvement over both versions of the Administration's proposed new FOIA exemptions.

Unfortunately, other critical areas that were mentioned at the June 26 hearing with Governor Ridge, on which he assured us he would work with us to find common ground, remain stumbling blocks. The Administration has threatened a veto over the issue of "management flexibility." At the same time we are seeking to motivate the government workers who will be moved to the new Department with an enhanced security mission, the Administration is insisting on provisions that threaten the job security for these hardworking government employees. The Administration should not use this transition as an excuse to cut the wages and current workplace security and rights of the brave employees who have been defending the nation. That is not the way to encourage retention or recruitment of the vital human resources on which we will need to rely, and it is a sure way to destroy the bipartisanship we need.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of an amendment that I have offered to assist Federal employees who have been injured on the job. My good colleagues, Senator WARNER of Virginia and Senators CLINTON and SCHUMER of New York, join me in this important effort. This provision was inspired by Mrs. Louise Kurtz, a Federal employee who was severely injured in the September 11 attack on the Pentagon. She suffered burns over 70 percent of her body, lost her fingers, yet fights daily in rehabilitation and hopes to return to work one day. Current law does not allow Mrs. Kurtz to contribute to her retirement program while she is recuperating and receiving Office of Worker's Compensation Programs disability payments. As a result, after returning to work she will find herself inadequately prepared and unable to afford to retire because of the lack of contributions during her recuperation period.

As Mrs. Kurtz's situation reveals, Federal employees under the Federal Employees Retirement System who have sustained an on-the-job injury and are receiving disability compensation from the Department of Labor's

Office of Worker's Compensation Programs are unable to make contributions or payments into Social Security or the Thrift Saving Plan. Therefore, the future retirement benefits from both sources are reduced.

The provision I have offered corrects this shortfall in the Federal Employees Retirement System, FERS. By increasing a Federal employee's FERS direct benefit by 1 percent for a period of extended convalescence resulting from a work related injury, the future reductions on Social Security and Thrift Savings Plan, TSP, benefits that result from the inability to make contributions during periods of disability are offset.

The retirement program for Federal Employees Retirement System employees has three distinct parts: Social Security, Federal Employees Retirement System Defined Benefits, and Thrift Savings Plan. Social Security taxes and benefits are the same for all participants. The Federal Employees Retirement System Defined Benefit and the Thrift Savings Plan are similar to defined benefit and 401(k) plans in the private sector. Unlike the impact on Social Security and the Thrift Savings Plan, periods during which an individual is receiving Office of Worker's Compensation Programs disability payments have no impact when calculating the length of service for determining the Federal Employees Retirement System Defined Benefit retirement payments. To explain how the provision will work, I offer the following illustration.

As you know, Mr. President, the goal of the Federal Employees Retirement System is to provide retirement pay totaling about 56 percent of their "high three" annual salary. Under the old Civil Service Retirement System, a direct benefit plan, two percent of a person's salary was set aside to provide the retirement benefit of 56 percent employees did not pay into Social Security or a vested savings plan. Under Federal Employees Retirement System, one percent of a person's salary is set aside to provide the Federal Employees Retirement System Direct Benefit retirement payment of 26 percent of their "high three" annual salary with Social Security and Thrift Savings Plan retirement pay contributing the remaining 30 percent for a total of 56 percent. By increasing the Federal Employees Retirement System Direct Benefit calculation by one percentage point for extended periods of disability, one can adequately offset reduction in Social Security and Thrift Savings Plan payments resulting from the lack to payments into the systems during periods of disability caused by on the job injuries.

Louise Kurtz has earned our appreciation for the role she and her husband Michael have played in identifying this shortfall in Federal Employees Retirement System and in persevering in getting legislation introduced to address the problem. Indeed, Mrs. Kurtz continues to serve the American public even while recuperating from injuries sustained in the terrorist attack upon the Pentagon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has been waiting for a long time. The Senator from Pennsylvania is here to offer a unanimous consent request. It is my understanding that it would take 2 minutes. So I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—H.R. 4695

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I thank the Senators from Wisconsin and Nevada.

I rise to offer a unanimous consent request for the Senate to consider the partial-birth abortion bill that passed the House recently. We have been working diligently for the past 18 months, since the Supreme Court decision, to craft a partial-birth abortion bill that meets the constitutionality muster of the Nebraska decision. We think we have accomplished that, and I would argue that the House agrees with us.

The House recently passed this legislation 274 to 151. I understand time is short, and we have held this bill at the desk. I am hopeful and have been working to try to get a unanimous consent agreement that we can bring up this legislation for debate and discussion. We are willing to do it on a very limited time agreement, limited amendments, or as many amendments as the other side thinks is necessary.

This is an important piece of legislation. It is one the President said he would sign. It is one that received an overwhelming bipartisan vote in the House. I believe it will have a very strong bipartisan vote in the Senate.

While I understand this unanimous consent will be objected to this evening, I am hopeful we can continue to work together to try to bring up this very important piece of legislation that has been voted on here at least in the last three sessions of Congress with very strong majorities. Unfortunately, it was vetoed by President Clinton. We now have a President who will sign it. We have language that will meet constitutional muster. We will continue to work and seek the unanimous consent request to bring this up.

I now offer that request. I ask unanimous consent that at a time determined by the majority leader, after consultation with the Republican leader, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 521, H.R. 4965, a bill to prohibit the procedure commonly known as partial-birth abortion. I further ask unanimous consent that there be one relevant amendment on each side, with 1 hour of debate equally divided on each amendment, and that there be 2 hours for debate equally divided between the two leaders or their designees; provided further that following the use or yielding back of time, the bill be read the third time and the Senate proceed to a vote on passage of the bill, with no further intervening action or debate.

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania is absolutely right. Time is so critical. Separate and apart from the time involving this matter, there are a number of Senators who have spoken to me personally about their objection to proceeding to this matter, if it came to the floor while I was here. Senator FEINSTEIN was the last to have spoken to me in this regard.

I note an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from Wisconsin.

IRAQ

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise to comment on the administration's "discussion draft" of a resolution authorizing the use of force against Iraq.

This proposal is unacceptable. The administration has been talking about war in Iraq for quite some time now. Surely they had the time to draft a more careful, thoughtful proposal than the irresponsibly broad and sweeping language that they sent to Congress.

Apparently the administration put forward such broad language as a negotiating tactic—asking for everything in the hopes of getting merely a lot.

But we are not haggling over a used car. We are making decisions that could send young Americans to war and decisions that could have far-reaching consequences for the global campaign against terrorism and for America's role in the world in the twenty-first century.

To put forth such irresponsible language is to suggest that the President actually wants the authority to do anything he pleases in the Middle East—and that suggestion is likely to raise tensions in an already explosive region. To pepper the resolution with so many completely different justifications for taking action signals a lack of seriousness of purpose, and it obscures the nature of the mission on the table. And then to insist on immediate action while remaining largely incapable of pointing to any imminent threat and unwilling to flesh out the operation actually being proposed reveals a troubling approach to our national security.

The administration has a responsibility to define what the threat is. Is it a link between the Iraqi Government and al-Qaida, or is it Iraq's pursuit of weapons of mass destruction?

So far I certainly would conclude that there is insufficient evidence to support the first charge about al-Qaida, but the administration keeps using it whenever they feel like without information. Why? Are they trying to gloss over the real possibility that this focus on Iraq, if not managed with diplomatic skill, will, indeed, do harm to the global campaign against terrorism?

The threat we know is real—Iraq's pursuit of weapons of mass destruction or WMD—is unquestionably a very serious issue. What is the mission? Is the mission on the table disarmament or is it regime change? Has anyone heard a credible plan for securing the weapons of mass destruction sites as part of a military operation in Iraq? Has anyone heard any credible plan for what steps the United States intends to take to ensure that weapons of mass destruction do not remain a problem in Iraq beyond the facile "get rid of Saddam Hussein" rallying cry?

Saddam Hussein is a vile man with a reckless and brutal history, and I have no problem agreeing that the United States should support regime change. I agree with those who assert that Americans, Iraqis, and the people of the Middle East would be much better off if he were no longer in power. But he is not the sole personification of a destabilizing WMD program. Once Hussein's control is absent, we have either a group of independent, self-interested actors with access to WMD or an unknown quantity of a new regime. We may face a period of some chaos, wherein a violent power struggle ensues as actors maneuver to succeed Saddam.

Has anyone heard the administration articulate its plan for the day after? Is the administration talking about a long-term occupation? If we act unilaterally, that could mean a vast number of Americans on the ground in a region where, sadly, we are often regarded as an imperialistic enemy.

Given the disarray in Afghanistan and the less than concerted American response to it, why should anyone believe that we will take Iraq more seriously? Certainly, it is undesirable for the United States to do this alone, to occupy a Middle Eastern country, and make our troops the target of anti-American sentiment.

Of course, Mr. President, I am sure you and I would agree, none of these concerns is a rationale for inaction. Let me repeat that. None of these concerns is a rationale for inaction. This is not about being a hawk or a dove. This is not about believing that Saddam Hussein is somehow misunderstood. He is a monster. Iraq's weapons programs are real, and only a fool would believe that the United States should simply hope for the best and allow recent trends to continue.

Equally, Mr. President, only a person lacking in wisdom would send American troops wading into this mire with a half-baked plan premised on the notion that the Iraqis will welcome us with open arms; that somehow the WMD threat will disappear with Saddam, and that U.S. military action to overthrow the Government of Iraq will somehow bring the winds of democratic change throughout the entire Middle Eastern region.

We do not make decisions crucial to our national security on a leap of faith. Congress is the body constitutionally responsible for authorizing the use of our military forces in such a matter. We cannot duck these tough issues by simply assuring our constituents that somehow the administration will "work it out." That is not good enough. We must not fail to demand a policy that makes sense.

Let me be clear about another important point: Maybe a policy that makes sense involves the United Nations, but maybe it does not. It is less important whether our actions have a formal U.N. seal of approval. What is important is whether or not action has international support. More important still is whether or not action will promote international hostility toward the United States.

In the context of this debate on Iraq, we are being asked to embrace a sweeping new national doctrine. I am troubled by the administration's emphasis on preemption and by its suggestion that, in effect, deterrence and containment are obsolete. What the administration is talking about in Iraq really sounds much more like prevention, and I wonder if they are not using these terms, "preemption" and "prevention" interchangeably. Preemption is knowing that an enemy plans an attack and not waiting to defend oneself.

Prevention is believing that another may possibly someday attack, or may desire to attack, and justifying the immediate use of force on those grounds. It is the difference between having information to suggest that an attack is imminent and believing that a given government is antagonistic toward the United States and continues to build up its military capacity.

It is the difference between having intelligence indicating that a country is in negotiations with an unquestionably hostile and violent enemy like al-Qaida to provide them with weapons of mass destruction and worrying, on the other hand, that someday that country might engage in such negotiations.

Of course, prevention does have an important role in our national security planning. It certainly should. We should use a range of tools in a focused way to tackle prevention—diplomatic, sometimes multilateral, economic. That is one of the core elements of any foreign policy, and I stand ready to work with my President and my colleagues to bolster those preventive measures and to work on the long-term aspects of prevention, including meaningful and sustained engagement in places that have been far too neglected.

Unilaterally using our military might to pursue a policy of prevention around the world is not likely to be seen as self-defense abroad, and I am not at all certain that casting ourselves in this role will make the United States any safer. Would a world in which the most powerful countries use military force in this fashion be a safer world? Would it be the kind of world in which our national values could thrive? Would it be one in which terrorism would wither or would it be one in which terrorist recruits will increase in number every day?

Announcing that we intend to play by our own rules, which look as if we will make up as we go along, may not be conducive to building a strong global coalition against terrorism, and it may not be conducive to combating the anti-American propaganda that passes for news in so much of the world.

Fundamentally, I think broadly applying this new doctrine is at odds with our historical national character. We will defend ourselves fiercely if attacked, but we are not looking for a fight. To put it plainly: Our country historically has not sought to use force to make over the world as we see fit.

I am also concerned this approach may be seen as a green light for other countries to engage in their own preemptive or preventive campaigns. Is the United States really eager to see a world in which such campaigns are launched in South Asia or by China or are we willing to say this strategy is suitable for us but dangerous in the hands of anybody else?

The United States does have to rethink our approach to security threats in the wake of September 11, but it is highly questionable to suggest that containment is dead, that deterrence is dead, particularly in cases in which the threat in question is associated with a state and not nonstate actors, and it is highly questionable to embark on this sweeping strategy of preventive military operations.

So as we seek to debate Iraq and other issues critical to our national security, I intend to ask questions, to demand answers, and to keep our global campaign against terrorism at the very top of the priority list. This Senate is responsible to all of the citizens of the United States, to the core values of this country, and to future generations of Americans. We will not flinch from defending ourselves and protecting our national security, but we will not take action that subordinates what this country stands for. It is a tall order, but I am confident that America will rise to the occasion.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, is the Senate in a period of morning business?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. We are not.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask, therefore, unanimous consent the Senate proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators allowed to speak therein for a period of 5 minutes each.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO U.S. COAST GUARD PORT SECURITY UNIT 308

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I rise today to honor U.S. Coast Guard Port Security Unit 308 from Gulfport, MS. Port Security Unit 308 deployed to Southwest Asia for 6 months in support of Operation Southern Watch in March 2002 after the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center and Pentagon. The unit was able to quickly restructure and produce a 53-person detachment for harbor security operations in support of enhanced Force Protection of United States Assets in the Arabian Gulf.

The brave men and women of Port Security Unit 308 Detachment Foxtrot provided around the clock anti-terrorism Force Protection for all Fifth Fleet Naval assets located in the Mina Salmon area of responsibility. Waterside patrols logged over 4300 underway hours that included 291 escorts of U.S. Fifth Fleet Naval ships along with performing 1,481 intercepts. In addition to the escorts and intercepts, over 320 inspections were conducted. During the past six months while performing AT/FP, USCG PSU 308 Detachment Foxtrot was responsible for the safety of over 25,000 military personnel.

I would also like to recognize MK1 Eddie Spann and BM2 Billy Mcleod who were recognized for their outstanding performance by being selected as Sailors of the Month, June 2002, for Naval Security Forces, Naval Support Activity, Bahrain.

I ask all my colleagues to join me in a round of applause for the fine individuals who are dedicated to winning the war on terrorism.

The following members from Port Security Unit 308 deployed in support of Operation Southern Watch:

LTJG Edward Ahlstrand, PSC James Altiere, PS1 Michael Beshears, BM3 Shannon Brewer, PS2 Ronald Brown, QMC David Conner, BM3 William Courtenay, PS1 Blevin Davis, CAPT Ronald Davis, GM3 Robert Dambrino, BM3 Samuel Edwards, TCC Patrecia Geistfeld, LCDR Robert Grassino, MK1 Kenneth Hall, BM3 Charles Hartley, GM3 William Harvey, BM2 Roger Holland, PS2 Darrell Holsenback, BM3 John Hughes, YN1 Brian Hutchinson, HS1 Jason Jordan, BM2 Jim Kinney, MKCM Potenciano Ladut, BM3 Gene Lipps, BM3 Bradford Margherio, PS3 Marcella McDow, BM3 James McKnight, BM2 Billy McLeod, YN2 Tamara Mims, BM3 Paul Muscat, DC3 Jonathan Pajeaud, BM3 Jonathan Phillips, BMC Lisa Pilko, BM1 Darren Rankin, LCDR Michael Rost, SK1 George Scherff, BM3 Terry Sercovich, PS3 David Simonson, PS3 Russell Shoultz, PS3 Benjamin Smith, LT Robert Smyth, MK1 Eddie Spann, BM3 Jordan Stafford, ET2 Stephen Strausbaugh, BM3 James Strempel, PS2 Jon Traxler, ENS Ted Trujillo, LT Timothy Weisend, PS2 Danny Welch, GMC Edward West, GM3 Lewis West, PS3 David Wood, GM3 Joshua Yarborough.

TRIBUTE TO U.S. SENATOR STROM THURMOND

Mr. INOUYE. STROM THURMOND will go down in the history of our Nation as an extraordinary citizen and an extraordinary patriot.

Few people can match his record of achievements:

> He was commissioned as an officer in the United States Army Reserve nearly 80 years ago. In 1959, he retired as a major general after serving 36 years in reserve and active duty.
>
> On D-day, June 6, 1944, Lieutenant Colonel Thurmond boarded an Army CG4A glider and flew behind enemy lines into Normandy.
>
> He served as Governor of South Carolina. Later, he was a candidate for President of the United States, receiving the third-largest independent electoral vote in U.S. History.
>
> In 1954, he was elected to the U.S. Senate as a write-in candidate. Today, he is the oldest and longest serving Member of the Senate.

I have been privileged to know and work with Senator THURMOND for nearly 40 years. I wish to thank him for his wealth of wisdom. I will always cherish his friendship.

But Senator THURMOND is not only my colleague and friend, he is also my brother-in-arms. During World War II, anti-tank gunners from my regiment, the 442nd Regimental Combat Team, assaulted southern France in 1944. Like Senator THURMOND, they went into battle aboard gliders without armor. Glider-borne assaults were extremely dangerous and risky; some would even say they were suicidal missions. However, they were a necessary component of the United States' invasion and liberation of Nazi-occupied France.

Senator THURMOND demonstrated rare courage, patriotism, and leadership as gliderman of the 82nd Airborne Division. Most glider descents were "controlled crashes," and that was the case when Senator THURMOND'S glider landed in Normandy. Although he was injured, he managed to safely lead his men to the 82nd Airborne Division headquarters at daybreak. The 82nd went on to accomplish its difficult objective of seizing and securing key positions in enemy territory.

I am pleased to report that Senator THURMOND'S distinguished military service will be honored with the naming of a new section of the Airborne and Special Operations Museum in Fayetteville, NC. The Thurmond Wing will house an exhibit dedicated to the courageous combat gliderman of World War II.

As a Senator, STROM THURMOND has often taken positions that were not universally supported. Yet one could always be certain that his decisions were honest. He is passionate in his beliefs, and his commitment to serving his constituents has been exemplary. At the end of our service in the Congress, we, his fellow Senate Members, can only hope that we will be able to say we have served our people with the diligence and devotion that Senator THURMOND has served his people. Indeed, Senator THURMOND can leave this Chamber and say, with confidence and without hesitation, that he has faithfully served the people of South Carolina.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred April 20, 2001 in Brighton, MI. Two white men assaulted a black state trooper who was dancing with a white woman. The assailants, who did not believe that the state trooper should be dancing with a white woman, attacked the trooper and yelled racial slurs. The attackers were charged with assault with a dangerous weapon and ethnic intimidation in connection with the incident.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

THE DROP IN FEDERALLY LICENSED FIREARMS DEALERS IN AMERICA

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, earlier this week the Violence Policy Center, VPC, released a new study entitled "The Drop in Federally Licensed Firearms Dealers in America." It found that the number of gun dealers holding Type 1 Federal Firearms Licenses, FFLs, a basic license to sell guns, dropped 74 percent from 245,628 in January 1994 to 63,881 in April 2002 or more than 181,000. The State of Michigan experienced the third largest reduction in the U.S., a drop of 75 percent from 12,076 dealers in 1994 to 3,016 in 2002.

According to the study, the decrease is the result of licensing and renewal criteria contained in the Brady Law and 1994 Federal crime bill. These changes were designed to reduce the number of private, unlicenced gun dealers who operate out of their homes and garages. I voted for the Brady Bill and Federal crime bill, and I am pleased that they appear to be working the way Congress intended. The study also suggests that enhanced enforcement and prosecution of gun laws at the federal, state, and local level have had a significant impact.

The drop in gun dealers is an important step in the effort to reduce firearms violence in the U.S. But despite this decline, private, unlicenced dealers are still supplying guns to gangs, drug dealers, and street criminals. In light of their findings, the Violence Policy Center proposed several recommendations to keep guns out of the hands of criminals. One of the VPC recommendations is to close the loophole which allows dealers to shift firearms from their business inventory to their personal collections and then sell those guns without performing a background check. This proposal deserves serious consideration to evaluate whether it will help to keep guns out of the hands of criminals and those prohibited under law from possessing a gun.

I urge my colleagues to support commonsense gun safety legislation.

DEWINE NEXT GENERATION LIGHTING INITIATIVE

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of the DeWine amendment to the Interior appropriations bill and am pleased to rise in support of it. The Next Generation Lighting Initiative is a research initiative designed to promote new, alternative, highly efficient technology for lighting to save energy and money, and reduce emissions. It would leapfrog over current technology. We use essentially the same light bulbs that Thomas Edison invented over 90 years ago. If successful, the Next Generation Lighting Initiative would make available new solid-state lighting that would be ten times more efficient than today's incandescent light bulbs. The concept is similar to fuel cells that also would leapfrog to a technology of the future and reduce our dependence on the traditional internal combustion engine.

I joined 22 other Senators in signing a letter to Appropriations Chairman BYRD and Ranking Member BURNS to support $30 million in increased funding for this new lighting technology research initiative.

The current Interior appropriations bill provides $4 million for this Initiative. The amendment being offered today would increase this funding to $10 million. While a sizable increase, this $10 million would still be only 33 percent of what we had initially sought.

Specifically, the increased funding is needed to overcome pre-competitive research hurdles associated with white light illumination from solid-state devices. It is important to fund new, clean energy technologies to provide sustainable economic development for the future.

Lighting consumes about 20 percent of the energy generated in the United States. Over the next 20 years, this new next generation lighting technology could reduce global electricity usage for lighting by 50 percent and reduce total global electricity consumption by 10 percent.

Many groups and Members support increased funding for this important initiative. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues from Ohio and New Mexico for their work on this effort, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee for his assistance and for his good work on this bill.

DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN LAKE CHAMPLAIN BASIN PROGRAM ACT OF 2002

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to have joined with Senator JEFFORDS, as well as Senators LEAHY and SCHUMER, in introducing the "Daniel Patrick Moynihan Lake Champlain Basin Program Act of 2002."

I thank Chairman JEFFORDS, with whom I have the honor and pleasure of serving on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, for introducing this legislation and naming it in tribute to my predecessor, New York Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan. Senator JEFFORDS is a great Chairman, a great environmental leader, and a great supporter of this natural and cultural resource that our states share—the Lake Champlain Basin and the Champlain Valley. I am proud also to be a sponsor of legislation authored by Senator JEFFORDS to establish the Champlain Valley National Heritage Partnership.

The Lake Champlain Basin is a unique and beautiful region, bounded by the Green Mountains of Vermont and the Adirondack Mountains of New York. It is a place of majestic mountain peaks; deep, blue waters; and abundant cultural, historic, and natural resources. The Lake is the sixth largest natural freshwater lake in the United States, and home to a many species of fish, birds and other wildlife.

We need to protect and enhance the environmental integrity and the social and economic benefits of the Lake Champlain basin. And that is precisely what we aim to do through this legislation, which will authorize $55 million over the next 5 years for this purpose.

That this legislation and this program are being named after Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan is a most fitting tribute. Senator Moynihan was, and still is, a great advocate of Lake Champlain and the Champlain Valley, whether supporting the rich heritage and history of the area, or protecting the environmental quality of the Lake and Basin.

Senator Moynihan appreciates that the environmental quality of the Lake and basin are key to the vitality of the area as a whole, and worked tirelessly during his tenure to protect the health of the basin. Naming the Lake Champlain Basin Program Act and the program itself after Senator Moynihan is a fitting tribute to his efforts to ensure that this natural treasure will survive for generations to come.

As we all remember, it was in 1990 that Senator Moynihan joined with Senator JEFFORDS, as I am joining with him today, in sponsoring the invaluable Lake Champlain Special Designation Act. The act outlined an unprecedented collaboration among broad interest groups to protect the environmentally sensitive Lake Champlain basin, as well as spark recreational activity and economic revitalization in the basin area. Under the act, the Lake Champlain Management Conference was created and charged with developing a comprehensive plan for pollution prevention and water quality restoration.

The legislation that we are introducing builds upon the Lake Champlain Special Designation Act of 1990, in which Senator Moynihan played a key role during the 101st Congress. It also builds upon the plan that came out of that 1990 legislation, entitled "Opportunities for Action." The plan was approved by the Lake Champlain Steering Committee earlier this year and is the guiding document for this new legislation, which will provide new and important resources for countries in Vermont and for Clinton, Essex, Franklin, Hamilton, Warren and Washingotn counties in New York State.

This is important environmental legislation, but it is also important economic development legislation for key areas of upstate New York. Therefore, I am proud to sponsor this legislation with Chairman JEFFORDS, and to name this legislation after my illustrious and esteemed predecessor, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan.

SUPPORT OF RENEWABLE FUELS PROVISION

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise to urge the House-Senate Energy Bill conferees to resist any efforts from House Republican conferees to alter or weaken the renewable fuels standard that was included in the Senate energy bill. The new standard was crafted in a consensus manner and supported by a strong majority in the Senate. It must remain intact in the conference report.

Earlier this Congress, I introduced a bill with Senator CHUCK HAGEL of Nebraska, the Renewable Fuels for Energy Security Act of 2001, S. 1006, to ensure future growth for ethanol and biodiesel through the creation of a new, renewable fuels content standard in all motor fuel produced and used in the United States. The framework of this bill was included in the Senate energy bill, requiring that 5 billions gallons of transportation fuel be comprised of renewable fuel by 2012, nearly a tripling of the current ethanol production. While the House of Representatives version of the bill did not include a renewable fuels standard, this issue was thoroughly debated on the Senate floor during consideration of the energy bill. Several amendments were offered to weaken or eliminate the renewable fuels standard but all of those efforts were soundly defeated. And for good reason: increased renewable fuel production lessens our dependence upon foreign oil, strengthens energy security, increases farm income, creates jobs, helps the environment, helps our international balance of trade, and would lower annual federal farm payments by $6.6 billion.

In addition, the new standard boosts economic growth in rural America. I do not need to convince anyone in South Dakota and other rural States of the benefits of ethanol to the environment and the economies of rural communities. Farmer-owned ethanol plants in South Dakota, and in neighboring States, demonstrate the hard work and commitment being expended to serve a growing market for clean domestic fuels.

In South Dakota, six ethanol plants are operating to produce approximately 116 million gallons per year. Four other ethanol projects are under construction, with a combined capacity to produce an additional 139 million gallons of ethanol annually.

Increasingly, modern ethanol plants in South Dakota are equipped to produce 40 million gallons of ethanol per year, such as the plants operating in Wentworth, Watertown, and near Milbank, as well as the proposed sites under construction in Chancellor and Groton. The economic benefits of one, 40 million gallon ethanol plant are significant, including an increase of household income for the community by $20 million annually.

The bill has other important provisions, including an orderly phase-down of MTBE use and removal of the oxygen content requirement for reformulated gasoline, RFG. The new standard has strong bipartisan support and is the result of long and comprehensive negotiations between farm groups, the oil industry and environmentalists. It is the first time that a substantive agreement has been reached on this issue.

Including the Senate-passed renewable fuels standard in the conference will go a long way towards increasing the Nation's domestic energy supply and making it more secure in the future. However, after no renewable fuels provision was included in the House energy bill, House Republican conferees, have chosen to introduce an unworkable alternative at the eleventh hour that has received no debate and has no consensus.

This is not acceptable. The conference should adopt the Senate-passed standard immediately. After a long debate, a consensus has been reached on this issue, demonstrating bipartisan support for a broader, deeper and more diverse energy portfolio, one that ensures we have clean, reliable and affordable domestic sources of energy. Let's move forward and enact the Senate language into law.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

HOME SAFETY MISHAPS COST AMERICANS DEARLY

• Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, this morning on the National Mall a report entitled "State of Home Safety in America" was unveiled by David Oliver, Executive Director of the Home Safety Council. The study, conducted by Dr. Carol Runyan of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and recognized by Dr. Sue Binder of the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, paints a picture of far too many Americans being hurt by unintentional injuries and deaths in this nation.

For instance, the study found that: Unintentional injuries are the fifth leading cause of death in the United States. Unintentional injuries in the home result in nearly 20,000 deaths and 13 million medical visits. Unintentional home injuries cost nearly $380 billion each year and account for an estimated 10 percent of all visits to emergency rooms.

The Home Safety Council, a not-for-profit organization devoted to home safety, has already been working to educate Americans on the risks they face every day in their own homes. The Great Safety Adventure is a traveling hands-on educational experience that teaches basic life skills to help children, families and communities.

Americans need to know the risks that exist in their homes and what they can do to prevent home injuries. This study will be an important resource for all Americans and will be a benchmark for examining future trends in home injury prevention.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this monumental effort to educate and save American lives by informing our constituents of the risks present in their homes and the steps they can take to prevent unintentional home injuries and keep families safe. More details are available through the Home Safety Council's Web site, www.homesafetycouncil.org.

For commissioning this important study and for raising the issue of home safety in the Congress, I congratulate the Home Safety Council and its distinguished board of directors.•

TRIBUTE TO THE GRADUATES OF THE BOSTON DIGITAL BRIDGE FOUNDATION TECHNOLOGY PROGRAMS

• Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I welcome this opportunity to pay tribute to the impressive achievements of those who have graduated this year as part of the Boston Digital Bridge Foundation's Technology Goes Home and TechBoston programs.

This evening at Franklin Park in Dorchester, MA, the City and the Boston Digital Bridge Foundation are hosting "Evening on the Bridge 2.0," a celebration honoring the graduates of these two programs.

Working with businesses, universities, schools, government, families and community-based organizations, the Boston Digital Bridge Foundation organizes and facilitates partnerships to link Boston public school students and their parents to the Internet. These programs have helped over 5,000 Boston Public School students and their families.

Technology Goes Home is a ten-week technology training program for low-income families. It has a rigorous selection process and a community service requirement at the completion of the program. Upon graduating from the program, each family receives a new computer, printer and Internet access.

TechBoston provides advanced technology courses for Boston Public School students at the middle and high-school level. They teach high-tech skills essential for success in careers and post-secondary education. Currently, over 2,500 Public School Students are enrolled in these classes.

Technology skills are no longer a luxury for students, they are a necessity. Without knowledge of computers and the Internet, today's students will have great difficulty competing in tomorrow's economy. When used effectively in the classroom and at home, modern technology can help level the playing field and open extraordinary new horizons and opportunities for all students and their parents.

That's why we are so strongly committed to the Boston Digital Bridge Foundation. The City is at the cutting edge of education technology and has become a national model, thanks to the leadership of Mayor Thomas M.

Menino and the skillful work of the community partners involved in these two innovative programs. Over 4,000 participants in six Boston neighborhoods, every high school, and ten middle schools are enrolled in the programs.

We are all proud of the remarkable progress that Boston has made in helping to close the digital divide. A coalition of leaders in business, labor, education and government has worked successfully together to connect all of Boston public schools to the Internet, and is in the process of bringing this technology home to all Boston Public School families.

Dozens of large and small organizations have made donations to these programs. America Online, AT&T Broadband, the Barr Foundation, the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, the Boston Redevelopment Authority, FleetBoston Financial, Hewlett-Packard, HiQ Computers, Intel, Keane Inc., Lexmark, Microsoft, PARTNERS+simons, Sallie Mae Foundation, 3Com, Verizon and Xintra and others have done more than their share, donating products and services to schools, including wiring, network equipment, computers and other supplies. All the equipment donated by these firms is new, and Verizon and America Online have donated free Internet access. This kind of participation has become a model for the nation.

Thanks to the Boston Digital Bridge Foundation and its supporters, we can now guarantee that Boston Public School students and their families have access to the Internet and the opportunities that it creates. We are doing all we can to see that every student in every Boston neighborhood will soon have the same opportunity.

I commend these Boston families and students for their efforts and accomplishments in expanding employment opportunities, improving school grades, and strengthening their community. To all involved, it is a job well done. I ask to have printed in the Record the names of this year's graduates of these programs of the Boston Digital Bridge Foundation.

The material is as follows:

TRIBUTE TO CARL THOMPSON

• Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to the memory of Carl Thompson, one of the founders of Wisconsin's modern Democratic Party. I was proud to know Carl, and had the pleasure of serving with him in the Wisconsin State Senate. Wisconsin was lucky to have him as a leading voice for progressivism in our State.

Carl was the youngest delegate at the founding convention of the State Progressive Party in Wisconsin. From those early days he never wavered from his commitment to an honest Government that truly served the interests of the people.

Twice the Democratic candidate for Governor, Carl spent a lifetime dedicated to serving Wisconsin, whether he was running for the State's top office or serving 30 years in the Wisconsin State Senate. He also served as a member of the State's Labor and Industry Review Commission.

When I served with Carl in the 1980s, I was struck, as was everyone who knew Carl Thompson, by his dedication to the great State of Wisconsin, and to the people he served. He was a powerful advocate for veterans' housing, and was one of the State's leading voices on the importance of preserving our First Amendment freedoms. Carl Thompson was also a great storyteller with a wonderful wit and sense of humor.

I am deeply saddened by Carl Thompson's passing, but I know that his leadership has left a lasting mark on the Wisconsin Democratic Party, and our State. He will be remembered for many years to come.•

POM-308. A House joint memorial that was adopted by the Legislature of the State of Washington relative to the National Guard; to the Committee on Armed Services.

HOUSE JOINT MEMORIAL 4017

Whereas, Within days of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks in New York City and Washington D.C., the nation's governors activated National Guard soldiers and airmen to augment security at 422 of the nation's international airports; and

Whereas, In true state-federal partnership, National Guard forces are providing aerial port security under the command and control of the sovereign states, territories, and the District of Columbia and the federal government is funding such duties "in the service of the United States" under Title 32 U.S.C., Section 502(f), hereinafter referred to as "Title 32 duty"; and

Whereas, Title 32 duty has been used, inter alia, for more than twenty years for National Guard full-time staffing, for National Guard support for local, state, and federal law enforcement agencies under Governors' Counter-Drug Plans for more than twelve years, for National Guard Civil Support Team technical assistance for local first responders for more than two years, and for aerial port security following the attacks of September 11. Of particular note, the National Guard Counter-Drug Program has long included Title 32 support for United States Customs, Border Patrol, and Immigration and Naturalization Service activities at United States Ports of Entry; and

Whereas, In the aftermath of the September 11 attacks, increased security and inadequate federal staffing have limited the flow of persons, goods, and services across our nation's borders. These factors have contributed to a serious weakening of the American and Canadian economies, especially in states such as Washington; and

Whereas, The governors of northern tier border states wrote President Bush in November 2001 offering to provide Title 32 National Guard augmentation for United States Customs, Border Patrol, and Immigration and Naturalization Service operations at United States ports of entry. Such relief could have been, and still can be, effected within days of acceptance by the federal government; and

Whereas, There is still no relief at our borders due to inaction on the governors' offer of Title 32 National Guard assistance and conflicting Department of Defense proposals to federalize the National Guard or otherwise enhance border security with active duty military personnel instead of Title 32 National Guard members; and

Whereas, Federalizing the National Guard under Title 10 U.S.C. would degrade the combat readiness of units from which Guardsmen would be mobilized, interfere with effective state force management, and prevent personal accommodations for soldiers and their civilian employers; and

Whereas, Stationing federal military forces at the United States-Canada border would be an unprecedented unilateral action by the United States; and

Whereas, The nation's border states need prompt relief which can best be provided by Title 32 National Guard forces being deployed to assist lead federal agencies at the borders "in the service of the United States," but under continued state command and control; and

Whereas, The Washington State Legislature opposes federalization of the National Guard or assignment of federal military forces for United States border security: Now, therefore,

Your Memorialists respectfully pray that Congress assures prompt augmentation of lead federal agencies at the borders by accepting the governors' offer of National Guard forces under state command and control pursuant to 32 U.S.C. Sec. 502(f); be it

Resolved, That copies of this Memorial be immediately transmitted to the Honorable George W. Bush, President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each member of Congress from the State of Washington.

POM-312. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to federal funds authorized for highway purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

Whereas, In 1998 the Congress of the United States passed with significant bipartisan support H.R. 2400, the "Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century" (TEA-21), which was subsequently signed into law as Public Law 105-178 by the President of the United States; and

Whereas, It was the intent of Congress to assure that guaranteed levels of federal funds for various highway purposes would be made available to the nation for a six-year period from federal fiscal year 1998 through federal fiscal year 2003; and

Whereas, Federal funds appropriated by Congress in recent years for highway purposes have reflected the intended levels of federal financial support authorized by TEA-21; and

Whereas, New Jersey and the several other states have developed highway master plans and initiated work on projects based, in part, on receiving the annual levels of federal funds authorized by TEA-21; and

Whereas, The President of the United States has proposed a level of federal funding for highway purposes in federal fiscal year 2003 that is almost 30 percent below the amount available to the various states in federal fiscal year 2002; and

Whereas, The proposed reduction in the federal fiscal year 2003 funding level for highway purposes is inconsistent with the level of federal funding authorized by TEA–21, places an undue financial burden on the various states by requiring them to defer plans and projects that were originally designed to provide timely, cost effective highway improvements for their citizens, and would establish an unfortunate financing precedent for Congress and the various states if the successor to TEA–21 is subsequently authorized at similar, lower funding levels: Now, therefore, be it

1. The Congress of the United States is memorialized to appropriate funds out of the federal Highway Trust Fund for various highway purposes in federal fiscal year 2003 at a level that is no less than the amount authorized by TEA–21, and to assure timely distribution of these funds to all states.

2. Duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested by the Clerk thereof, shall be transmitted to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Majority and Minority leaders of the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives, and all other Members of Congress.

POM–313. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to designating the fifteenth of May as National Senior Citizen's Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

Whereas, It is desirable to increase the nation's awareness of the accomplishments and experiences of the senior citizens of our country; and

Whereas, Senior citizens 65 years of age and older are in increasing segment of the population, currently comprising 12% of the nation's population, and 13% of New Jersey's population; and

Whereas, Younger generations benefit from the honoring and remembrance of the accomplishments, experiences and wisdom which senior citizens have amassed during their lives; and

Whereas, Senior citizens are deserving of a day of recognition honoring their numerous contributions to society and their survival through wartimes as well as their endurance of many hardships: Now, therefore, be it

1. The Congress and the President of the United States are respectfully memorialized to enact legislation honoring all the senior citizens of the United States by designating May 15th as National Senior Citizens Day.

2. Duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested by the Clerk of the General Assembly, shall be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Health and Human Services of the United States, the presiding officers of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives, and each of the members of the Congress of the United States elected from the State of New Jersey.

POM–314. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to National Grandparents Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

Whereas, In 1979, Congress approved House Joint Resolution No. 244, which authorized and requested the President to issue annually a proclamation designating the first Sunday of September following Labor Day of each year as "National Grandparents Day"; and

Whereas, In 1994, Congress approved Senate Joint Resolution No. 198, which recognized that grandparents bring a tremendous amount of love to their grandchildren's lives, deepen a child's roots, strengthen a child's development and often serve as the primary caregiver for their grandchildren by providing stable and supportive home environments, and designated 1995 as the "Year of the Grandparent"; and

Whereas, In making these designations, Congress acknowledged the important role grandparents play within families and their many contributions which enhance and further the value of families and their traditions, and recognized that public awareness of and appreciation for grandparents' many contributions should be strengthened; and

Whereas, For both "National Grandparents Day," and the "Year of the Grandparent" in 1995, Congress called on the people of the United States and interested groups and organizations to observe the day and year with appropriate ceremonies and activities; and

Whereas, Despite the acknowledgement of the tremendous contributions grandparents make to their families' lives, the permanent designation of a day to observe "National Grandparents Day," the year-long designation of 1995 as the "Year of the Grandparent," as well as the call for appropriate ceremonies and activities, the actual observance of appropriate ceremonies and activities has been lacking; and

Whereas, A wholehearted national effort to encourage people and organizations to celebrate "National Grandparents Day" by planning appropriate programs, ceremonies and activities would go a long way to commemorate and honor the wonderful and vital contributions that grandparents make to the lives of their families: Now, therefore, be it

1. The Congress and President of the United States are respectfully memorialized to make a wholehearted national effort to encourage people and organizations to celebrate "National Grandparents Day" by planning appropriate programs, ceremonies and activities that commemorate and honor the wonderful and vital contributions that grandparents make to the lives of their families.

2. Duty authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested by the Clerk of the General Assembly, shall be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Health and Human Services of the United States, the presiding officers of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives, and each of the members of the Congress of the United States elected from the State of New Jersey.

POM–315. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to the designation of a National Police, Firefighter and Emergency Services Personnel Recognition Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

Whereas, Police officers, firefighters and emergency services personnel throughout the nation are called upon to serve and protect their fellow citizens by responding to horrendous events and acting heroically to save the lives of others in spite of the clear danger to their own lives; and

Whereas, Police officers, firefighters and emergency services personnel are routinely thrown into extraordinarily dangerous situations, called upon to work overtime without proper sleep and spend time away from their families and loved ones; and

Whereas, Since the dastardly terrorist attacks on this nation of September 11, 2001, police officers, firefighters and emergency services personnel throughout the United States have been called upon to make even greater sacrifices to ensure the safety and security of Americans; and

Whereas, The third Sunday in May of each year has been designated "Police, Firemen and First Aid Recognition Day" in the State of New Jersey in recognition of the dedicated service the members of police and fire departments and the various first aid, ambulance and rescue services in the State have rendered to their fellow citizens; and

Whereas, Numerous other states throughout the country have designated an annual day whereby they recognize the services provided by their police officers, firefighters and emergency services personnel; and

Whereas, There is no national day of recognition to honor police officers, firefighters and emergency services personnel; and

Whereas, It is fitting and proper that a National Police, Firefighter and Emergency Services Personnel Recognition Day be established to salute the contributions of police officers, firefighters and emergency services personnel to the security and well-being of this country; Now, therefore, be it

1. The General Assembly of the State of New Jersey memorializes the Congress of the United States to adopt a resolution which designates one day each year as "National Police, Firefighter and Emergency Services Personnel Recognition Day."

2. Duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker and attested by the Clerk thereof, shall be transmitted to the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the members of Congress elected from this State.

POM–316. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to Clean Air Act requirements; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

Whereas, Studies by the 37-state Ozone Transport Assessment Group have demonstrated that sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide can travel up to 500 miles in the right climatic conditions, and the transport of these pollutants, generally in a northeastern pattern, can have significant impacts on the ozone problem in downwind northeast states such as New Jersey; and

Whereas, On December 3, 1999, then New Jersey Governor Whitman announced that the State would join the federal government and other states in taking legal action to require Midwestern power plants to clean up their emissions; and

Whereas, On February 14, 2002, President Bush announced his Clear Skies and Global Climate Change Initiatives which would replace current federal air pollution control rules with a national emissions cap and trade system, and as a result would likely provide Midwestern power plants, refineries and other industrial sources with an exemption from the New Source Review program; and

Whereas, Implementation of the New Source Review program would require installation of air pollution controls when older power plants refineries and other industrial facilities are expanded or significantly changed; and

Whereas, Earlier this year, New Jersey's largest utility agreed to install state-of-the-art pollution controls on two power plants in the State as part of a settlement with the United States Department of Justice and the Environmental Protection Agency regarding the New Source Review program; and

Whereas, While this action is a significant step in New Jersey's efforts to control air pollution from in-State sources, there must be strong federal enforcement of clean air standards in upwind states in order to protect the citizens of New Jersey, and out-of-State power plants should be required to install similar state-of-the-art pollution controls in order to achieve lasting improvements in air quality; and

Whereas, The current proposed federal regulatory changes to the Clean Air Act standards would significantly compromise the gains New Jersey and the nation have made in air pollution control, would undermine the efforts the United States Department of Justice has taken to enforce compliance with federal Clean Air Act requirements, and would be detrimental to the environment and the public health of citizens of this State; Now, therefore, be it

1. This House urges the President of the United States and the Administrator of the United States Environmental Protection Agency to not weaken federal Clean Air Act requirements. The President and Administrator are further urged to support the lawsuits filed by the United States Department of Justice against power plants and other facilities who have violated the requirements of the federal Clean Air Act.

Duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested by the Clerk thereof, shall be transmitted to the President and Vice-President of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the majority and minority leaders of the United States Senate and the United States Congress elected from this State, the Administrator of the United States Environmental Protection Agency, and the Commissioner of the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection.

POM–317. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to enacting legislation to permit retired members of the Armed Forces with service-connected disabilities to be paid both military retired pay and veterans' disability compensation; to the Committee on Armed Services.

ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

Whereas, An obscure 19th Century law requires military retired pay to be offset, dollar for dollar, by the amount of disability compensation received from the Department of Veterans Affairs; and

Whereas, This longstanding inequity forces thousands of disabled career military retirees to fund their own veterans' disability compensation from their earned military retired pay; and

Whereas, Retired pay and veterans' disability compensation are two entirely different compensation elements—retired pay is provided to recognize a career of arduous, uniformed service while Department of Veterans Affairs disability compensation is recompense for pain, suffering and lost future earning power due to service-connected disabilities; and

Whereas, Thousands of career officers must forfeit their entire military retired pay because this 19th Century law reduces their retirement benefit by the amount they receive in disability compensation; and

Whereas, Companion bills pending before the 107th Congress, S. 170 and H.R. 303, would permit retired members of the Armed Forces who have a service-connected disability to receive both military retired pay by reason of their years of military service and disability compensation from the Department of Veterans Affairs; and

Whereas, There is significant support in the 107th Congress for this legislation to correct the inequity, as S. 170 has 77 cosponsors and H.R. 303 has 379 cosponsors: Now, therefore, be it

1. The President of the United States and the Congress of the United States is respectfully memorialized to enact the "Retired Pay Restoration Act of 2001" as embodied in S. 170 and H.R. 303, now pending before the 107th Congress of the United States. These bills would amend Title 10 of the United States Code to permit retired members of the Armed Forces who have a service-connected disability to receive both military retired pay by reason of their years of military service and disability compensation from the Department of Veterans Affairs for their disability.

2. Duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested by the Clerk thereof, shall be transmitted to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Majority and Minority Leader of the United States Senate, the Speaker and Minority Leader of the United States House of Representatives, and every member of Congress elected from this State.

POM–318. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to noise reduction of aircraft traffic patterns over New Jersey; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

Whereas, Residents of New Jersey suffer from extreme and unwarranted levels of intrusive aircraft noise; and

Whereas, Aircraft noise deprives residents of the full use and benefit of their homes and living areas; and

Whereas, Aircraft noise contributes to the substantial lowering of property values on residences owned by New Jersey residents; and

Whereas, The Federal Aviation Administration, hereafter the "FAA," is currently undertaking a major redesign of the aircraft traffic patterns over New Jersey; and

Whereas, The FAA's stated goals for the redesign include only reducing delays affecting airline schedules, and reducing pilot and air traffic controller workloads, while enhancing safety; and

Whereas, The FAA, despite repeated public promises to substantially reduce aircraft noise as part of the redesign, has refused to include such noise reduction as a primary goal of the redesign: now, therefore, be it

1. The President and the Congress of the United States are respectfully memorialized to direct the Federal Aviation Administration to include the reduction of aircraft noise as a major goal in the redesign of aircraft traffic patterns over New Jersey.

2. Duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested by the Clerk thereof, shall be transmitted to the President and the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, every member of Congress elected from this State, the Secretary of the United States Department of Transportation, and the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration.

POM–319. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to the federal court decision ruling that recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools is unconstitutional; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

Whereas, In a 2–1 decision, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled on June 26, 2002, that the Pledge of Allegiance cannot be recited in public schools because the phrase "under God" endorses religion; and

Whereas, The words of the pledge first appeared in the periodical, The Youth's Companion, in 1892, and the pledge was officially sanctioned by the United States Congress in 1942; and

Whereas, President Dwight D. Eisenhower approved adding the words "under God" to the pledge on Flag Day, June 14, 1954; and

Whereas, In authorizing the additional words, President Eisenhower wrote that "millions of our schoolchildren will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural schoolhouse, the dedication of our nation and our people to the Almighty"; and

Whereas, Circuit Judge Ferdinand Fernandez, in his dissenting opinion, noted that such phrases as "under God" have "no tendency to establish religion in this country except in the eyes of those who most fervently would like to drive all tincture of religion out of the public life of our polity"; and

Whereas, The court decision has been roundly condemned by members of Congress from both sides of the aisle, and the Department of Justice has vowed to fight the ruling: Now, therefore, be it

1. This House strongly condemns the June 26, 2002, federal court decision declaring the Pledge of Allegiance to be unconstitutional and urges the Department of Justice to appeal the decision immediately and without reservation.

2. Duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested by the Clerk thereof, shall be transmitted to the President and Vice-President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the federal Department of Justice, and every member of Congress elected from this State.

POM–320. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to Amtrak; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION

Whereas, President David Gunn of the National Rail Passenger Corporation, Amtrak, has warned that without a loan guarantee of $200 million or similar federal support, Amtrak will run out of operating funds in the near future and will have to shut down operations; and

Whereas, While Federal support appears to be forthcoming to provide a short-term reprieve for Amtrak that will permit it to continue operations until October 1, 2002, such short-term support begs the question of the long-term support for the continuation of national rail passenger service; and

Whereas, The Federal Government under the Constitution of the United States has the responsibility for the regulation of interstate commerce and has taken on the responsibility by legislation for the creation of an Interstate Highway System and a national airport system, both of which receive substantial financial support from federal appropriations; and

Whereas, With the formation of Amtrak, the Congress of the United States emphasized the importance of a federal commitment to a national rail passenger system, but now the President of the United States and the federal administration have begun to weaken the federal commitment in favor of actions by the individual states; and

Whereas, The United States is one Nation and can ill afford a fragmented and decentralized national rail passenger transportation system; and

Whereas, The dismantling of Amtrak will not only deprive the Nation as a whole of a national rail passenger system but will create an intolerable burden on the individual states, with the Northeastern states in particular being forced to assume responsibility for a $12 billion maintenance backlog on the Northeast Corridor; and

Whereas, The cost of continuing Amtrak and providing for proper maintenance and repair of its infrastructure is modest compared to the enormous sums spent for the support of the Nation's highways and aviation system; and

Whereas, In a time of national emergency, a national rail passenger system plays an important role in the national security of the United States, as manifested by the fact that during the September 11, 2001 crisis, the rail system was the only functioning practical interstate transportation operation nationally; and

Whereas, The dismantling of the Amtrak system would have a disastrous effect on the greater New York-New Jersey metropolitan region, leading to the overburdening of an already heavily burdened road system, the paralysis of the local rail transportation system affecting local commuting into and out of New York City, exacerbating problems of air pollution, leading to economic decline or stagnation which would deleteriously affect federal tax revenues from one of the most productive and vibrant economic regions of the country: Now, therefore, be it

1. The General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, for the public policy reasons stated in the preamble of this resolution, memorializes the Congress and the President of the United States to enact a long-term solution to the Nation's rail crisis by providing for the continuation of national passenger rail service by Amtrak.

2. Duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested by the Clerk thereof, shall be transmitted to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the Majority and Minority leaders of the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives, and all other members of Congress.

POM–321. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey relative to the cable television industry; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Assembly Resolution

Whereas, The "Cable Communication Policy Act of 1984" totally deregulated the cable television industry and specifically prohibited the States from regulating either cable rates or cable programming; and

Whereas, Subsequent to the 1984 deregulation of the cable industry, rapidly escalating cable rates and declining levels of service led to the passage of the "Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992" which essentially restored governmental rate regulation of the cable industry; and

Whereas, The federal "Telecommunications Act of 1996" was adopted to promote greater competition as a means of addressing the cable industry's problems and eliminated most of the "Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992" by the end of 1999, including the phasing out of federal price controls over cable rates; and

Whereas, Following passage of the federal "Telecommunications Act of 1996," cable programming service rates have increased by over 60 percent, or of which increase zero percent is attributable to State law, and which 60 percent increase represents about seven times the aggregate rate of inflation for the past three years, according to the New Jersey Board of Public Utilities, and federal price controls over most cable rates were terminated on March 31, 1999; and

Whereas, The cable rate increases over the past several years once again indicate that a competitive free market fails to restrain the predatory practices that occur when cable television companies enjoy de facto monopolies unregulated by the areas they serve; and

Whereas, In light of the cable rate increases of the past few years, it is appropriate for Congress to reconsider the deregulation of the cable television industry as enacted by the federal "Telecommunications Act of 1996" and the "Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984" and permit States to fully regulate the cable television industry, including the regulation of cable television rates, in order to curb the anti-consumer practices of the cable company, monopolies; and

Whereas, It is altogether fitting and proper for this House, as representatives of the residents of this State, which itself established a regulatory framework for cable television in the 1972 "Cable Television Act," to call upon Congress to reconsider the deregulation of the cable television industry as enacted by the federal "Telecommunications Act of 1996" and the "Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984" and permit States to fully regulate the cable television industry, including the regulation of cable television rates: Now, therefore, be it

1. The Congress of the United States is respectfully memorialized to reconsider the deregulation of the cable television industry and permit States to fully regulate the cable television industry.

2. That duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested to by the Clerk thereof, shall be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to each Member of Congress from the State of New Jersey.

POM–322. A resolution adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts relative to anti-semitism; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Resolutions

Whereas, in 2002, 57 years after the Holocaust, anti-Semitism is still among the most enduring and pernicious forms of hate that humankind has known; and

Whereas, anti-Semitism is on the rise in Europe and many other places around the globe and Jews are being attacked in the streets, synagogues are being vandalized and cemeteries are being desecrated; and

Whereas, in many corners of the world, Jews are being demonized by political leaders, clergy and the mainstream media; and

Whereas, Jewish citizens and Jewish institutions in Massachusetts have been targeted for hate mail, hateful speech and hateful acts; and

Whereas, in the wake of this rising tide of anti-Semitism too many governments and institutions have been silent; and

Whereas, the time has come to speak out against the wave of hate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Massachusetts General Court urges the Congress of the United States to pass a resolution condemning anti-Semitism and asking other leaders, governments and citizens to speak strongly against the spread of hate; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded by the clerk of the House of Representatives to the President of the United States, the Presiding Officer of each branch of Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

POM–323. A Senate concurrent resolution adopted by Legislature of the State of Louisiana relative to imported seafood; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 16

Whereas, over the past few years there has been an influx of imported seafood being dumped into the United States of America; and

Whereas, the vast majority of these imported products have come from the countries of Thailand, India, Mexico, Ecuador and Indonesia; and

Whereas, the magazine, Quick Frozen Foods International noted in a January, 2002 article, that Asian shrimp tested in Germany had traces of an antibiotic called "chloramphenicol"; and

Whereas, this antibiotic is banned in the European Union countries because it is believed to cause bone marrow damage; and

Whereas, because the United States does not require such testing, much of this imported shrimp flooded the American market for prices much lower than American shrimp and may be in violation of anti-dumping laws; and

Whereas, such flooding of the domestic market has greatly affected the price of American shrimp to levels not seen in twenty years; and

Whereas, Louisiana residents can help Louisiana fishermen by demanding and buying Louisiana shrimp: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to impose a quota on certain imported seafood such as shrimp; be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to support, demand, and insist on testing of all imported seafood products before such products are allowed to enter the country and to require wholesalers to indicate the source and origin after purchase; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the secretary of the United States Senate and the clerk of the United States House of Representatives and to each member of the Louisiana delegation to the United States Congress.

POM–324. A Senate Joint Memorial adopted by the Legislature of the State of Colorado relative to the return of the USS Pueblo to the United States Navy; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Senate Joint Memorial 02–001

Whereas, The USS Pueblo, which was attacked and captured by the North Korean Navy on January 23, 1968, was the first United States Navy ship to be hijacked on the high seas by a foreign military force in over 150 years; and

Whereas, One member of the USS Pueblo crew, Duane Hodges, was killed in the assault while the other 82 crew members were held in captivity, often under inhumane conditions, for 11 months; and

Whereas, The USS Pueblo, an intelligence collection auxiliary vessel, was operating in international waters at the time of the capture, and therefore did not violate North Korean territorial waters; and

Whereas, The capture of the USS Pueblo has resulted in no reprisals against the government or people of North Korea and no military action was taken at the time of the vessel's capture or at any later date; and

Whereas, The USS Pueblo, though still the property of the United States Navy, has been retained by North Korea for more than 30 years, was subjected to exhibition in the North Korean cities of Wonsan and Hungham, and is now on display in Pyongyang, the capital city of North Korea; and

Whereas, United States Senator Ben Nighthorse Campbell recently began a legislative effort in Congress to demand that North Korea return the USS Pueblo to the United States Navy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Sixty-third General Assembly of the State of Colorado, the House of Representatives concurring herein:

That we, the members of the Sixty-third General Assembly, hereby memorialize Congress to demand that the USS Pueblo be returned to the United States Navy; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this Joint Memorial be transmitted to the President of the United States, George W. Bush; the United States Secretary of Defense, Donald Rumsfeld; the United States Secretary of State, Colin Powell; the United States House of Representatives; and to each member of Colorado's delegation of the United States Congress.

POM–325. A Resolution adopted by the House of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relative to funding for the National Park Service to purchase the Schwoebel Tract, which lies in the boundaries of the Valley Forge National Historical Park; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

House Resolution No. 401

Whereas, Approximately 460 acres of the 3,466 acres that comprise the Valley Forge National Historical Park are privately owned; and

Whereas, A 62-acre tract of the privately owned land is currently under consideration as the site of a subdivision for approximately 62 luxury homes; and

Whereas, The construction of homes within the Valley Forge National Historical Park will detract from the historic and cultural environment the park provides for millions of people who visit each year; and

Whereas, The owners of the 62-acre tract of land are willing to sell the land to the National park Service: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States appropriate sufficient funds for the National Park Service to purchase the privately owned 62-acre tract of land, which will help to ensure the preservation of the park as a national historic site; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the United States Senate and to the presiding officers of each house of Congress and to each member of Congress from Pennsylvania.

POM–326. A Resolution adopted by the House of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relative to Federal relief for steel industry retiree health care costs; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

House Resolution No. 488

Whereas, Much of the domestic steel industry is heavily burdened by overwhelming retiree health care costs, or legacy costs, due to the massive layoffs of the 1970s and 1980s which were necessary to make domestic steel producers some of the most efficient and competitive in this advanced global market; and

Whereas, These layoffs increased the retiree-to-employee ratio to nearly three to one and increased the difficulty for domestic steel producers to maintain benefits for retired employees; and

Whereas, An average of 10% of the costs of a ton of steel goes directly to retiree pension and health care funds for many of the largest producers of steel in the United States; and

Whereas, Approximately 600,000 retirees, surviving spouses and dependents receive health care benefits from domestic steel companies, with the largest and most vulnerable of these companies providing retiree health care benefits to approximately 100,000 retirees, surviving spouses and dependents; and

Whereas, Because 29 domestic steel companies have declared bankruptcy since the Asian financial crisis of 1998, retirees health care benefits are at risk as a cost-cutting measure; and

Whereas, Retirees displaced by plant shutdowns shoulder the burden of their medical costs as they may be unable to afford or qualify for private health insurance programs or may not qualify for Medicare coverage; and

Whereas, The United Steelworkers of America, realizing the risk to individuals and families, has called for Federal action to protect the health care benefits of domestic steelworker retirees: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania urge the President and Congress of the United States to take all necessary action to preserve the health care benefits of steel industry retirees; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of each house of Congress and to each member of Congress from Pennsylvania.

POM–327. A Joint Resolution adopted by the Assembly of the State of California relative to the Mexicali/Calexico border crossing; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Assembly Joint Resolution No. 35

Whereas, Persons wishing to cross the international border between Mexico and California have traditionally been subject to long wait times during peak periods; and

Whereas, An unfortunate byproduct of the heightened security regime implemented since the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States has been an increase in already long wait times at the border; and

Whereas, The economic well-being of the border regions in both the United States and Mexico is dependent on flows of people and goods across the border with a minimum of delay; and

Whereas, The economy of Imperial County depends heavily on shoppers from Mexico; and

Whereas, Federal officials have successfully implemented reduced border crossing times for persons qualifying for use of the Secure Electronic Network For Travelers Rapid Inspection (SENTRI) program, which provides access to a dedicated commuter land and uses automated vehicle identification technology at a limited number of United States international border crossings, including the Otay Mesa crossing near Tijuana/San Diego; and

Whereas, Persons eligible for the SENTRI program have been previously identified as low risk persons who regularly use the border crossing; and

Whereas, The SENTRI program provides law enforcement with good, solid information about program participants, and avoids the need to continuously inspect these precleared individuals; and

Whereas, It would be beneficial to commerce and tourism on both sides of the border to implement the SENTRI program at the Mexicali/Calexico border crossing in order to decrease the border wait times for both United States and Mexican citizens; and

Whereas, The government of the State of Baja California has indicated its interest in expansion of the SENTRI program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature respectfully memorializes the United States Congress and federal agencies, including the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the United States Customs Service, to take the necessary steps to implement the SENTRI program at the Mexicali/Calexico border crossing; and be it further

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Chairpersons of the House and Senate Judiciary Committees, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the United States Customs Service.

POM–328. A Senate Concurrent Resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana relative to the use of Title I funds to address the educational needs of students; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 22

Whereas, Title I of the reauthorized Elementary and Secondary Education Act, a federal aid program from which funds flow through the state education agencies to the local education agencies, is a significant funding mechanism of great value to the local school systems in Louisiana that aims to provide extra resources to improve high poverty schools and enable at-risk children to meet challenging state content and student performance standards; and

Whereas, Louisiana's total Title I allocation for 2001-2002 of over one hundred and ninety-one million dollars is distributed to local education agencies and targets eight hundred and seventy-three elementary and secondary schools with the highest percentages of children from low-income families to provide additional academic support and learning opportunities to address the academic needs for the benefit of approximately three hundred, eighty-four thousand and five hundred students throughout the state; and

Whereas, the state education agency is responsible for monitoring the effective use of Title I dollars through compliance reviews, and may, pursuant to federal regulation, temporarily withhold Title I payments to a local education agency if the state finds that a local education agency is in noncompliance with any applicable federal or state law or regulation or has been notified of a significant irregularity or problem with the administration of the funds based on a certified audit of such funds; and

Whereas, while a primary goal of Title I is to help disadvantaged students in elementary and secondary schools meet the same high standards expected of all students, continued funding is critical to the academic achievement of all children throughout the state, and any disruption or interruption of services can be devastating to financially strapped local school systems and may limit the opportunities for at-risk students to acquire the knowledge and skills necessary to succeed; and

Whereas, the Legislature of Louisiana recognizes it is ultimately the responsibility of the local education agencies to document and implement the effective use of federal dollars and meet compliance requirements through federal and state law; and

Whereas, the Legislature of Louisiana also recognizes that the consequences of any disruption of services will adversely impact the economically and educationally disadvantaged child—the child for whom the program is intended to serve: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana hereby memoralizes the Congress of the United States to request the appropriate officials at the United States Department of Education to review the federal laws and guidelines with respect to assuring that the approved use of Title I funds to address the educational needs of students is not jeopardized in cases in which the management and implementation of such funds by a local education agency are being examined; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to each member of the Louisiana Congressional delegation and to the presiding officers of the United States House of Representatives and the United States Senate.

POM-329. A Resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana relative to a tax credit for companies for the cost of converting from groundwater to reclaimed water and to provide interest free loans to municipalities to construct waste water treatment/reclamation projects; to the Committee on Finance.

SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 27

Whereas, the Federal Energy Policy Bill is being debated in Congress and energy and electricity production are vital to Louisiana; and

Whereas, merchant power plants and other energy producers currently using groundwater should be encouraged to change to alternative sources; and

Whereas, the largest producers of waste water in the state are municipalities and many of those rural municipalities are facing tougher standards from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to update their waste water treatment systems yet these municipalities lack funding to do so; and

Whereas, by creating a market for the reclaimed water, the municipalities could justify the loans to build the waste water treatment facilities; and

Whereas, currently, companies have no incentive to spend the money necessary to convert to surface water or waste water because it is cheaper to mine the pure drinking water from the ground and allowing a tax credit to business to convert to reclaimed water would allow the companies to ultimately save money and to update their water collection/cooling systems;

Whereas, updating company technology would benefit the overall efficiency of the industrial facility and the environment; and

Whereas, Louisiana farmers would also benefit from increased water resources necessary for irrigation; and

Whereas, in order for a municipality to get the interest free loan, the municipality must agree to sell the reclaimed water to industry and other buyers at a cost lower than industry pays to mine groundwater: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana memorializes the Congress of the United States to provide a tax credit to companies for the cost of converting from groundwater to reclaimed water and provide interest free loans to municipalities to construct waste water treatment/reclamation projects; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this Resolution shall be transmitted to the secretary of the United States Senate and the clerk of the United States House of Representatives and to each member of the Louisiana delegation of the United States Congress.

POM-330. A Resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Alaska relative to the Pledge of Allegiance; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE RESOLVE NO. 2

Whereas this country was founded on religious freedom by founders, many of whom were deeply religious; and

Whereas the First Amendment to the United States Constitution embodies principles intended to guarantee freedom of religion both through the free exercise of religion and by prohibiting the government's establishing a religion; and

Whereas the Pledge of Allegiance was written by Francis Bellamy, a Baptist minister, and was first published in the September 8, 1892, issue of Youth's Companion; and

Whereas, in 1954, the United States Congress added the words "under God" to the Pledge of Allegiance; and

Whereas President Eisenhower, in adding these words, said "These words will remind Americans that despite our great physical strength we must remain humble. They will help us to keep constantly in our minds and hearts the spiritual and moral principles which alone give dignity to man, and upon which our way of life is founded."; and

Whereas, for nearly 50 years, the Pledge of Allegiance has included references to the United States flag and the country; this country, has been established as a union, "under God" being dedicated to securing "liberty and justice for all"; and

Whereas, in 1954, the United States Congress believed it was acting constitutionally when it revised the Pledge of Allegiance; and

Whereas the Senate of the 107th United States Congress believes that the Pledge of Allegiance is not an unconstitutional expression of patriotism; and

Whereas patriotic songs, engravings on United States legal tender, engravings on federal buildings, and the Preamble to the Constitution of the State of Alaska also contain general references to "God"; and

Whereas, in accordance with decisions of the United States Supreme Court, public school students cannot be forced to recite the Pledge of Allegiance without violating their First Amendment rights; and

Whereas the Congress expects that the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit will rehear the case of Newdow v. U.S. Congress, en banc, and resolves to instruct the Senate Legal Counsel to seek to intervene in the case to defend the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance; be it

Resolved, That the Alaska State Senate concurs with and supports the United States Senate in challenging the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in its decision of Newdow v. U.S. Congress, en banc.

POM-331. A Senate Concurrent Resolution adopted by the Legislation of the State of Louisiana relative to voluntary prayer in public schools; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 58

Whereas, one of the founding principles of the United States of America was the free exercise of religion and religious belief; and

Whereas, the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall make no law establishing a religion, or prohibiting the free exercise of religion; and

Whereas, Article I, Section 8, of the Louisiana Constitution of 1974 similarly prohibits the enactment of law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise of religion; and

Whereas, a Joint Resolution was introduced in the 107th Congress, 1st Session, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to provide that neither the United States, nor any state shall establish an official religion, but that the people's right to pray and to recognize their religious beliefs, heritage and traditions on public property, including schools, shall not be infringed; and

Whereas, the Legislature of Louisiana has repeatedly expressed its support for the concept of voluntary prayer in public schools, including, most recently, a House Concurrent Resolution memorializing Congress to adopt and submit to the states a proposed amendment to the United State Constitution permitting prayer in schools; and

Whereas, while the United States does not have a provision for a national referendum, Congress may vote to place a national referendum on a constitutional amendment to allow prayer in public schools, thus allowing the true will of the people to be heard: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to adopt and place on the ballot a national referendum on a constitutional amendment to allow voluntary prayer in public schools; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the secretary of the United States Senate and the clerk of the United States House of Representatives and to each member of the Louisiana delegation to the United States Congress.

POM-332. A Senate Concurrent Resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana relative to the creation of a Center of Excellence in Biological and Chemical Warfare Medicine in Louisiana; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 56

Whereas, with the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon on September 11, 2001, and the anthrax attacks on Congress immediately following, Americans became acutely aware of the vulnerability of their homeland to attacks by terrorist organizations; and

Whereas, it is the duty of every level of government—federal, state, and local—to protect the citizens of this country from the consequences of all terrorist activities; and

Whereas, the resources necessary to provide this protection must be comprehensive so as to prevent, detect, or minimize any terrorist action and must be developed and be available for deployment as quickly as possible; and

Whereas, because of the state's significant investment in a public hospital system, the close proximity of the Louisiana State University and Tulane University Medical Schools, its widely recognized research facilities at the Pennington Biomedical Research Facility and the Louisiana State University Veterinary School and Agricultural Experiment Stations, Louisiana is uniquely positioned to conduct and coordinate research, clinical trials and applications, education, and outreach activities aimed at developing detection programs, prevention programs, and defenses that would mitigate and minimize the affect that biological and chemical agents would have on people, livestock, and agricultural crops; and

Whereas, the utilization of the vast compendium of research, clinical applications, and education resources that already exist in Louisiana would facilitate the rapid development of vaccines, pharmaceuticals, and antidotes for the protection of humans, livestock, and agricultural crops from biological and chemical agents deployed by terrorist groups; and

Whereas, United States Senator Mary Landrieu and members of the Louisiana Congressional Delegation have undertaken efforts to create a Center of Excellence in Biological and Chemical Warfare Medicine which would lead to significant investment of federal funds in public health, animal health, and agricultural crop clinical applications, education, and research infrastructure which already exist in Louisiana thereby making Louisiana the preeminent location in the country for the development of protocols for surveillance, detection, prevention, and treatment for the protection of human and animal life and agricultural crops; and

Whereas, the designation of Louisiana for such a center would maximize the opportunity for the immediate development of appropriate and effective responses to biological and chemical terrorist activity and, at the same time, provide new economic opportunities for the state in an area that is in the forefront of Louisiana's new economic vision; and

Whereas, the state of Louisiana has undertaken efforts to become a national leader in the area of biomedical research: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the Legislature of Louisiana hereby expresses full support to the efforts of the Louisiana Congressional Delegation for the creation of a Center of Excellence in Biological and Chemical Warfare Medicine in Louisiana; be it further

Resolved, That the Senate of the Legislature of Louisiana further expresses that, utilizing the state's vast array of public and private clinical, research, and educational facilities, such a facility is in the best interest of the citizens of this state and this nation; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this Resolution shall be transmitted to the secretary of the United States Senate, to the clerk of the United States House of Representatives, and to each member of the Louisiana delegation to the United States Congress.

POM-333. A Resolution adopted by the House of the General Assembly of the State of North Carolina relative to a Federal/State partnership to use local county veterans service officers to assist the United States Department of Veterans' Affairs in eliminating the veterans claims processing backlog; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 1780

Whereas, the United States presently has a population of over 25 million veterans from its previous wars, with the majority of that veteran population from World War II and the Korean War; and

Whereas, the World War II and Korean War veteran population is presently over 70 years of age, and that group is passing away at the rate of 1,000 veterans per day; and

Whereas, the United States government has acknowledged its responsibility to provide medical care or compensation for medical problems, as well as other benefits, to those veterans who served their country in time of war; and

Whereas, the United States Department of Veterans Affairs is charged with administering the federal benefits program for veterans; and

Whereas, there presently exists a backlog of over 601,000 claims, some of which have been outstanding for one year or more; and

Whereas, a significant portion of these claims involve World War II and Korean War veterans, and despite determined efforts by the United States Department of Veterans Affairs to eliminate this backlog, the backlog continues; and

Whereas, there exists a trained group of individuals known as county veterans service officers located in 37 of the 50 states, representing 700 countries and a workforce of over 2,400 full-time local government employees; and

Whereas, these county veterans service officers were established in 1945 after World War II for the purpose of helping returning veterans reenter civilian life, and have continued to do so for all veterans of all wars since then; and

Whereas, these county veterans service officers are highly trained individuals who have continued to provide assistance to all veterans for over 50 years and are already familiar with the United States Department of Veterans Affairs claim policies and procedures; and

Whereas, for example, in North Carolina county veterans service officers annually assist North Carolina veterans obtain monetary benefits in excess of $812,000,000 by assisting these veterans in filing over 50,000 claims annually with the United States Department of Veterans Affairs; and

Whereas, this claims processing backlog needs to be urgently reduced while our World War II and Korean War veterans are still with us; and

Whereas, the United States Department of Veterans Affairs could enter into a partnership with state and local governments to utilize these highly trained county veterans service officers to eliminate the present claims processing backlog by expanding the county veterans service officers' roles; and

Whereas, this would be a cost-effective way of reducing the claims processing backlog by eliminating the need for a substantial increase in federal employees; and

Whereas, these county veterans service officers, as represented by the North Carolina Association of County Veterans Service Officers and the National Association of County Veterans Service Officers, have offered to assist the United States Department of Veterans Affairs in exchange for block grants to the various states based upon each state's veterans population to compensate county veterans service officers for their expanded role; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives:

Section 1. The House of Representatives urges the Congress of the United States and the President to support and enact legislation that would establish a federal/state partnership to use the knowledge and skills of the local county veterans service officers to assist the United States Department of Veterans Affairs in eliminating the veterans claims processing backlog in order that America's veterans can take advantage of the benefits that the United States has authorized for them for their faithful and loyal service to a grateful nation.

Section 2. The Principal Clerk shall transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Majority Leader of the Senate, and to each Senator and Representative from North Carolina in the Congress of the United States.

Section 3. This resolution is effective upon adoption.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 3008. A bill to amend the Higher Education Act of 1965 to expand the loan forgiveness and loan cancellation programs for teachers, to provide loan forgiveness and loan cancellation programs for nurses, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, today I, along with my good friend from Alaska, Senator STEVENS, am introducing legislation that will help bolster two critical components of Iowa's and the Nation's economic future: healthcare and education.

Across Iowa and America, we face a critical and worsening shortage of nurses and teachers. By 2010 there will be a shortage of 725,000 nurses. By 2020, that shortage will increase to 1.2 million as the baby boomers begin to retire and need more care.

It's much the same case for teachers. In Iowa, 40 percent of our teachers will be eligible to retire in the next 10 years. And 17 percent of Iowa first year teachers leave the classroom after only one year. This is almost twice the national average. We'll need more than 2 million teachers nationwide just to replace the teachers that retire or leave the profession.

Clearly, a shortage of nurses or teachers will have a profound impact on the quality of education for our children and the quality of health care for every Iowan. We have to do more to attract young people to these difficult yet rewarding careers.

One reason young people aren't taking on teaching or nursing is because they're buried in college loan debt. According to the "Burden of Borrowing", a report by the United States Public Interest Research Group, 64 percent of students graduated in 1999–2000 with Federal education loan debt. Further, the average student loan debt has nearly doubled over the past eight years to $16,928. Young people simply can't pursue careers that are critical to Iowa's and America's future because their college debt causes them to enter into unmanageable repayment plans.

Earlier this year, I spoke with college students from schools across central Iowa. Many of these students will walk away from college with a diploma in one hand and a $20,000 student loan bill in the other. When students loan debt keeps our kids from becoming Iowa's next teachers and nurses there's something very wrong with America's priorities.

That's why I, along with my good friend from Alaska, Senator STEVENS, am introducing a plan to offer up to $17,500 of loan forgiveness to students who go into teaching or nursing for at least 5 years. Under our plan, students would get needed relief from loan debt and Iowa and America would get its next generation of nurses and teachers. That's a good investment in education, health care, and our nation's future.

I think we've got a good chance of moving this proposal forward. President Bush has proposed a similar plan aimed just at teachers in a few subject areas. However, I am aware that school districts throughout the United States are faced with problems attracting and retaining teachers in more than just the areas of special education, math and science. Since the White House has embraced the general approach, I am hopeful they'll also support our broader plan for teachers and nurses. It's a common sense proposal that's focused on Iowa and America's future.

I ask unanimous consent that letters of support for our legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN NURSES ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, August 30, 2002.

Hon. TOM HARKIN,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HARKIN: I write on behalf of the American Nurses Association (ANA) to express gratitude and support for your intent to introduce legislation to provide loan forgiveness and loan cancellation programs for registered nurses.

ANA is the only full-service association representing the nation's registered nurses through its 54 constituent member nurse associations. The ANA represents registered nurses of all educational preparation in all practice settings.

ANA supports your legislation because it aims to address the impending nursing shortage. This shortage is projected to soon reach crisis proportions, just as the baby boom population begins to place great demands on the health care system.

A reason for the emerging nurse shortage is a decreasing number of young people entering the nursing profession. As you may well be aware, enrollments in nursing programs have dropped by 17 percent since 1995. Current projections show that the number of nurses per capita will fall 20 percent below requirements by 2020. Your legislation will help reverse the trend and encourage entry into the profession.

As nurses are the largest single group of health care professionals in America, the nurse shortage threatens the very fabric of our health care delivery system. An adequately prepared and supported nursing workforce is essential for the health of our nation.

ANA thanks you for your strong support of nursing issues and for introducing this important legislation.

Sincerely,

ROSE GONZALEZ,
Director, Government Affairs.

Hon. TED STEVENS,
Hart Senate Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS HARKIN AND STEVENS: The undersigned members of the ANSR Alliance (Americans for Nursing Shortage Relief) strongly support your draft bill to amend the Higher Education Act of 1965 and increase nursing education loan opportunities within the Department of Education. As delineated in the bill, this positive move to bring more individuals into the nursing profession and support the creation of nurse educators will be accomplished through loan cancellation and forgiveness after five years of service in a clinical setting or at an accredited school of nursing. We greatly appreciate your understanding of the need for multiple programs throughout the federal government to alleviate the critical nursing shortage that is facing us today and which will continue to do so unless we stem its growth.

A key issue in ensuring public access to high quality nursing services is the growing faculty shortage and implications for the preparation of new nursing professionals. The median age of nurse faculty is 52 years old, and the impending retirement of seasoned faculty over the next decade will significantly impact the ability of schools and universities to sustain quality nursing educational programs that prepare an adequate supply of nurses to meet the Nation's needs. The educational incentives described in the proposed legislation hold promise as effective tools to insure monies are available to train critically needed nurse faculty.

The ANSR Alliance thanks you for your commitment to advancing an innovative solution to help alleviate the nursing shortage in the United States. We look forward to working with you to ensure passage of this important piece of legislation.

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Washington, DC, September 25, 2002.

Re support of the Teacher and Nurse Support Act of 2002.

Hon. TOM HARKIN,
Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HARKIN, On behalf of the American Council on Education (ACE) and the organization listed below, I thank you for introducing legislation to expand and extend loan forgiveness and cancellation programs for teachers and nurses. We are grateful to you for working so hard to alleviate the financial burden of America's students, particularly our teachers and nurses. These highly valued but underpaid professionals are educated and prepared in our institutions. We will work with you in building support for these good measures and we will wholeheartedly support your bill when it comes up for consideration.

Providing financial incentives to nursing and teaching students via federal loan programs is one of the best ways to attract and retain talented individuals to pursue academic study and careers in these important fields.

As individuals retire and the vacancies for nurses and teachers grow, the United States will need to replace and supplement these essential vocations with qualified personnel. These types of programs and incentives are especially helpful for individuals who choose to dedicate their time and energy to careers that are rarely financially lucrative.

Thank you again for your leadership on this important issues.

Sincerely,

DAVID WARD,
President.

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, September 26, 2002.

Senator TOM HARKIN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HARKIN: On behalf of the National Education Association's (NEA) 2.7 million members, we would like to express our support for the Teacher and Nurse Support Act of 2002.

We are very pleased that your legislation seeks to address the nation's growing teacher shortage by providing student loan forgiveness for individuals who enter the profession. New teacher quality standards coupled with a national teacher shortage make attracting and retaining quality teachers even more important, particilary in high-poverty areas. Unfortunately, too many of today's students rely on loans in order to afford higher education. The resulting debt burden often limits career choices and prevents many talented students from pursuing careers in public service, including as teachers.

By expanding loan forgiveness and targeting it more toward teachers in high poverty schools, rather than toward limited academic disciplines, your bill will help encourage talented individuals to enter the teaching profession and to bring their skills to schools with the greatest need. In addition, by providing for mandatory spending, the bill will ensure that teachers who qualify will receive the loan forgiveness they need.

We thank you for your leadership on this important issue and look forward to continuing to work with you in support of children and public education.

Sincerely,

DIANE SHUST,
Director of Government Relations.
RANDALL MOODY,
Manager of Federal Policy and Politics.

By Mr. WELLSTONE (for himself, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. KENNEDY, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mrs. CARNAHAN, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. BAYH, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. DODD, Mr. REED, Ms. CANTWELL, Mrs. BOXER, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. CORZINE, Mr. REID, Mr. SCHUMER, Ms. STABENOW, Mr. LEAHY, and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. 3009. A bill to provide econonmic security for America's workers; read the first time.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I am proud to introduce, on behalf of myself and a large and bipartisan group of my colleagues, the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Act of 2002. I want to especially acknowledge the hard, really the relentless work, in particular of Senator CLINTON and Senator KENNEDY on this issue. They care deeply about the plight of hard-working men and women in their States and around the country, who are struggling, through no fault of their own, to deal with the effects of our flagging economy. I commend their work.

We cannot have a secure Nation if we do not address issues of our economic security as well.

Working men and women around the country and in Minnesota, blue collar and white collar, are hurting.

The economy, battered by corporate accountability scandals, plummeting stock prices, and now flagging consumer confidence, is deteriorating.

And the jobs simply are not there. Minnesota has lost more than 40,000 jobs in the past 18 months. There are currently 123,000 Minnesotans unemployed. In the second quarter of this year, unemployed workers in Minnesota looking for jobs outnumbered unfilled jobs by 2–1.

The national picture is no different. Nationally, more than 2 million jobs have been lost over the last 18 months. We have more than 8 million men and women out of work. This is the only Administration in the past 50 years that has presided over a decline in private sector jobs.

What's more, long term unemployment is up sharply. Nationally, nearly 1 in five of the 8 million unemployed workers have been out of work for 6 months or more. Between May and July of this year, around 900,000 workers exhausted the extended unemployment benefits made available through the unemployment insurance extension in March. By the end of 2002 we expect over 2 million workers to exhaust these benefits.

In Minnesota, through the end of July, over 17,000 workers had exhausted the benefits that we temporarily extended back in March of this year, with thousands more likely to exhaust in the future.

That is why we are announcing today the introduction of the "Economic Security Act of 2002." It does the following: Extends, through July 2003, the temporary extended benefits program, due to expire on December 31st. Provides another 13 weeks of extended benefits for workers running out of benefits in all states and another 20 weeks in high unemployment states.

This mirrors the benefit extensions signed into law by Bush, Sr.

The triggers used to determine "high unemployment" are: A 4 percent Adjusted Insured Unemployment Rate (AUIR) or a 6 percent Total Unemployment Rate (TUR).

The AUIR and the TUR are exactly the same triggers used in the early 90's. The levels are different to reflect the new reality of a significantly lower natural unemployment rate. [In the 90's we used a 5 percent AUIR and a 9 percent TUR, virtually no states would trigger at these levels today].

In the 90's we extended benefits 5 times, by large bi-partisan votes. Three of those votes (91–2; 94–2; and 93–3) were during Bush 1.

And the need is even greater now. By year's end we expect 2.2 million workers to have exhausted. In 1992, for a comparable period, there were only 1.4 million workers who exhausted benefits.

The need is urgent—we should pass this measure immediately.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, on September 12, 2001, hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers woke up to a changed world, thousands had lost family, friends and co-workers to the terrorist attacks of September 11 and hundreds of thousands more New Yorkers had lost their jobs. America watched the scenes of New York and felt pride in the firefighters, the police officers, the emergency workers, and the construction workers who had all fled to Ground Zero to help with recovery.

The images that our Nation did not see as prominently were the faces of the hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers who were left jobless. There were the workers whose jobs were literally destroyed when the Twin Towers collapsed, the janitors, the doormen, the waiters and waitresses, the secretaries, and messengers. Or, the workers who did not work in lower Manhattan, but who felt the ripple effect of the so-called frozen zone, primarily the hotel workers and small businesses owners.

In the months following September 11, these individuals streamed into my office and called on the phone pleading for my assistance. At first, New York was able to offer displaced workers needed assistance through regular unemployment insurance, UI. And, for those workers who did not qualify for regular UI, either because they worked for a small business or they were new employees, they were able to receive Disaster Unemployment Assistance, DUA, provided through the Federal Emergency Management Administration, FEMA.

In September 2001, the unemployment rate in New York City was 6.3 percent. And, in the period following September 2001, this rate began to spike up such that we experienced unemployment rates that we had not seen since the recession of the early 1990s. In December 2001, the unemployment rate rose to 7.4 percent, 2.4 percent above the national average for the same period. In March 2002, the unemployment rate climbed to 7.5 percent and in June 2002 it reached 8 percent. New York City lost 150,000 jobs in the aftermath of September 11 and the City is not expected to rebound until 2004. New York City was not alone, New York State saw a climbing unemployment rate for the same period. In September 2001, the unemployment rate in the state was at 5.2 percent; it went up to 5.7 percent in December 2001, to 5.9 percent in March 2002, and to 6.1 percent in June 2002.

Once it became clear that the economy was not going to recover quickly and that it was going to take New York State and New York City years to rebuild the economy, I immediately began to fight for the extension of Unemployment Insurance and Disaster Unemployment Assistance so that New Yorkers could receive a small bit of short-term economic security while they searched for jobs. On November 1, 2001, I introduced a bill to extend Disaster Unemployment Assistance for an additional 13-weeks and, at the same time, I urged the Congressional Leadership to include an extension of regular unemployment insurance in the economic stimulus package.

After sustained work on these bills, I was pleased in March 2002 to join my colleagues in voting for an economic stimulus package that included a 13-week extension of Unemployment Insurance and, in the same month, I was pleased that we passed the bill to extend Disaster Unemployment Assistance for 13 more weeks.

These extensions, however, were short-lived. The economy continued to weaken with corporate scandals and little job growth.

In June, I started to hear from thousands of my constituents who were still out of work and concerned that their extended unemployment benefits would soon run out. They were frightened and unsettled and looking to me to help. I saw that this was a serious problem for many New Yorkers so I introduced a bill on July 19, 2002, to provide for another 13-week extension of unemployment insurance. This bill, S. 2714, garnered eight co-sponsors. I also introduced a companion bill, S. 2715, to extend Disaster Unemployment Assistance. Six of my colleagues joined me in co-sponsoring it. I also worked with my colleagues on the House to introduce a companion bill. Rep. CHARLIE RANGEL, from New York City, introduced H.R. 5089, which received 34 co-sponsors, including fourteen members of the New York Congressional delegation.

The need to help struggling workers in New York and throughout the Nation, however, was not breaking through. On September 13, 2002, I made my case for the need to extend unemployment insurance through an op-ed in the New York Times, which I would like to submit for the RECORD today. In this article, I refer to Felix Batista, a father of four who lost his job as a result of September 11 and has not been able to get back on his feet. Felix came to Washington to testify at a HELP Committee hearing on September 12, 2002, and told his story to all the members of the Committee. I was pleased to meet with him and the hundreds of other unemployed New Yorkers who came to town to ask that Congress extend unemployment benefits.

On September 15, 2002, I appeared on Meet the Press with Tim Russert and again mentioned the dramatic rise in long-term unemployment and the need to extend benefits and help those who are suffering as a result of the economy. Last week, I delivered a floor statement on this bill to again reinforce the message that I have been trying to get out to all of my colleagues. And yesterday, I worked with Senator KENNEDY to organize a press conference to draw attention to this issue. There, I introduced Vera Matty, a former executive assistant at BMG who lost her job last November as a result of the recession.

Today, 24 of my colleagues and I are introducing a bill to extend Unemployment Insurance for another 13 weeks and 20 weeks for states like New York that are suffering from high unemployment. In addition, today the Environment and Public Works Committee approved my bill to extend Disaster Unemployment Assistance for another 13 weeks. I am pleased that the EPW Committee is taking action on this bill, S. 2715, and I hope that the Senate will move quickly to approve it.

New Yorkers are suffering. We have suffered a double blow as a result of September 11 and the recession. And on September 20, 2002 there was an article in the New York Times stating that New York City's poverty rate is growing for the first time in five years.

This economy was in a recession on September 10. It was devastated on September 11 and the people who have exhausted their unemployment benefits need our help now.

Too many Americans are out of work and having a hard time providing for their families. Too many have lost their jobs and watched their pensions and retirement securities disappear because of the illegal and unethical and inexplicable behavior of corporate executives. And despite their steadfast efforts to find work and their overwhelming desire to get back to work, they remain out of work and struggle to make ends meet.

In New York, there are 135,000 New Yorkers who have exhausted their benefits. Across the country, the number of people who have been unemployed for 6 months or longer has almost doubled from 900,000 to 1.5 million in the last year. And that number is expected to increase to 2.2 million by December.

And what has Congress done to ease Americans financial burden during these uncertain times? We have extended benefits only once. Contrast that with the recession of the early 90's when Congress extended temporary benefits five times. This year, even in the wake of massive terrorist attacks on our own soil, we have extended benefits only once, and once is not enough.

Congress must extend unemployment insurance and disaster unemployment assistance, each for an additional 13 weeks. With more people losing their benefits every day, these extensions have to be passed before Congress adjourns.

Extending unemployment insurance is not just the right thing to do; it is also the smart thing. According to a 1999 Department of Labor study, unemployment insurance stimulates the economy. Every dollar spent on unemployment insurance adds $2.5 to the Gross Domestic Product. Unemployment Insurance acts as a stimulus because it puts money into the hands of people who are likely to spend it immediately? They have to buy food. They have to pay rent. They have to pay their car payments. So the money goes right into the economy, and it provides a stimulus.

Today, the outlook for job seekers is grim. When President Bush took office back in January of 2001; there was approximately 1 job seeker for every job. In just a little over a year, those numbers have changed to nearly 1 job opening for every 3 applicants. The number of people who cannot find jobs for six months or longer, has grown by almost 90 percent in the past year.

In fact, the share of the unemployed today who have been without work for more than 26 weeks exceeds that of the recessions of the early 90s and the early 80s. But only looking at the unemployment rate does not paint a complete picture of the economy. My constituents describe an endless job search—the hopeless feeling that comes from looking for a job for months and months without success.

Two years ago, America was on the right track when it came to the economy: 22 million new jobs, budget surpluses, and historic growth. For reasons that escape me, we threw all that good work away. Now we're back into deficits. We're not creating jobs. And we're not taking care of the unemployed.

It's time for us to extend benefits just as we did during the recession in the early 90's, and stimulate the economy. People are hurting and they are running out of benefits and they need Congress to act now. We must not adjourn until we pass these needed extensions of unemployment insurance.

I ask unanimous consent that the New York Times article of September 20, 2002 be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sept. 20, 2002]

HELPING THE JOBLESS

(By Hillary Rodham Clinton)

For 23 years, Felix Batista rode the elevator up 106 floors to work as a member of the wait staff at the Windows on the World restaurant. On Sept. 11, everything changed. Mr. Batista was on vacation with his family, and that decision saved his life. That day, he lost 73 coworkers and his job.

While the first anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks has come and gone, in New York the needs born out of that tragedy remain. Each step that we take—whether it is investing $20.9 billion for cleanup and recovery or financing programs to track the health of rescue workers and volunteers at ground zero—will bring New York closer to recovery.

But today, the city's unemployment rate has skyrocketed to 8 percent. Across the state, 553,000 New Yorkers are out of work, with company layoffs and plant closings happening everywhere from Niagara Falls to Rochester. Now 135,000 New Yorkers like Mr. Batista have exhausted their unemployment benefits and are struggling to pay their bills.

At this time last year, 800,000 Americans had been out of work for six months or longer. That number has nearly doubled to 1.5 million and it is expected to increase to more than 2 million by December.

Congress must act quickly to extend unemployment insurance and disaster unemployment assistance, each for an additional 13 weeks. With more people losing their benefits every day, these extensions have to be passed before Congress adjourns.

During the recession of the early 90's, Congress extended temporary benefits five times. This year, even in the wake of massive terrorist attacks on our own soil, we have extended benefits only once, and once is not enough.

The economy was already in a recession on Sept. 1. It was devastated on Sept. 11, and is stalled now. Some forecasters say we are experiencing a "jobless recovery"—one in which stockbrokers, electricians, insurance agents, computer technicians, textile workers and restaurant workers have formed lines many blocks long to attend job fairs. New revelations about corporate irresponsibility and illegality have added more doubt to an already weakened economy.

Extending unemployment insurance would put money into the hands of the very people who will turn right around and put it back into our economy. In 1999, the Department of Labor found that when unemployment insurance is extended, every dollar in benefits generates $2.15 in gross domestic product. Giving more purchasing power to the more than 8 million Americans who are currently unemployed would be a powerful stimulus for our economy.

After Sept. 11, it was clear we needed a serious push for homeland security. Now we need to restore a measure of economic security to all Americans, and extending unemployment benefits is a responsible and affordable way to do so.

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 3011. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to establish programs to encourage economic growth in the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the MEGA Safe Act. Maximum Economic Growth for America Through Safety Improvements.

Safer roads save lives. Improving traffic and roadway safety is one of the biggest challenges facing the government today. Traffic deaths are consistently one of the top ten causes of deaths each year. Accidents involving motor vehicles affect all of us.

This bill is only a beginning in our Nation's efforts to curb roadway accidents and deaths, in a way that best addresses the needs of our States. .

A large cause of accidents is the poor quality of signs in and around crosswalks, school and bicycle crossings. Highway signs marking pedestrian, bicycle, and school zone crossings help to alert motorists to the increased risks associated with these locations.

This bill establishes a grant program to improve safety at pedestrian, school and bicycle crossings by marking them with fluorescent yellow-green, signs. FYG signs are currently the most reflective signs available.

The Secretary of Transportation is directed to set aside $25 million each fiscal year from the Surface Transportation Program to finance these safety improvement grants. The funds may be obligated for eligible projects located on any public road.

I've been hearing from County Commissioners from Montana as well as other States, about how much they need direct funding for local roads. These localities are hard pressed for funds and many of these roads are unsafe. This bill would establish a pilot program, at $200 million annually from fiscal year 2004-2009, to address safety on rural local roads. Funds could be used only on local roads and rural minor collectors, roads that are not Federal-aid highways.

The program does not affect distribution of funds among States, as funds will be distributed to each of the 50 States in accord with their relative formula share under 23 U.S.C. 105. Funds could be used only for projects or activities that have a safety benefit. By January 1, 2009 the Secretary of Transportation is to report on progress under the provision and whether any modifications are recommended.

This bill takes a different approach to the issue of aggressive driving. Rather than sanctioning drivers who display aggressive behavior, this section seeks to lessen that negative behavior by removing some of the frustration that causes that behavior.

This section applies to all Federal interstates. It names the left lane as the "National Passing Lane." It requires all vehicles to use the left lane for passing only. It further requires that all drivers allow other vehicles to pass them in the left lane. I believe that one of the big frustrations of drivers in this country is being held up by someone going slow in the left lane. It contributes to driver aggression and to congestion. The MEGA Safe Act seeks to alleviate that.

An amount of no less than $1 million will be given to each State each year of the bill, 6 years, to educate the driving public about this new law and the proper behavior.

Each State will decide how to best enforce this law, for example, enforcement of ticketable offenses such as if a driver does not allow another to pass or the driver is holding up the left lane with a line of cars behind him.

Additionally, the bill funds a study to make recommendations on instituting measures that will help the federal government and states teach motorists and truck drivers how to effectively share the road with each other.

Recently the American Automobile Association, AAA, unveiled a study that shows that the majority of highway crashes that involved trucks are caused by the car or cars involved.

MEGA Safe would give $1 million to the American Trucking Associations, ATA, and AAA to issue a report making recommendations on how the Federal and State governments can better teach car drivers and more carriers how to share the road.

It requires a preliminary report in a year and the final report a year later.

Finally, the MEGA Safe Act would address Work Zone Safety by ensuring that, for each project that uses Federal funds, a trained and certified person would be given the responsibility for assuring that the traffic control plan is effectively administered. This would help reduce the number of deaths occurring in work zone safety areas.

The MEGA Safe Act is by no means a comprehensive safety proposal, but I believe that these ideas are a good foundation for our safety policies as we embark on the Reauthorization of TEA 21.

By Mr. DODD:

S. 3012. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to exclude from income and employment taxes and wage withholding property tax rebates and other benefits provided to volunteer firefighters and emergency medical responders; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today with my colleague Senator LIEBERMAN to introduce legislation that would amend the Internal Revenue Code to exclude property tax abatements, provided by local governments to volunteer firefighters and emergency medical responders, from the definition of income and wages. Last week, Congressman JOHN LARSON of Connecticut, the chief author of this proposal, introduced identical legislation in the House.

This bill would allow local governments around the country the opportunity to provide incentives, such as property tax abatements, to their volunteer firefighters and emergency medical responders. These incentives will help local governments recruit local volunteer firefighters and emergency medical responders in order to ensure their communities are adequately prepared to respond to emergencies.

Police officers, firefighters, and emergency service workers are America's front-line defenders in the face of fires, medical emergencies, terrorist threats, incidents with hazardous materials and other emergencies. Many of them are salaried employees of their respective State or local government. Many of them are volunteers, as well. Many States and localities lack adequate resources to recruit these vital public servants and therefore to fully respond to the full range of possible threats this country faces.

Many small towns cannot afford full-time paid firefighters, therefore a majority of municipalities and counties throughout the country depend on volunteer firefighters and volunteer emergency service workers to cover their front lines. Every day, volunteers throughout the country make a commitment, on top of their work schedules, to put their lives on the line for their communities. Volunteer firefighters comprise 75 percent of firefighters in our country. Unfortunately, statistics show that the number of volunteer firefighters and emergency responders have been declining over the years at an alarming rate. The number of volunteer firefighters around the country has declined by 5 to 10 percent since 1983, while the number of emergency calls made has sharply increased.

Many local governments recruit and retain volunteer firefighters and emergency service workers by offering volunteers a property tax abatement that directly reduces their property taxes. For example, Connecticut enacted a law in 1999 allowing municipalities to offer abatements of up to $1,000 per year on local taxes to firefighters, emergency medical technicians, paramedics or ambulance drivers. This abatement has helped local fire department in their volunteer recruitment efforts throughout the state.

Despite these successful recruitment efforts, the IRS recently ruled that property tax abatements to volunteers should be treated as wages and income. This ruling would pose real hardship on firefighters and the communities where they live and work, in Connecticut and in many other States, as well. While State and local governments are working to increase incentives to volunteer, this ruling would undermine those efforts. Some may argue that volunteering for the community should be without any compensation, including abatements. However, the reality is that when both heads of household hold full-time employment, it is often too difficult for them to take time away from their families without some form of compensation. A $1,000 property tax break is not a large request for the great service these men and women provide to our communities. These men and women risk their lives for others. The least we can do is allow states and towns to offer them modest incentives to serve. For some, counting this abatement as income may put them in a higher tax bracket, therefore forcing them to pay substantially more in taxes. Also, because of the extra paperwork required and costs due to the IRS decision, some municipalities are having to reconsider providing abatement programs. For many towns and municipalities it would be entirely too expensive to have to both pay FICA taxes, and lose property tax revenues. Municipalities across the nation have enough trouble recruiting volunteer firefighters and emergency medical personnel without also having to face obstacles from the IRS.

This ruling undermines the good intentions and creative efforts of many localities. If our municipalities are willing to forgo their local tax revenues in order to ensure they have enough volunteer firefighters and emergency service providers to protect their communities, and if members of the community are doing their part by volunteering, then we, the Federal government, should do our part and support local efforts to ensure that all our communities have adequate protection.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in supporting this legislation so that we can ensure that state and local governments have the flexibility to design and implement recruiting and retention programs that benefit not only the volunteer firefighters and emergency medical providers, but also the communities they protect.

S. 3013. A bill to amend the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 to extend and modify the reimbursement of State and local funds expended for emergency health services furnished to undocumented aliens; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to once again join my good friend from Arizona, Senator KYL, in introducing a bill to address a critical issue affecting our State, and other border States. Today we are introducing the Local Emergency Health Services Reimbursement Act of 2002 in order to provide appropriate Federal reimbursement to States and localities whose budgets are disproportionately affected by the emergency health costs associated with illegal immigration.

Arizona and other border States now face a medical and financial crisis. A report released today by the U.S./Mexico Border Counties Coalition found that our Nation's border hospitals spent close to $190 million in 2000 to provide health care to illegal immigrants—$31 million of which was spent by hospitals in Arizona alone. Clearly, the staggering cost of providing medical care to illegal immigrants further burdens an already challenged medical system.

The Federal Government maintains the sole authority to control immigration in this country. Despite that fact, the Federal Government often fails to take financial responsibility for the costs associated with immigration. Much of the financial burden has shifted to State and local governments.

Compounding the problem, Federal law requires hospital emergency rooms to accept and treat all patients in need of medical care, regardless of immigration status. Unfortunately, this mandate does not ensure that these hospitals receive adequate compensation for the care they provide. Recently, this growing problem in the Southwest has been exacerbated by the increasingly desperate measures taken by undocumented aliens to cross our border with Mexico.

The Local Emergency Health Services Reimbursement Act of 2002 would modify and extend federal funding to the States, local governments, and health care providers for medical costs that arise from the uncompensated treatment of illegal immigrants. Such funding previously flowed to all 50 States, the District of Columbia, and several U.S. territories. In fiscal year 2000 alone, approximately 360 local jurisdictions across the United States applied for these Federal monies. However these funds expired in 2001, and States and local governments are now suffering as a result.

I have long worked to bolster enforcement against illegal immigration along our Southwest border, and I will continue to do so. However, I believe that States and local communities should not be left to foot the bill for what is a Federal responsibility. Although our bill gives special consideration to States with unusually high concentrations of illegal aliens and States with high concentrations of apprehended undocumented aliens, it would benefit communities across the Nation. As my colleagues know, illegal immigrants who successfully transit our Southwest border rapidly disperse throughout the United States. Although this situation is most critical in our border regions, if left unaddressed, it will surely become a national emergency. I hope the Senate will act expeditiously on this important legislation to alleviate those pressures by compensating State and local governments and health care providers for the costs they incur as unwitting hosts to undocumented aliens.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . REORGANIZATION AUTHORITY.

(a) EXPEDITED PROCEDURES.—

(1) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section, the following definitions shall apply:

(A) AGENCY.—The term "agency" shall have the meaning given such term in section 181(1).

(B) IMPLEMENTATION BILL.—The term "implementation bill" means a bill—

(i) introduced as provided under subsection (e)(1); and

(ii) containing the proposed legislation included in the reorganization plan submitted to Congress under paragraph (3).

(C) CALENDAR DAY.—The term "calendar day" means a calendar day other than one on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a date certain.

(2) IN GENERAL.—During the first 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, if the President determines that changes in the organization of the Department, requiring a change in law, are necessary to carry out any policy set forth in this Act, the President shall prepare a reorganization plan, including proposed legislation to implement the plan, specifying the reorganizations that the President determines are necessary. Any such plan may only provide for—

(A) the abolition of all or a part of an agency transferred into the Department, provided that all functions vested by law in the agency are preserved within the Department;

(B) the elimination of a statutory position transferred into the Department, provided that all functions vested by law in the position are preserved within the Department;

(C) the creation of a new agency or subagency within the Department;

(D) the consolidation or coordination of the whole or a part of an agency within the Department, or of the whole or a part of the functions thereof, with the whole or a part of another agency within the Department, provided that all functions vested by law in the affected agencies are preserved within the Department; or

(E) the transfer within the Department of functions that were transferred into the Department.

(3) TRANSMITTAL.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The President shall transmit to Congress the reorganization plan, which shall include a detailed explanation.

(B) TIMING.—The reorganization plan shall be delivered to both Houses on the same day and to each House while it is in session, except that no more than 2 plans may be pending before Congress at one time.

(4) CONTENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The transmittal message of the reorganization plan shall—

(i) include an estimate of any reduction or increase in expenditures (itemized so far as practicable);

(ii) include detailed information addressing the impacts of the reorganization on the employees of any agency affected by the plan, and what steps will be taken to mitigate any impacts of the plan on the employees of the agency; and

(iii) describe any improvements in homeland security management, delivery of Federal services, execution of the laws, and increases in efficiency of Government operations, which it is expected will be realized as a result of the reorganizations included in the plan.

(B) IMPLEMENTATION.—In addition, the transmittal message shall include an implementation section which shall—

(i) describe in detail—

(I) the actions necessary or planned to complete the reorganization; and

(II) the anticipated nature and substance of any orders, directives, and other administrative and operations actions which are expected to be required for completing or implementing the reorganization; and

(ii) contain a projected timetable for completion of the implementation process.

(C) BACKGROUND INFORMATION.—The President shall also submit such further background or other information as Congress may require for its consideration of the plan.

(5) AMENDMENTS TO PLAN.—Any time during the period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after the date on which the plan is transmitted to it, but before any legislation has been ordered reported in either House, the President, or the designee of the President, may make amendments or modifications to the plan, which modifications or revisions shall thereafter be treated as a part of the reorganization plan originally transmitted and shall not affect in any way the time limits otherwise provided for in this section, except the President may not modify the proposed legislation included in the plan. The President, or the designee of the President, may withdraw the plan at any time, without prejudice to the right to resubmit a modified plan.

(b) ADDITIONAL CONTENTS OF REORGANIZATION PLAN.—A reorganization plan—

(1) may change the name of an agency affected by a reorganization and the title of its head, and shall designate the name of an agency resulting from a reorganization and the title of its head;

(2) may provide for the appointment and pay of the head and 1 or more officers of any agency (including an agency resulting from a consolidation or other type of reorganization) if the message transmitting the plan declares that, by reason of a reorganization made by the plan, the provisions are necessary;

(3) shall provide for the transfer or other disposition of the records, property, and personnel affected by a reorganization;

(4) shall provide for the transfer of such unexpended balances of appropriations, and of other funds, available for use in connection with a function or agency affected by a reorganization, as necessary by reason of the reorganization for use in connection with the functions affected by the reorganization, or for the use of the agency which shall have the functions after the reorganization plan is effective; and

(5) shall provide for terminating the affairs of an agency abolished.

A reorganization plan containing provisions authorized by paragraph (2) may provide that the head of an agency be an individual or a commission or board with more than 1 member. In the case of an appointment of the head of such an agency, the term of office may not be fixed at more than 4 years, the pay may not be at a rate in excess of that found to be applicable to comparable officers in the executive branch, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Any reorganization plan containing provisions required by paragraph (4) shall provide for the transfer of unexpended balances only if such balances are used for the purposes for which the appropriation was originally made.

(B) EFFECT.—A statute enacted, and a regulation or other action made, prescribed, issued, granted, or performed in respect of or by an agency or function affected by a reorganization under this section, before the effective date of the reorganization, has, except to the extent rescinded, modified, superseded, or made inapplicable by or under authority of law or by the abolition of a function, the same effect as if the reorganization had not been made. However, if the statute, regulation, or other action has vested the functions in the agency from which it is removed under the reorganization plan, the function, insofar as it is to be exercised after the plan becomes effective, shall be deemed as vested in the agency under which the function is placed in the plan.

(2) Pending legal proceedings.—A suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of an agency or other officer of the United States, in his official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his official duties, does not abate by reason of the taking effect of a reorganization plan under this section. On motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after the reorganization plan takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, the court may allow the suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained by or against the successor of the head or officer under the reorganization effected by the plan or, if there is no successor, against such agency or officer as the President designates.

(d) Rules of Senate and House of Representatives on Reorganization Plans.—Subsections (e) through (h) are enacted by Congress—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they are deemed a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in that House in the case of implementation bills with respect to any reorganization plans transmitted to Congress (in accordance with subsection (a)(3)); and they supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with the full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules (so far as relating to the procedure of that House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

(e) Introduction, Referral, and Report or Discharge.—

(i) germane to the implementation bill; and

(ii) within the scope of the criteria listed in subparagraphs (A) through (D) of subsection (a)(2).

(3) Report on discharge.—If a committee to which an implementation bill is referred has not reported such bill by the end of the 75th calendar day after the date of introduction of such bill—

(A) a motion to have the implementation bill discharged shall be in order and highly privileged, with debate limited to 1 hour equally divided; and

(B) upon being reported or discharged from the committee, such bill shall be placed on the appropriate calendar.

(f) Procedure After Report or Discharge of Committees; Debate; Vote on Final Passage.—

(1) Procedure.—When the committee has reported, or has been deemed to be discharged (under subsection (e)) from further consideration of, an implementation bill, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) for any Member of the respective House to move to proceed to the consideration of the implementation bill. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. The motion shall not be subject to amendment, or to any motion to postpone, or a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order. If a motion to proceed to the consideration of the implementation bill is agreed to, the implementation bill shall remain the unfinished business of the respective House until disposed.

(C) Germaneness requirement.—No amendment shall be in order which is not germane to the bill and within the scope of the criteria listed in subparagraphs (A) through (D) of subsection (a)(2).

(D) Subsequent motions.—A motion to recommit the implementation bill is not in order. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the implementation bill is passed or rejected shall not be in order.

(3) Vote on final passage.—Immediately following the conclusion of the debate on the implementation bill, and a single quorum call at the conclusion of the debate if requested in accordance with the rules of the appropriate House, the vote on final passage of the implementation bill shall occur.

(4) Appeals.—Appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the rules of the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, to the procedure relating to an implementation bill shall be decided without debate.

(g) Conference.—

(1) Appointment of conferees.—In the Senate, a motion to elect or to authorize the appointment of conferees by the presiding officer shall not be debatable.

(2) Conference report.—Not later than 20 calendar days after the appointment of conferees, the conferees shall report to their respective Houses.
